SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. In accordance with the motion just agreed to, the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 21318), and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Greenwich, Conn., post office: For commencement, $50,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On Saturday there was some discussion with reference to the item found in lines 3 and 4 of page 8, being an appropriation for the commencement of the building at Globe, Ariz., and in connection with that some reference was made to the appropriation for Greenwich, Conn., reading:

Greenwich, Conn., post office: For commencement, $50,000.

Which is the item just read by the Clerk.

I do not think the matter was made clear by the explanation that was made by the chairman of the committee, Mr. FITZGERALD, the other day. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can inform us further in regard to the items that are in this bill for the commencement of public buildings where only $1,000 is appropriated, there being 36 such items.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I requested the Supervising Architect to prepare a statement in reference to the matter, which I will read.

The statement referred to follows:

Appropriations for the public-building work are available immediately on the passage of the act. The estimates for appropriations for the public-building work contained in the pending sundry civil bill were based upon the period between March 4, 1915, by which date it was assumed the act would be approved, until June 30, 1916, by which date it was assumed the succeeding act would be approved. The estimates, therefore, cover a 16-month period.

Work on the plans and specifications for buildings in prior public-building acts will occupy the attention of the office of the Supervising Architect until about July 1, 1915. Approximately, on that date work will be started upon the plans and specifications for the extensions and new buildings in the 1913 act. The first new buildings to be taken up will be those authorized in the 1913 act upon sites authorized in prior acts. Buildings are taken up in accordance with the chronological order of the acquisition of the sites; therefore, a building authorized in the 1913 act upon a site authorized in the 1910 act will take precedence over a building authorized in the 1913 act on a site authorized in the same act.

The accompanying schedule gives the list of extensions in the 1913 act and of new buildings in the 1913 act authorized to be erected upon sites authorized in prior acts. It contains 149 projects, and will represent about two years' work from the 1st of the coming July. The program for the balance of the buildings authorized in the 1913 act has not as yet been made up. This is for two reasons: First and foremost, not all the sites authorized for these buildings have been acquired, so that the list could not be completed if it were to be commenced; and, second, the commencement of work on this section of the 1913 act is at least two years off, and there is no immediate necessity of making up the program. Therefore, if any projects are not found in the accompanying list it is because they are in the program which will follow, and which, as stated, has not as yet been made up.

Before the plans of any building may be prepared it is necessary to obtain a careful survey, giving lines, grades, depths of sewers, etc., and in many cases it is necessary to supplement this survey by either digging test pits or arranging for test borings in order to determine the character of the subsoil. These costs are incidental to the construction of the building and are chargeable to their limits. Therefore in order to commence work on the plans of a building it is necessary to have an appropriation which will cover the cost of the survey and test pits. If the preparation of the plans will not commence until toward the end of the period covered by the act, only sufficient money is necessary to pay for the cost of surveys, test pits, etc. If, however, the preparation of the plans commences toward the beginning of the period covered by the act, then there is required not only the money for the survey and test pits but a sufficient sum in addition to meet the costs of construction until the following bill is approved.

The items at the head of the 1913 projects, the plans for which will be started about July 1, 1915, are in the larger amounts, and, as stated, include sums which it is expected will be needed to pay to contractors on account of actual construction work in the period which will elapse until about June 30, 1916. The other amounts, in every case for a thousand dollars, are for projects for which the surveys will be required before June 30, 1916, and upon which work on the preliminary studies may be started, but for which there will be no expenses on account of construction until the 1917 act is approved. The accompanying list, arranged numerically with the amounts in each case, will show that for the projects at the beginning of the list the larger amounts are required, whereas for those at the end of the list only sufficient funds are estimated to start the preliminary work.

Formerly it was the custom to estimate for nothing less than $15,000 to $25,000. This resulted in appropriations largely in excess of current needs, and the practice now is to estimate for $1,000 if nothing may be done on the project except the preliminary work; that is to say, obtaining surveys, test pits, etc. Even at that, $1,000 is more than necessary, because this preliminary expense generally does not exceed $300 or $400.

The practice of asking for appropriations of from $15,000 to $25,000 left the Government in this situation: Heretofore there has been appropriated about $20,000,000 in excess of what it has been possible for the Treasury Department to use, and of this $20,000,000 heretofore appropriated and available only about $8,000,000 can be expended in the period covered by this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent for an extension of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be recognized for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. For this reason the Treasury has initiated the practice of asking for the sum of $1,000 instead of an appropriation of $15,000 or $20,000 or $25,000 for these buildings upon which only the preliminary work is to be done.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the gentleman verifies the statement that I made when the matter was discussed on Saturday. This practice of appropriating $1,000 for the commencement of buildings is an innovation. It never has been done before. The fact is that out of the first appropriation that is made for the construction of a public building the cost of the plans, the specifications, and the survey is paid from the appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not for the plans.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Well, the survey. My understanding, though, is that it does include the cost of the plans. The practice heretofore has been to appropriate not less than from $15,000 to $30,000 in each case for the commencement of buildings authorized where the sites have been acquired, when during the fiscal year there would perhaps be no part of it used except such part as would be expended in the survey and sinking the test pits; and these buildings for which $1,000 is appropriated will be cared for in the next appropriation bill, which will appropriate the money in plenty of time to be used in paying the contractor in the next fiscal year; and I want to say to the gentleman, for the benefit of the House, that in these two cases, both authorized by the same act, the one at Globe, Ariz., to cost $100,000 and the one at Greenwich to cost $90,000, the reason that the appropriation at Greenwich is $50,000 and the appropriation at Globe only $1,000 is because the site at Greenwich was authorized in 1906, whereas the site at Globe, Ariz., was not authorized until 1908.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nineteen hundred and ten.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Nineteen hundred and eight they told me. Therefore the building will be upon the market at Greenwich several months in advance of the building at Globe, and for that reason it is necessary to provide money to pay the contractor on account of the construction.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Greenwich, Conn., is No. 8 in numerical order and Globe, Ariz., is 98, so that there is considerable difference in the time when the plans will be reached.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And yet the buildings were authorized by the same act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. By the same act; but the site was acquired so much earlier that the project got a number when the site was acquired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. This condition that obtains with respect to these two buildings explains as to other similar cases. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The colloquy between the gentleman from South Dakota and the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee, has certainly explained some matters that I was at sea about on Saturday. The difference between authorization and ownership of sites is perfectly clear now. While we have made the break in the reading of the bill I desire to ask the chairman one or two questions. I see on page 63 of the hearings in Mr. Wetmore's testimony something about which I desire to interrogate the gentleman from New York. Mr. Wetmore is the executive officer of the Supervising Architect's Office. In speaking about the $21,000,000 which seems to be on hand, having previously been appropriated, he says, near the bottom of the page:

It looks as though we ought not to have balances on our books so far in excess of our needs. The idea was to clean up those balances, so that we could start another year and estimate specifically on what we will need from time to time.

I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if there is any explanation different from that given by Mr. Wetmore, that we really do not need to have those large balances, and therefore that the appropriations, perhaps, could be cut down at this time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. He was discussing a different matter. The Treasury Department has requested that instead of making specific appropriations for specific buildings a provision be inserted making one fund out of all of the balances of appropriations heretofore made and not expended, and that then the Treasury Department have authority to expend that money upon the buildings enumerated within its discretion. Appropriations have been made far in excess of the amounts that could be expended for a number of reasons. First, more was asked than was really required. Secondly, after the appropriations were made difficulties of numerous kinds arose which made it impossible to proceed with the work. The result is that while very large sums have been appropriated a considerable portion of them has not been expended.

Mr. GOULDEN. Does the gentleman think that is good business policy to pursue on the part of Congress—to appropriate such large sums of money when not actually needed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; but I do not know how anyone, outside of the Treasury Department, can tell how much money will actually be needed to meet the obligations upon contracts in existence or about to be entered into. The policy of Congress has been to assume that the Treasury Department will ask the amount of money actually required, and it has been appropriated in that way. If Congress were to attempt to take each one of these projects and make that minute examination that would be necessary to determine whether $50,000 can actually be expended under a contract or only $20,000, it would engage in a vast amount of work that would not result very profitably. The department estimates to the best of its ability how rapidly buildings will proceed. Nobody can state with any definiteness about it.

Mr. GOULDEN. That is satisfactory. I will ask another question. Assuming that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds brought in a bill for a building during the Sixty-fourth Congress, in how many years would a building authorized in that measure likely be reached in the present condition of the Supervising Architect's Office?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. They expect to commence on the 1st of July with the plans for the buildings authorized in the act of 1913.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Wetmore, in the hearings, gives certain information on this subject. I read the following from the hearings:

Mr. SHERLEY. How far are you behind?

Mr. WETMORE. We are not behind at all in the sense of being behind with our program. We have ahead of us about six years' work, I should say—between five and six years' work—but we are not behind, because we are turning out 70 or 80 buildings annually, which is the normal output of our present force. When we are working along at this rate and Congress authorizes 300 or more buildings at one time, that does not put us behind in the sense that we are not keeping up with our work.

Does it not follow that an authorization made for a public building this or next year would not in all probability be reached by the office inside of five or six years? I have in mind a site in the Borough of the Bronx, city of New York, to which the Government took title July 7, 1914, and which stands No. 6 on the list of sites to be taken up by the Supervising Architect's Office when the Committee on Buildings and Grounds authorize the erection of the building. This will likely occur in the next Congress. I would like to ask the chairman this question: Have they a sufficient force in the Supervising Architect's Office to enable them to do the work and keep up with the same? It seems to me to be poor business to be behind five or six years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman I will state that they have a sufficient force to turn out 70 or 80 buildings a year. To increase the force would be to increase the expenditures of public buildings annually. Congress has determined that the rate of expenditures shall be as it has been, and it averages somewhere between fifteen and twenty million dollars a year.

Mr. GOULDEN. I think that is sufficient; but I also claim that we ought not to appropriate more than can be judiciously and economically expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Humboldt, Tenn., post office: For commencement, $1,000.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 10, page 9, insert:
"Statesboro, Ga.: For commencement, $1,000."

Mr. EDWARDS. I would like to ask the chairman if Statesboro, Ga., has been included in the estimates submitted by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no estimate submitted for Statesboro.

Mr. EDWARDS. I would like to ask the chairman why the estimates for these various buildings that have been authorized have not been made?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Statesboro was not estimated for because it is not a building which in its order will be reached prior to July 1, 1916. Statesboro is No. 121.

Mr. EDWARDS. On the list?

Mr. FITZGERALD. On the list.

Mr. EDWARDS. I would like to ask the gentleman if they take them up alphabetically or in the order of importance, or how?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; they are given a number as soon as the site is acquired.

Mr. EDWARDS. Well, this site has been acquired and the building has been authorized. It is an important point and great necessity exists for its commencement and for its early completion.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. At what time was the site acquired; what is the date?

Mr. EDWARDS. I do not now recall, but it was some four or five years ago.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The site was authorized by the act of March, 1910, and the building was authorized in the act of 1913.

Mr. CARTER. When was the site acquired?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know that.

Mr. CARTER. That is the time the proposition takes its regular order.

Mr. EDWARDS. What I am trying to get at is to find out how the Treasury Department places these various sites and gives them order on the list.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that the place given these towns dates from the time the title to the site vests in the Government. The Supervising Architect does not give any town a place until the title has been acquired and is vested in the Government. Then it is given to it.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. If a building and site are in separate appropriation bills, one bill containing a site, and a succeeding Congress appropriates for the building, then, acquisition of the site will not give such a building a number until the appropriation for the building is made; it does not give that building a preference over an appropriation which authorizes both the site and building? For example, take in 1910 an authorization for a site and building, both; when the lot is purchased it gets a number?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not.

Mr. SISSON. The trouble with the gentleman from Georgia is that he had an appropriation for a site only, and that does not give a preference over a building where both the site and building was authorized in the same bill.

Mr. EDWARDS. But the building has since been authorized.

Mr. SISSON. But it does not take precedence over a building where both the site and building is authorized in 1910 and will precede the number of that of the gentleman from Georgia, because they can not give a building any number until the money is authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Jellico, Tenn., post office: For completion, $30,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the commmittee for this information: As I understand the order in which these specifications and plans are prepared and buildings started is determined solely by the date of the acquisition of the title to the lot by the Government, so that a building authorized in the last act, 1913, is, say, 118 on the list, if an item for $1,000 was given in this bill for commencement, would that give that town any preference or would it still have to wait its regular order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand it would still wait its regular order.

Mr. WINGO. So no practical benefit would be derived from an appropriation at this time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Except under these conditions: There are items, for instance, the department asked for appropriations for three buildings upon the express reason it is proposed that they would make a donation and therefore they would take these buildings up out of their turn.

Mr. WINGO. For what reason did they propose that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because it is proposed to have it donated, and the committee declined to make recommendation for buildings out of their turn because the policy has been established to take them up in their order, and that is the understanding of the Members of the House, and it is only fair; and the commitee believe if the House desired to take out of their turn these buildings for such a reason it was in its power to do so, but the committee preferred not to recommend an appropriation for any building except in its order, unless it is a case such as I referred to the other day——

Mr. WINGO. In other words, an emergency.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where a building had been destroyed by fire or some other catastrophe. There have been times when a project for some community has been advanced out of its turn, but that is a well-understood rule.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand, the projects carried in the bill of March, 1913, will not be reached in the Supervising Architect's Office until July of this year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. And then the Supervising Architect's Office will take them up in the order on the list they are acquired?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. And it is estimated they will continue to provide for about 80 buildings a year, which has been about the customary amount turned out by this office in the past, and that nothing can be done now in the way of making an appropriation, which would disturb the regular order, which would hasten the construction of the building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would not.

Mr. WINGO. It would have no practical effect?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would not. It would unnecessarily appropriate money that could not possibly be used.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CALLAWAY. What is the rule for purchasing sites? Does that come in regular order, like the provision for buildings?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Previous to the enactment of the bill for 1913 the custom had been to invite bids for sites and to send out some employee of the Treasury Department to examine the proposed sites. About two years ago, I think it was, we appropriated money for site agents, so that a special force of men was sent out to investigate, and I think practically all the sites have been reported upon.

Mr. CALLAWAY. But they have not been purchased.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am unable to state whether they have purchased them all or not. They appropriated all the money that the department asked for.

Mr. CALLAWAY. You say when provisions are made for public buildings they then take their place and are appropriated for in order. Suppose some division has been changed and congested mail conditions exist at some place different than what have heretofore existed, and the facilities are wholly incapable of accommodating the mails, would they not then make special provision to appropriate to enlarge the equipment there to meet the actual needs?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the case of a new building?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes; or the improvement of an old building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Extensions are put at the head of the new list. For instance, in the act of 1913 both new buildings and extensions were authorized. They put the extensions at the head of the list.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Did they take their regular order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They took their regular order.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Irrespective of the necessity?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There have been some cases where the department stated that owing to the very extraordinary conditions an extension should be taken up out of its turn, and that has been done.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In order that the record may be clear on this matter, will the gentleman tell us where the appropriation is made, out of which the plans and specifications are paid for, for public buildings? I ask this information because the Supervising Architect told me in a conversation this morning that the plans and specifications were paid for out of the first appropriation made for the building, and I understand if he did so state he is in error, and I wish the gentleman would explain it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A permanent staff is carried in the legislative bill, and then on page 25 of this bill, under general expenses, will be found provision for a force of architectural designers.

For one architectural designer, at $6,000 per annum; for foremen draftsmen, architectural draftsmen, and apprentice draftsmen, at rates of pay from $480 to $2,500 per annum; for structural engineers and draftsmen, at rates of pay from $840 to $2,200 per annum; for mechanical, sanitary, electrical, heating and ventilating, and illuminating engineers and draftsmen, at rates of pay from $1,200 to $2,400 per annum; for computers and estimators, at rates of pay from $1,600 to $2,500 per annum, the expenditures under all the foregoing classes for which a minimum and maximum rate of compensation is stated, not to exceed $168,450—

And so forth.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then no part of the appropriation specifically made for a building is used to pay for plans and specifications?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The act of 1908 prohibits the payment of cost of plans from the appropriation for the building.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the gentleman one or two questions. I was very much interested in what he said in reference to advancing buildings out of order in the case of certain donations. I think in the case we had up Saturday the committee ascertained that there will be no real advantage to the Government from the donation; but in a case where a donation is really substantial, does not the gentleman think it would be a good policy for Congress and the Government to encourage such donations, where a substantial saving would be made to the Government by permitting an advancement out of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would depend on what the gentleman would mean by a "substantial donation."

Mr. LENROOT. I mean, as a good business proposition, where it would actually save money to the Government by doing that thing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There have been instances where some one has donated a site and Congress has expedited the construction of the building upon it.

Mr. LENROOT. I mean where it would be actually substantial.

Mr. FITZGERALD. From my point of view, I do not know that it would be wise to expedite buildings where it is a notorious fact that after a building is constructed a permanent charge is imposed upon the Treasury far in excess of what the Government can secure ample and satisfactory accommodations for in the community without it.

Mr. LENROOT. I refer only to cases where the sites and buildings themselves have been authorized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But those cases to which I refer are cases where it is proposed to donate plans. If plans are presented to the Government for their acceptance, the theory is that the Government has been saved a certain expense in the preparation of the plans; but as a matter of fact, however, it is necessary to examine those plans very critically to determine whether they are plans of a building that will be suitable for the needs of the Government in that community; and the committee were of the opinion that as a practical matter the Supervising Architect's office in effect was doing the same work that it would be doing if the plans were prepared in the office; and if the building in those cases were to be advanced out of order, it would be a matter for the House itself to determine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lawton, Okla., post office and courthouse: For completion, $152,300.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert, after line 5, page 11, the following:
"Willow, Cal., post office: For completion of building under present limit, $75,000."

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, this building was recommended by the Treasury Department. The situation was as follows: At the time the building bill was introduced, under the terms and conditions that the committee imposed for buildings, this town seemed to the committee to justify an expenditure for buildings of $100,000, owing to the fact that, in addition to the post-office receipts, there were in that town the centers of the Forestry Service and the Bureau of Animal Industry. Instead of asking for the full amount I asked for $75,000, and that was inserted in the building bill. Subsequent to that I asked the people of that city to contribute a site. They offered several sites. A Government inspector went up and looked the sites over and determined on an entirely different one. Thereafter these people, at my request, in order to give the Government the best site and to expedite construction, dug down into their pockets and put up $9,000 for the site suggested by the inspector. Subsequently I called on the department to ascertain whether or not it would be in order that plans should be furnished by outside architects subject to revision and ratification by the department. I was informed that this could be done, and that this would expedite building. Then I told the people that provision would have to be made for the plans if they desired to have the building expedited. Arrangements were made for the architects' fees, and then after that a Government inspector was ordered there to examine the site so as to determine foundations, and I suppose it may now be contended that the building is already under way.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENT. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman say that this site was given to the Government?

Mr. KENT. Not only donated, but was the site that the Government inspector selected as the best site in town. The people were requested to pay for a site and give it to the Government, which they did.

Mr. SISSON. When was the site acquired?

Mr. KENT. Last summer; but, owing to technical trouble concerning conveyance of title, acceptance of the deed was delayed until October 28, 1914.

Mr. SISSON. The lot was accepted by the Government and was paid for by the citizens of the town?

Mr. KENT. Yes; the Government selected the lot, and the people paid for it, and the lot is now in the possession of the Government and has been since October 28, 1914.

Mr. SISSON. Have plans and specifications been prepared for the building?

Mr. KENT. They have been arranged for, and as soon as the inspector reports on foundations the department has absolute assurance that the plans will be carried through to completion, subject to the Government's approval and correction. The Government has a written guaranty, which seems to be satisfactory to the Government, that plans will be immediately furnished.

Mr. SISSON. Are the plans offered to the Government by the citizens out there?

Mr. KENT. They are offered to the Government, to be paid for in part by the citizens and in part by myself. They are donated to the Government.

Mr. SISSON. And the people have given the Government the lot?

Mr. KENT. They have.

Mr. SISSON. The citizens and the gentleman from California are willing to pay for the plans and specifications?

Mr. KENT. That is correct.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman does not insist that the Government is saving anything if they expend the whole $75,000 on the building?

Mr. KENT. My contention would be that the people and the Government get a building that has so much more money in it than if they had taken the commission of the architects out of it.

Mr. SISSON. That does not save the Treasury anything.

Mr. KENT. No.

Mr. SISSON. Would the gentleman be willing that the cost of the plans and specifications be deducted from the $75,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. In no case is the cost of the plans taken out of the appropriations for buildings. That is taken out of another fund, so it will be a saving to the Government.

Mr. SISSON. It is immaterial to the Government at which end it saves the money.

Mr. LENROOT. This would be a saving to the Government.

Mr. SISSON. What I am endeavoring to do is to put the gentleman's item in a place where the Government saves the architect's fees.

Mr. LENROOT. It will.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman is willing to take from the $75,000 the expense of the architect's fees, although a member of the committee, I would support his proposition.

Mr. LENROOT. That would be saving it twice, if deducted from this appropriation.

Mr. SISSON. It would not.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; because the cost of the plans and specifications in any case comes out of an appropriation that is made in the legislative bill.

Mr. BURNETT. And in that way the Government saves the expense of getting up plans.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the chairman of the Appropriation Committee to make a statement on Saturday that there were three of these projects not included in this appropriation bill that were recommended to be included by the Secretary of the Treasury. Is this one of them?

Mr. KENT. This is one of the three. It stands on the same footing as the project of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GOODWIN]. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to state here and now that if it is the opinion of the House that this building should be cut in cost to the amount of the architect's fees for the plans, I am willing to submit and will submit an amendment that the total be reduced 5 per cent of $75,000, leaving $71,250 instead of $75,000. The Government is under a liability to build this building at some time, and the people having saved the Government the expense of the lot, it seems to me that this is a good time to adopt it. The building is needed. The Post Office Department is cramped, and the Department of Animal Industry has inadequate quarters, and the Forestry Service has an important adjunct there. The department strongly recommends that this building be put into the bill, and I hope the amendment will be adopted. Mr. Chairman, I move to modify my amendment by reducing the amount of $75,000 5 per cent, or $3,500, leaving $71,250.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the amendment so that it will read: "For completion of the building under the present limit of cost, $71,250.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, of course the modified amendment of the gentleman from California does not change the situation. The limit of such a building is $75,000, and an appropriation of $71,250 would still leave it possible for the other $3,750 to be appropriated at any time it was deemed proper.

I am opposed to the adoption of the amendment at all. Willow, Cal., in 1910 had a population of 1,139 people. The postal receipts in 1913 were $13,113, the money-order receipts $58,597, and the postal saving receipts $1,224. At the present time the Post Office Department and the Forestry Service rent buildings at Willow, Cal., necessary for the needs of the two services, and the Post Office Department pays $609 a year and the Forestry Service pays $600 a year.

Mr. KENT. There is also the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So that the total expenditure to accommodate these two branches of the Government service amounts to $1,209 a year. A very careful estimate by the Treasury Department discloses that the annual cost to the Government of a $50,000 building is 10 per cent of the amount invested in it, and if the same be true of a $75,000 building, allowing for interest on the money invested and other carrying charges, then for the benefit that is derived by the Government from accepting a site for this public building we will expend $75,000 to provide facilities when these two services mentioned cost $1,200 a year, and even if you allow $600 a year more for the Bureau of Animal Industry, the total cost would be only $1,800 a year, and we would assume a burden of $7,000 annually to give to a community of 1,139 people a $75,000 building. Mr. Chairman, I think that whatever necessity or excuse there may be for putting up a $75,000 building in a town of 1,139 people, there can not be that very great urgency that would justify the appropriation at this time, when the condition of the Treasury is such that it would be advisable to discontinue a great many very urgent projects.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to ask the gentleman if the amount expended at this place now for rent includes fuel and light?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I understand it includes everything.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. The amount includes light and janitor service and heat. I now yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is ignorant of the fact that this town is situated in a part of California that is growing most rapidly. It is in the most fertile part of the Sacramento Valley. The parcel-post business has increased greatly. There are a great number of rural routes that center there, and the call for space is increasing all of the time. The gentleman is taking the figures of some time ago in respect to the population, and the place has grown a great deal since that time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, they are the latest figures available. I wish to say to the House that if the policy be adopted of putting $75,000 buildings in every community of 1,000 or 2,000 people in the United States who will donate a site, the Treasury of the United States will be bankrupt so quickly that Members will not know what has happened to it at night. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the argument that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has made to-day is the same argument he and others made who were opposed to the construction of public buildings in small towns when this item was authorized. That was all thrashed out two years ago, and the House by an overwhelming vote passed the bill making this authorization, among others. If his argument is correct, then the Committee on Appropriations for the same cause could thwart the will of Congress by turning down these cases all along the line. I know that my friend the chairman of the committee obeys the law and is not for cutting out the propositions provided for in this bill, but I merely say that his argument against this proposition would apply with equal force to many other items in the bill. Why single out this one?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. If you want your expenses cut, why not do it on battleships? I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the committee has not recommended this item, as I have already stated, because this was a proposition to advance this building out of its order——

Mr. BURNETT. I understand that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At the expense of the buildings of other Members authorized prior to this and which are entitled to consideration before this building.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, in reply to that, the reason why that is done is because of the fact that the Treasury Department always says they are behind with plans and specifications, and that that postpones our buildings for four years. I do not care so much about the population. This town came within the rule of the Public Buildings Committee. We had a scale, and where the postal receipts were from ten to twelve thousand dollars a year the building was to cost $50,000, and where they were from twelve to fifteen thousand dollars a year sixty thousand; and in case there were other Government offices to be housed there, like the Bureau of Animal Industry and the Forestry Service, an allowance was made for that, and hence an appropriation of $75,000 in this case. As I say, the reason these matters have been deferred is because of the fact that they can not reach them with their plans and specifications.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good idea to increase the force in the Supervising Architect's Office and proceed to expedite these matters?

Mr. BURNETT. I do; and everyone knows that we have been trying to standardize, and we now have bills before the committee that will possibly be reported at this session by which we hope to work some expedition in these matters.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman from Georgia asks if the gentleman from Alabama would not be in favor of increasing the force in the Supervising Architect's Office. Is it not a fact that we tried to get that done either last year or the year before and the Committee on Appropriations defeated the proposition?

Mr. BURNETT. That is my recollection. The people of this town of Willow by their own voluntary contributions have met that condition which the department says is the reason why we can not get them more speedily, and are we now to punish a town that is willing to meet that very condition, when they want to have this matter expedited, and this voluntary donation was made in order that we may do that which the architect's office says would be done if they had the force to meet it.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. KENT. The gentleman from Alabama has made it plain, but I want to make it still more plain that this does not in any way impede the right of way of any other Member, because the stoppage is in the plan department of the Supervising Architect's Office.

Mr. BURNETT. That is exactly what I desired to say, but the gentleman has stated it more clearly than I have done.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Do I understand the gentleman from Alabama that they fixed the amount at $50,000 where the population was 5,000?

Mr. BURNETT. Five thousand people; no, sir. I said wherever the receipts of the post office were $10,000 or in excess; the receipts of the office, not the population. Now, that is all I think I desire to say. The people have met the conditions that congested the construction of buildings, and it does not postpone any building that has been authorized by this Congress.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Alabama is quite fair with the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. BURNETT. I do not desire to criticize the committee in the least.

Mr. SISSON (continuing). Because the gentleman from Alabama knows that with the exception of three cases where the Treasury thought that buildings ought to be advanced out of their order the Committee on Appropriations gave every dollar the Treasury Department asked for. In addition to that, the Committee on Appropriations would not undertake to set aside the expressed will of Congress in the legislation which it passes, because it is our duty, where it can be done, to carry out the expressed wish and will of the Congress, and while the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has been opposed to the general policy, I think it is fair to him to state that there has been no more zealous advocate of absolutely, honestly, and fairly carrying out the will of Congress than he has been in making up this bill, and I am not divulging anything that happened in the Committee on Appropriations, but I want to say to those gentlemen when the effort was made not to make the appropriations there was no more valiant champion of appropriating for these buildings than the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BURNETT. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment? If anything I said would indicate that, I desire to correct it right now, because what I meant to say was the same argument that was applied to this would apply to other cases authorized, and not that the gentleman or his committee intended such a thing as that.

Mr. SISSON. I did not want that impression left, because we all know the gentleman from New York, the chairman of this committee, has been generally opposed to the appropriation of money for public buildings in small towns where the rent is $50 or $60 a month, to appropriate $50,000 or $75,000 for a building——

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he is not of the opinion that the Office of the Supervising Architect ought to be supplied with sufficient architects to go ahead and do the business of the country?

Mr. SISSON. I am glad the gentleman from Georgia asked that question, because I have consistently advocated the standardization of these buildings so that one set of plans would not only make a $25,000 or a $50,000, but a $75,000 building. It looks to me like you might standardize that like the standardization of commercial buildings. You might standardize the steel, standardize the glass, standardize the sash and doors and blinds and all of such things, and by doing that and making the plans and blue prints for one would serve for a dozen buildings; but the Supervising Architect's Office is unwilling to do that.

Mr. EDWARDS. I would like to ask the gentleman—I have not read the sundry civil bill through—whether or not the bill carries an appropriation to make any increases in the Supervising Architect's Office, or whether or not there is any provision made in this bill——

Mr. SISSON. That would be carried in the legislative bill.

Mr. EDWARDS (continuing). To expedite the congestion or relieve the congestion of that office?

Mr. SISSON. That is carried in the legislative bill and not in this bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I want to ask the gentleman why a bill passed in 1910 providing for post office and building, carrying an appropriation of $55,000, for Washington, Ga., has not been provided for in this bill? That is nearly five years ago.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman I do not know whether it is provided for or not. I must decline to yield further, but in answer to the gentleman from Georgia I will say that the authorizations for these buildings have been made with the distinct understanding that they will not lap in a preceding appropriation and thereby double the amount of money taken out of the Treasury, and it has been stated on the floor of the House by members of the committee that it will take two or three and sometimes four years to complete a building, and the money would not have to be taken out until that time. I want to state, without fear of successful contradiction, that the delay is not because we do not appropriate sufficient money in the architect's office to carry out the will of Congress, but it is because the Supervising Architect's Office declines to adopt commercial plans and modern ideas in business. I do not think Congress is to blame for it. I think the fault is in the Supervising Architect's Office, and I want to say right here that you can have prepared plans and specifications in the commercial world and have supervision for 5 per cent, which is the universal architects' rule; and yet the testimony in this case shows that if the overhead charge is charged against the building in the Supervising Architect's Office it is a little over 6 per cent, so we are paying more money for the Supervising Architect's Office—6 per cent on the cost of the building—than the commercial architects charge to make the plans and specifications, which is 5 per cent.

Mr. FALCONER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FALCONER. The question discussed by the gentleman has been brought to my notice in connection with a public building in my own city, the appropriation for which was made in 1908. Now, I understood the gentleman to say that the Supervising Architect's Office takes the position against the standardization of public buildings. Is the gentleman correct in that statement?

Mr. SISSON. I believe I am correct, because I have never been able to find one of them who believes you could standardize public buildings. They will tell you that the lots are peculiar in shape; that the foundations are of a peculiar soil, and such other objections. We have been since I have been a Member of Congress endeavoring to get the Supervising Architect's Office to standardize these buildings. Now wait a moment; do not ask me too many questions at once. The gentleman from Florida and the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General are a committee now authorized by law to look into the whole subject, and I do not believe I am divulging anything that ought not to be divulged.

It is the opinion of at least one member of this committee that if the buildings of the United States were put up properly and in a businesslike way we could build for $25,000 or $30,000 or $35,000, at the outside, buildings which are now costing the Government $50,000 apiece. I do not know whether these buildings can be standardized or not, but common sense teaches me that they could be standardized. Here is a lot of a certain size, which must be purchased. The building costs $50,000. In the South, where the climate is all about the same and where the materials and soil are all about the same for the buildings that we authorize, it is a violation of all reason to say that they could not be standardized, and if that were done, there would be no trouble about having the plans for these buildings prepared and having the buildings put up in time.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. LANGLEY. I agree with the general statement made by the gentleman about the necessity for standardization, but, as I understood him, he made the statement that no two buildings in the country are just alike; in other words, that the Supervising Architect is opposed to erecting any two just alike.

Mr. SISSON. That is perhaps hyperbole. I would not undertake to say that there were no two alike.

Mr. LANGLEY. I understood the gentleman to make that statement. That is not fair to the Supervising Architect's Office.

Mr. SISSON. I do say this: That they do not want them just alike.

Mr. LANGLEY. I know, on the contrary, that they are now attempting to standardize them.

Mr. SISSON. To whom did you talk?

Mr. LANGLEY. To the Supervising Architect himself. And I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], who is a member of that commission, will verify what I am saying.

Mr. SISSON. Then, why do they not standardize them as Congress wants them to do, without all the pressure being brought to bear? I have been down to the Supervising Architect's Office, not once but several times, and had several interviews, in which I insisted that they standardize these plans.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, every time we discuss this subject in the House of Representatives we are furnished with a great deal of misinformation with reference to the Supervising Architect's Office. In my capacity as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I have had ample opportunity to discuss this matter and investigate, both with the Supervising Architect and his subordinates, and then as a member of the joint commission created by the last public building bill, to which this subject of standardization was referred, we had any number of meetings in the Treasury Department, and, as a result, reported our findings to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which designated a subcommittee to prepare legislation along the lines of the report of that commission.

It is true that a member of that commission, Postmaster General Burleson, did state in the minority report that many of these buildings could be erected for $25,000. General Burleson wants a cheaper class of buildings for the small post offices of the country. Where we are now expending $50,000, he wants to cut that amount in two and give a cheaper building, with a cheaper class of material, not a fireproof building.

In the last 25 or 30 years I have known perhaps half a dozen of the Supervising Architects of the Treasury Department. I can not name a more honorable, conscientious, or efficient Supervising Architect than the gentleman—Mr. Oscar Wenderoth—who now fills that position. It is a mistake and an error on the part of Members to make the assertion constantly that the Supervising Architect's Office is opposed to the standardization of public buildings. They not only favor it, but in every instance where it has been possible and practicable to do it they standardized the public buildings.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I know that of my own experience, because there is now a public building in the town of Morristown, in my district, nearing completion, and they are beginning work on a public building at Jellico, and the two buildings are a duplication as far as they can be duplicated. As a result of duplication, carried on by the department, the present Supervising Architect has been enabled to increase the number of buildings and increase the number of plans.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. Does the gentleman know of any case where two buildings have been built alike?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have just made the statement that the department is building two in my district which are alike, as far as they can be alike, on separate pieces of land in different towns.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mighty few public buildings come down my way, but the ones I have observed are all different.

Mr. AUSTIN. One at Morristown, Tenn., and the other at Jellico, Tenn., are practically identical.

Mr. LANGLEY. They are as nearly alike as commercial houses could be standardized.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have no brief to defend the Supervising Architect, but I had occasion to investigate this very subject last week, and the Supervising Architect handed me a printed statement, in which he claims that there are some 20 or 25 buildings, the plans for all of which are drawn and all of which have the same identical plans, and he claims to be endeavoring to adopt a uniform plan. I hope he will succeed, because I hold the same views that my friend from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] does.

Mr. AUSTIN. Some time ago they adopted that system and are following it out. Any statement the Supervising Architect made to the gentleman from South Carolina or any other Member of this House can be depended upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask for an extension of three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. The last Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. MacVeagh, in order to reduce expenses and make a showing for economy, recommended a reduction in the working force of the Supervising Architect's Office, and the Committee on Appropriations reduced that force, and as a result the number of plans turned out per annum was reduced from 112 to about 75 or 80. The remedy desired in the hastening of plans and the construction of public buildings lies entirely with the membership of this House. Whenever this House votes to override the Committee on Appropriations and increases the force of the Supervising Architect, then the work of that office will be brought up to date.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, it is also necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury in submitting his estimates to the Committee on Appropriations to ask for a sufficient amount of money for public buildings to care for any increased number of plans the Supervising Architect's Office may turn out. Secretary MacVeagh was opposed to spending exceeding $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 for the construction of new propositions, and the same policy is being followed out by the present Secretary. It is not right or just in the membership of this House to complain about the failure of the Committee on Appropriations to embrace certain new propositions in this bill. The responsibility and blame rests with the Members, and when the majority vote to increase the Supervising Architect's Office force the work will be brought up to date.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the discussion on this amendment has gone far afield, and I would like to bring it back to a consideration of the pending amendment. The argument that the chairman of the committee makes as to why this amendment should not be adopted has no bearing, I submit, on this question at all. It is an argument properly to be directed to the public-building bill, but not otherwise, and if it should apply to this item, it would apply with equal force, as the gentleman from Alabama has said, to a great many other items in this bill.

The situation is that this building has been authorized to the extent of $75,000, and the only question for this committee to consider is whether under the peculiar circumstances of this case this building shall be advanced out of its order. Let me say that if this amendment is adopted it will not sidetrack any other proposition in the pending bill; it will not sidetrack any other in the future; but, on the contrary, if the amendment is not adopted in this bill now, it will be adopted in a bill next year, and some other building will be delayed one year longer. If it is not put in the bill, no other building will take its place. All the buildings, including this one, can be and will be taken care of by the department now, and if it is not taken care of this year it will have to be taken care of next year, and thus delay another building.

Why should this be taken out of order? I submit that, as a matter of policy, when the citizens of a community are willing to go down into their pockets and dig up $9,000 for the purchase of a site, give that site to the Government, and, in addition, when they are willing to go down into their pockets and pay for the plans of the building and give them to the Government, I say it is good policy to encourage that saving to the Government by advancing the building out of order.

Mr. Chairman, there are something like 150 separate appropriations in this measure. The appropriation for each site ranges from $5,000 to $25,000, and in some cases higher.

Now, if any of these communities where sites are appropriated for in this bill are willing to pay for these sites themselves, pay $5,000 for them, and say, "We will pay for that if we can get the building sooner," is it not good business judgment for this Congress and this Government to save that money and give it to them, and especially if, as in this amendment, it will not displace any other building? If you do not put this in the bill now, some Member of this House—none of us know who it may be—next year will find his building omitted in the bill, when, if this amendment is adopted now, another may be included next year.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Public Buildings Committee, I desire to make this statement in reference to this item. It has always been my desire to assist any Member of this House in forwarding any legislation he has when the circumstances met my view as to public policy. But I think the statements that have been made on this particular measure are far from the facts that should come before this House.

Now, the facts are these: The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] asked for an appropriation for $71,000 in this bill because his constituents have donated $9,000 for the site. I contend that that is not a good policy for the House to adopt. Because the gentleman himself, out of the kindness of his heart and his great wealth, possibly, permit him and his constituents to come in and put up $9,000 and then demand that Congress should immediately appropriate $71,000 to follow that up, it puts the other membership of the House and their constituents who happen not to be so wealthy at a great disadvantage, and it gives the wealthy constituency a great advantage over the constituencies who are not able to dig down into their pockets and advance the bill out of the regular order. And in addition there is no money saved by the Government. Even if they have appropriated $9,000, it is no saving, because in the regular order—the same order that every other Member on this floor will have to follow—it will be three or four years before this building is reached, and the interest on $75,000 in three or four years will more than offset the money saved by the gift of the site.

More than that, the amendment is at fault, because when the buildings are authorized we have authorized $75,000 for this site, but in the regular order of appropriation next year possibly the Committee on Appropriations will appropriate $25,000 for the commencement of this building. It will take three or four years to build it; and in two years from that they will appropriate $25,000 or $30,000 more for continuation, and then four or five years, in its regular order, they will appropriate the balance for the building. And yet this amendment takes $71,000 in a lump sum now and appropriates it for the project just begun, when the money, or the most of it, will lie idle for three or four years. As a matter of policy I contend that it is wrong, and as a matter of business it ought to be strung out like every other appropriation—over a series of years that it will take to complete the building. I claim that it is a bad piece of legislation and is no saving to the Government.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Is not the reason for these delays because of the delay in getting the plans and specifications, and is not that the equity of the gentleman's case—that they have met the conditions that bring about the delay by reason of making the plans and specifications themselves?

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to warn my colleague on the committee of the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that if we are going to adopt this policy and permit people to come in here with a few thousand dollars subscribed for sites and to demand of Congress that these appropriations be all put through in a lump sum, we will be confronted with a very serious situation; and I submit to my colleague on the committee that we are adopting a dangerous precedent, and, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has said, it will mean bankruptcy to the Government if we undertake to build all of these buildings at one time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the House approving this amendment if it so desires, but I am anxious that the Committee of the Whole shall understand the situation and shall understand the views of the Committee on Appropriations with regard to it. When these public-building estimates were made, we were informed that there were three items taken out of their order—Arkadelphia and Fordyce, Ark., and Willow, Cal. Gentlemen will notice the activity during the last few moments on the part of a number of gentlemen from Arkansas who also have an amendment to offer. The Committee on Appropriations did not believe it was justified in allowing any public building to be taken out of its regular order.

If the committee wants to take any building, or any two or any three buildings, out of order, that is the business of the committee, but the Committee on Appropriations did not want to take that responsibility. Doing that does unquestionably delay every other building. We particularly did not feel justified in taking a building out of its order simply because some community was able to make a donation to the Government. There are other communities that need public buildings quite as badly as does Willow, Cal., that are not so fortunate in having funds wherewith to buy sites. In the Arkansas cases there are, I think, no sites donated. The other argument, and the only argument that applies to all the cases, is that plans were drawn without expense to the Treasury. That is more or less of a fiction when it comes to a question of saving. My opinion is that the Treasury does not save much in the long run by the preparation of plans for the department, because my opinion is that by the time the Treasury has gone over the plans and corrected them and modified them, as will be necessary, the expense will be about as great as it would be had the plans been prepared in the first instance by the department. That is the situation. If this committee wants to take these particular items out of order where there are people able to contribute to the Federal Government, well and good. I understand there is a law prohibiting that being done, and if you want to ignore that law because some community is fortunate enough to be able to do these things, and thereby advance that community beyond all other communities, of course it is within the right of the committee to do it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is a law prohibiting this?

Mr. MONDELL. There is a law prohibiting the contribution of services to the Federal Government.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman think that that applies to the giving of a site to the Government for a public building?

Mr. MONDELL. It certainly applies to the giving of services, and the drawing of plans is the giving of services. You can make a new law here, of course. There is no question about that; but I do not believe communities should have their public buildings deferred because some one community sees fit to prepare plans.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] said that if we voted this down, then we would see our own buildings deferred some time in the future. It is not a question of deferring. This is a question of taking a building up out of its order and advancing it, and putting it ahead of a hundred other buildings that in the ordinary course of events would have construction begun upon them before the construction of this building. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] has called attention to the fact that in any event it is not good business to appropriate $75,000 for this building at this time, for the money could not all be used during the fiscal year in any event.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The department has estimated for this building, has it not?

Mr. MONDELL. The department assumed to take this building out of its order, for certain reasons. If you want to encourage the department in creating excuses for taking buildings out of their order, then agree to this proposition. If you want the Committee on Appropriations to formulate excuses for taking buildings out of their order and bringing buildings in here out of their order, very good; but the committee believes that it is its duty to provide for these buildings in an orderly manner.

Mr. LENROOT. If this building is not included in this bill and is not included in the next bill, some other building will have to be delayed that much longer, because they have already made provision for taking care of this one this year.

Mr. MONDELL. They have made no provision at all, except that they have agreed to advance it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I did not care to say anything about this matter, but it has taken such a wide range that I think I ought to explain to the House the situation as we now have it in our committee. Members will recall that a commission was created in the last public-buildings bill, in March, 1913, to investigate this whole subject of public buildings, with the object in view of trying to see if we could not devise some plan by which we could expedite the construction of public buildings and by which we could economize in that construction. I am absolutely sure, and I think our committee is convinced, that we have been expending from fifty to sixty thousand dollars for public buildings which could be constructed for thirty or thirty-five thousand dollars just as easily, which would answer every purpose.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; for a question.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman mean to say that you could build for twenty-five or thirty-five thousand dollars the same kind of building that is now being constructed for $60,000?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not mean to say it would have all of the ornamental fixtures, and all that sort of thing, but that it would answer every practicable purpose and be just as good for the purposes of the Government; and, further, it would not overshadow all of the other buildings in the town. I think it is positively criminal to construct in the average small town a monumental building when there is nothing else in the whole country that approaches it, nothing that is anywhere near its class. It overshadows all of the others and makes everything else look shabby. I think the Government ought to build good buildings, fireproof buildings, that will answer the purpose, and when that is done I think everything is done that ought to be done.

Mr. NORTON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from North Dakota?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I can not yield now. I want to make this statement.

Now, I want to state that the commission made its report; that it was a good report; and that our committee is now working upon legislation which we expect to submit to this House as soon as we can complete it which we believe will accomplish these purposes. I want to say we have had some of the best architects in this country before us, and there is in this city to-day one of the best architects in America, with whom I am to have a conference this afternoon for the purpose of hearing suggestions which he will make. I believe we will reach a point where we can have the work, which has already been provided for and which they say will take five or six years to complete, completed inside of two or three years at the outside. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to go into the question of the Architect's Office. It is true that there is some effort being made now at standardization, but it has not been that way all the time. The trouble heretofore has been that they have been drawing plans for every building. Now, of late they have begun to attempt standardization, but they have not accomplished very much, and it is the consensus of opinion of the best architects of this country that they can at least standardize the types of buildings. A building may not be exactly alike in every item, but it can be practically alike; and this will save oceans of time in the construction of public buildings, and will also save vast sums of money. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that we will have this legislation, I think, ready to introduce in a very few days, and we are going to ask this Congress to give the necessary time to consider it, because it means millions of money saved. We are going to ask them to pass legislation to reconstruct the Supervising Architect's Office to the end that these things may be accomplished.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. POWERS. To address myself to the subject under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the committee all debate has been closed on this amendment and all amendments thereto. For the information of the House the Chair will direct the amendment to be voted upon to be read by the Clerk.

The amendment was again reported.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the Chair was in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 44.

Mr. KENT. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. KENT) reported there were—ayes 27, noes 47.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lawton, Okla., post office and courthouse: For completion, $152,300.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11, at the end of line 5, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"Arkadelphia, Ark., post office, for completion, $52,600."

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, in 1910 the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to acquire a site at Arkadelphia, Ark., for the construction of a Federal building. Shortly after that a very enterprising and public-spirited citizen there, Capt. Huie, donated a site to the Federal Government for this building, remote from other buildings, standing out by itself. The $5,000 authorization, therefore, was reconverted into the Treasury. In 1913 the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds authorized an appropriation of $55,000 for the building. In July of last year the public-spirited citizens of that community got together, in order to facilitate the construction of a building, and donated the plans and specifications, at a cost of about $2,500. The amount asked for here is not the amount of the authorization, but the authorization less the donation, making $52,600, or a saving of about 15½ per cent, including site donation as well as plans and specifications. Now, I submit in consideration of that fact, the Government owning the building, saving rent therefor, we would be justified in making this appropriation, because in the ordinary course of events this building would be ready in one year from now, should these other items in this bill become the law. Arkadelphia had postal receipts last year, all told, of $68,000. It is a town of about 2,800 people under the general census of 1910. It has grown much since that time, and has several manufacturing enterprises bordering the town, and therefore really might be said to be a city of from 4,000 to 4,500 people, including those who live just beyond the corporate limits. It is a town where two of the largest colleges in my State are located—the Methodist College and the Baptist College, which are the State colleges of those denominations—and the present post office is a small structure, 20 by 90 feet, hemmed in about the middle of the block, with very little light, and I am informed that only about a dozen or two people can get into the office at a time on rainy days, and they have no city delivery service. It is a thrifty, up-to-date community of educated people, and we think that inasmuch as $7,500 has been donated by the public-spirited citizens of that community in the way of building site and plans and specifications, that deducted from the authorizations heretofore made, that that within itself should be a consideration to guarantee and warrant the adoption of this proposed amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Did I understand the gentleman to say a few minutes ago that the gross postal receipts were $68,000?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Yes; I said the receipts, all told. The postal receipts proper were $13,286, and the money-order receipts and the postal savings receipts all totaled $68,000, as reflected by the report. I will say this, furthermore, Mr. Chairman, this item was recommended by the Treasury Department to the committee to be incorporated in this bill out of consideration for the fact that these donations have been made. In other words, they are anxious that this item be advanced in order that the building might be constructed, the site and the plans having been donated by the people. I do not care to speak at further length. I think the merits in the case are sufficient to justify a favorable vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, all I desire to say about this item is that this is one of three buildings which the Treasury Department recommended being taken up out of their order—Arkadelphia, Ark., Fordyce, Ark., and Willow, Cal. In the case of Willow, Cal., which the committee has just refused to advance, the site was donated and it was proposed to donate the plans. In this case it is proposed to donate the plans alone. The committee was opposed to advancing this building out of its order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas) there were—ayes 21, noes 23.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mandan, N. Dak., post office: For completion, $11,000.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, after line 19, insert:
"Dickinson, N. Dak., post office: For commencement and construction, $25,000."

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, although this amendment has not been recommended to the committee by the Treasury Department, as the items from Arkadelphia and Willow and Fordyce have been, I trust that the committee will treat it more kindly and adopt it on its merits.

Dickinson, N. Dak., is a town considerably larger than either of the towns referred to in the former amendments. It is a very live, progressive, rapidly growing city with a population of nearly 6,000 people. Away back in the dim, distant past, in 1910, in more prosperous times apparently than the present, this Congress provided for the purchase of a site for this Federal building. The site has been purchased and the title has long since been transferred to the Federal Government. The present building used for the post office in Dickinson is a very small and inadequate one. I have taken up at different times with the Treasury Department the question of having the construction of this building begun at some early date.

Mr. SLOAN. I notice the gentleman tells what happened in the dim, distant past. Does he not think he had better wait until the dim, distant future, if he is going to refer to dim distances?

Mr. NORTON. From my inquiries at the Treasury Department I fear that unless there is some action taken by this body to improve existing conditions it will be the dim, distant future before this building will be constructed. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question to make this subject a little more clear. As I am informed by the Supervising Architect's Office, according to present plans, the public buildings provided for in the act of March 4, 1913, will not all be completed until 1920.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know that.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] stated a few moments ago that the trouble was mainly with the Supervising Architect's Office; that if the plans were prepared there the Committee on Appropriations would be ready to report the necessary appropriations. Now, from repeated statements made to me by the Supervising Architect and other officials in the Treasury Department I do not understand that to be the true situation. I have been told at the Supervising Architect's Office that while they are now prepared to build from 75 to 85 buildings a year, if this Congress would say that it wanted the 327 buildings that were provided for in the act of March 4, 1913, constructed within the next 12 or 18 months they would be so constructed; that the reason for the slowness in construction is because Congress does not wish to make greater appropriations than it is now making for Federal buildings. The present buildings that were provided for in the act of March 4, 1913, would take for their construction within the next two years an appropriation of more than $40,000,000. Mr. Wenderoth, the Supervising Architect, and others in the Treasury Department, gave me to understand on several occasions that if Congress would say the word the Supervising Architect's Office would have the plans prepared to construct all these buildings within 18 months. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, if that is a correct statement of the condition or is the cause of the delay with the Supervising Architect's Office?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if Congress provided a force that was sufficient and appropriated a sufficient amount of money, the Supervising Architect's Office could not only construct all of the buildings authorized, but a good many more than could be authorized within a certain definite time. The Supervising Architect's Office is organized to turn out between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000 worth of work a year. That is all it is believed it is wise to attempt to expend out of the Treasury in connection with the construction of public buildings.

Mr. NORTON. Now, I should like to ask the gentleman another question. Has the Treasury Department, to the best of the gentleman's knowledge, advanced the construction of any of the Federal buildings from the numerical rank that they have on the scheduled construction list?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has; yes.

Mr. NORTON. Without the authority of Congress?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It could not be done without the authority of Congress, in that Congress would have to appropriate specifically for the project. For instance, there have been cases where sites have been donated, or where a building has been destroyed by fire, and appropriations have been requested for that building sooner than they would have been requested if the building were taken in its numerical order in accordance with the rules established by the Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NORTON. I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. What I want to have made clear is this: The buildings provided for in the act of March 4, 1913, have numbers ranging from 1 to over 300. Has the Treasury Department the right to start the construction of building No. 200 before the construction of building No. 10 has begun?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Treasury Department can take them up in any order that it pleases, but it has established this other rule which it follows. It does that as a matter of self-preservation. It could not, however, take up a building out of its order if no appropriation were made for that building.

Mr. NORTON. One further question. I understand that, but where the appropriations are provided and made available for different buildings——

Mr. FITZGERALD. But they are not. They are made available for specific buildings.

Mr. NORTON. They are made available, of course, for specific buildings. They may be made available for buildings numbered 1 to 100.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But they are not made in that way.

Mr. NORTON. Certainly they are, by name and location of building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman says the Treasury Department would have the right, but what I want to know and have placed in the record is this: Has it been the practice of the Treasury Department to take up buildings out of their order on the construction list?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it has not.

Mr. AUSTIN. Except in an emergency case—unless there is absolute necessity for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has again expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that I may have leave to insert in the RECORD a statement which I referred to earlier in the debate in the discussion with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to strike out the last word, and I will ask to put in the RECORD a letter under date of July 1, 1914, which is a circular letter issued by the Supervising Architect.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the letter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

STATUS OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS CONSTRUCTION.

[Circular letter No. 16.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, D. C., July 1, 1914.

Many requests are received for the immediate preparation of plans, etc., for particular Federal buildings which have been authorized by existing legislation, irrespective of the date of such authorization. The following statement of the present status of public-building work is issued for the information of all concerned:

Beginning with 1902, it has been the policy of Congress to authorize public buildings by what are known as omnibus acts, each act including a great many separate projects. In addition, special acts are passed from time to time providing for individual projects, increases in the limits of cost of projects previously authorized, etc. The omnibus act of 1902 was followed by similar acts in 1903, 1906, 1908, 1910, and 1913.

It is the present policy to place under contract for construction all buildings or extension to buildings authorized in any one omnibus act before beginning plans for projects authorized by a subsequent act. It is also the present practice to prepare the plans for all buildings or projects authorized in any given act in the order of the dates upon which the titles to the sites therefor were vested in the United States.

To determine the precise order in which the plans for the various buildings shall receive attention the following procedure is followed: The buildings authorized in any one act are first divided into groups according to the priority of the acts in which their sites were authorized. All buildings in each such act-group are further arranged in the order of the dates of the acquisition of their sites, the earliest date first. For instance, the 1913 act authorizes buildings upon sites which had been authorized in the act of 1908, in the act of 1910, and in the act of 1913. It is intended that the buildings so authorized in 1913 to be erected upon sites authorized in 1908 shall first be placed under contract. These will be followed by buildings authorized in 1913 to be constructed upon sites authorized in 1910. Then the buildings authorized in 1913 to be built upon sites also authorized in 1913 will take their respective turns for attention.

Extensions are usually authorized to be erected upon land already owned by the United States. While extension projects are included with the buildings authorized in a particular act, discretion is exercised in determining the order in which extensions shall be placed under contract for construction, depending upon the urgency of the need for the improvement.

The output of plans by the Supervising Architect's Office is governed by the extent of the technical force (designers, draftsmen, computers, superintendents, etc.) which the appropriations given by Congress permit the department to employ.

At this date the Office of the Supervising Architect has on its books, waiting to be placed under contract, approximately $38,500,000 worth of authorizations for new buildings and extensions, exclusive of the value of the land. This includes the new buildings and extensions in the act of 1913. This office is placing buildings and extensions under contract at the rate of about $7,000,000 annually, so that at the present rate of progress the last of the buildings authorized in the act of 1913 will not have been placed under contract until about the beginning of the calendar year 1920. It will not be until after the latter date that it will be possible for the Supervising Architect to place under contract any buildings contained in any act or acts which may be passed in the meantime.

The current program, made up of the remaining projects which were authorized prior to the 1913 act, includes about one year's work from this date. Work upon the plans for buildings authorized in the act of 1913 will therefore not commence until about July 1, 1915. The 1913 act contains the following authorizations:

New buildings	304
Extensions to existing buildings	23
Total projects	327

The program of work contained in the act of 1913 has not been laid out as yet. Therefore it is impossible to state even approximately the time when any building authorized in that act will be either advertised for bids or placed under contract.

If a subsequent act increases the limit of cost or otherwise modifies prior legislation for a building or extension before that project is reached in turn, the position of the project in the program of work is not affected thereby. If a project is set aside when its turn is reached in order to await action upon a proposed increase in the limit of cost, or for any other reason, it is taken up whenever "released" in as near its original position as the condition of the work generally may render possible.

No consideration can be given to suggestions that any one project is entitled to any more consideration than another, and requests that buildings be advanced out of their order must be uniformly declined.

For the information of those not familiar with legislative terminology it may be stated that an "authorization" is, as it implies, merely authority to acquire a site, erect a building, etc., within the limit of cost stated, and is not an actual "appropriation" of money out of the Treasury. Appropriations are made by Congress on the basis of estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury. These appropriations are carried in one or the other of the annual supply acts and are intended to be only sufficient to carry forward the building program for the fiscal year to which the acts apply. "Appropriations" are made on account of the limits of cost fixed by the "authorization" and are not extensions of these limits. All appropriations for sites, buildings, extensions, etc., are available until expended, unless repealed by act of Congress, and are not automatically returned to the Treasury if not expended before the expiration of the fiscal year.

The public-buildings act of 1913 authorized the Treasury Department to acquire sites, erect buildings, construct extensions, etc., aggregating a total cost of nearly $42,000,000 but did not actually appropriate one cent toward the consummation of any of these projects.

O. WENDEROTH,
Supervising Architect.

Approved.

BYRON R. NEWTON.
Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That letter states exactly what the policy of the department is and the rule which it is following.

Mr. NORTON. The people of Dickinson are willing to pay for the plans for this building. They are willing to do almost anything to have the building constructed at once, because there is great and urgent need for the building. They want to know if there is anything that can be honorably done to have the time of the construction of this building advanced. If there is, they stand ready and willing to do it. I have not been able to learn of anything that can be done at the Treasury Department to secure the early construction of this much-needed building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This building is No. 139 in the numerical list, and will probably be reached in the fiscal year 1917. The site was authorized in 1910, and the building was authorized in the public building act of 1913.

Mr. NORTON. It is 139 on the numerical list of the March 4, 1913, public-building act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. 139; and I shall ask unanimous consent also to place in the RECORD an alphabetical list of the order of numbers of buildings up to 149.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit, I might say to the gentleman from North Dakota that there is a gentleman in the Treasury Department who is very high up, stands very near the throne, who has a good name, and probably he could help the gentleman in getting the building at Dickinson facilitated.

Mr. NORTON. I am sure the gentleman referred to would cheerfully do so if he could.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I call attention of the committee to the fact that an amendment is pending to appropriate for this building and advance out of its turn a building that could not be reached in the regular order during the fiscal year 1916. I hope the committee will not agree to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a list prepared showing the numerical order of buildings up to 149. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The list is as follows:

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The proposed amendment is for the commencement of a new building that has not been commenced or reached in its turn by the architect's office. Of course the gentleman from North Dakota is entirely within his right in urging to the best of his ability the construction of a building in his district and in urging the needs that his town has for the construction of the building. The only ray of hope in the situation for him is that his item will come about 1917, and it will be incumbent on his constituents to recognize that fact and that he will have to have another term in order to get that building. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And he is making a record.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; he is making a record, and that is a delightful thing to do. If we take a sensible view of this situation, if we could get rid of all local influences, which we can not do, we should strike out all the items for the commencement of any building this year. There is no reason on earth why nine-tenths of the buildings should be commenced. In the first place, we have ample work on hand to keep the Supervising Architect of the Treasury busy. I will venture to say that in nine cases out of ten these new buildings will take the place of rented post offices where the rent will not pay the janitor's service in cleaning the new building after it is constructed. In short, we will be substituting a continuing liability on the Government for the construction, care, and maintenance of the buildings, which in a great many instances is greater than the total amount of the rent paid out. This is in addition to the investment of the money and the loss of interest thereon. This is a constantly increasing burden that you are throwing upon the Government, and then you run out and tell the people that you are going to economize. Where are you going to economize when you continue to put fixed charges on the Government? Every time anything comes up that looks like it had any faint ray of popularity everybody jumps up and votes for appropriations, and in most cases the creation of new bureaus and executive branches and so on are continuing expenses, getting larger and larger every year, and then you have to go out and say there is no money to pay these liabilities.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman says that in many cases the rent now being paid by the Government for post offices would not pay interest on the investment.

Mr. BORLAND. I did not say "interest on the investment." I said "the caretaking of the building." We know it would not pay the interest on the investment. I venture to say that in this case the rent the Government pays is less than the interest on the investment.

Mr. NORTON. Does not the gentleman think that in the Kansas City case the caretaking and the interest on the investment will be greater than is now paid for rent?

Mr. BORLAND. That is not true, and I can demonstrate it. The Government is paying $12,000 or $15,000 rent for Government offices outside of the present building. I want to say the biggest item for commencement of buildings is this Kansas City extension building.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman believes in economizing away from home rather than at home.

Mr. BORLAND. No; I do not. As I say, the biggest item in this bill is for the Kansas City extension. I know it is needed in the near future, but I am not making a special plea for it now.

Mr. NORTON. And the gentleman must concede that I know the item I ask for is very badly needed.

Mr. BORLAND. How much rent is paid by the Government in Dickinson?

Mr. NORTON. I can not say exactly.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is advocating a proposition and does not know how much the Government is paying for accommodations in that town.

Mr. NORTON. I know that if it is paying very much for the present post-office accommodations there it is paying too much, as the rooms now being used for the post office are wholly unsuitable for that purpose.

Mr. BORLAND. How does that compare with the cost of the investment? The gentleman is asking the Government to make an investment and he is not prepared to tell the House how much rent the Government is now paying.

Mr. NORTON. I am not prepared to tell the gentleman accurately how much is being paid for rent, light, and heat for the post office, but I know other departments of the Government are represented there. A local land office is located there and the Department of Agriculture has representatives in that particular territory.

Mr. BORLAND. How much are the postal receipts in the town of Dickinson?

Mr. NORTON. The postal receipts for the last four quarters were $16,135.96.

Mr. BORLAND. And how much is the appropriation the gentleman is asking for?

Mr. NORTON. Twenty-five thousand dollars now; a total appropriation of $90,000 has been authorized.

Mr. BORLAND. Five thousand dollars interest on an investment where you have postal receipts of only $16,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri was looking at this side when he said, "You talk about economizing." We have during this administration about given up any hope of economizing on this side.

Mr. BORLAND. I knew you were not aiding, but I did not know that you had given it up.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he thinks it is necessary to appropriate $2,000,000 to urge the construction of a railroad toward the North Pole?

Mr. BORLAND. That is getting pretty far away from the discussion.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman was talking about items that might be eliminated.

Mr. BORLAND. I think it would be wise to eliminate the commencement of all public-building construction this year. I want to say to gentlemen also that you have got to face this same demand next winter that you are facing now, and you are that much closer to the election than you are now. If you would happen to get your post office for Dickinson, you would have another demand in your district next winter that you would have to meet, because you will have an election coming on very soon.

Mr. NORTON. Is that the way the gentleman figures on his appropriation for Kansas City?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I do not figure on that at all, as I have said to the gentleman several times.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Millville, N. J., post office: For continuation, $25,000.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 19, page 12, insert the following as a new paragraph:
"Statesboro, Ga.: For completion, $50,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that. Have we not already voted on that proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression that the committee has already voted on the proposition.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard briefly on the point or order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered before was to commence the building, and this is for the completion of the building.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that it is subject to the point of order, as the committee has already passed on the question. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Rockville, Conn., post office: For commencement, $1,000.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question, with reference to the item contained in lines 23 and 24, "Rockville, Conn., for commencement, $1,000." Why the variance in the amounts allowed for the commencement of different buildings?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is a building for which the department, toward the close of the fiscal year 1916, will be prepared to commence to take up the preparation of plans. In order to prepare the plans it is necessary to make a survey of the site, to make certain examinations, to determine the character of the subsoil. This $1,000 is appropriated for that purpose. It is not expected that it will be possible to put this building under contract before the time the next appropriation bill becomes a law, and that bill, it is expected, will carry the additional money to carry on the work. If this appropriation were not included for this and the other 35 buildings for which $1,000 is recommended, the Supervising Architect's Office would come to a standstill in 1917. This building is No. 89 on the list, and will be reached toward the end of the fiscal year 1916.

Mr. LONERGAN. I notice that larger sums are appropriated for commencing the construction of other buildings. Will the gentleman please explain why.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where a larger sum is carried it is because it is expected that construction will be begun on the contract, and payments must be made to meet the terms of the contract.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

St. Louis, Mo., subtreasury: For commencement, $50,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This paragraph is for the commencement of a subtreasury building at St. Louis. When that building was authorized the subtreasury system was in full operation, and had not yet been in any way affected either in fact or prospectively or by the law creating the Federal reserve banking system. It is true that the subtreasuries have not yet been abolished, but I take it that it is expected within a reasonable time that the Federal reserve banks and their branches will perform the work now performed by the subtreasuries. I think that that is in contemplation. It looks as though if we have to make economies, we might properly wait at least for a year before we commence the construction of a new subtreasury building in any city. The chances are that if this subtreasury building be commenced, it will not be finished for several years, and before the building is completed the subtreasury will have been abolished.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What is the authorization?

Mr. MANN. The item is $50,000 for commencement of the subtreasury building. What the total of the limitation is I do not know.

Mr. FOSTER. One million three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The site authorized in 1910 was to cost $300,000 and the building is to cost $1,000,000.

Mr. MANN. The building is to cost $1,000,000. Mr. Chairman, it will not hurt anyone if we wait a year to ascertain whether the Federal reserve banks are to do the work that is now being done by the subtreasuries.

When we passed that bill through the House I think it was the belief on the part of the House that the new banking system would be able to do and would do eventually the work now done by the subtreasuries. They have in contemplation in the Federal reserve bank system some kind of a clearing house for the various banks. The subtreasuries in a way act as clearing houses, as far as Federal expenditures and receipts are concerned. I have no doubt that sooner or later, and not very long distant in the future, the payments by the Government, instead of being made by drafts or checks or otherwise upon the subtreasuries, will be made through the Federal reserve banks. We now have two fiscal systems in the Government. It takes some time to amalgamate those, but I believe that the Federal Reserve Board will make recommendations which will carry into effect the amalgamation. Certainly we do not need to commence a million-dollar building at this time, when the Lord only knows where the money is coming from.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations, both last year and this year, endeavored to obtain an expression of opinion from the Treasury Department as to whether it would be necessary to continue the Independent Treasury system by reason of the establishment of the Federal reserve banking system. The department was unable to give any definite information. It would seem as if most of the functions of the Independent Treasury system will be absorbed by the Federal reserve banks. There was some doubt created as to the necessity of maintaining forces at the various subtreasuries now existing in some of the cities in the United States because of the existence of the Federal reserve system. Whether it is advisable to start this building at this time is a matter for the committee to determine. It was authorized at a time when the Federal reserve system was not in contemplation, with the expectation that the Independent Treasury system would have necessity for the accommodations provided in the bill authorized for this purpose. There can be no very great pressing necessity for the building for the purpose intended at this time, and I am perfectly willing to let the matter rest with the sound discretion of the committee as to what it is advisable to do.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask unanimous consent that this item be passed over in the absence of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] who appeared before our committee and seemed to be very anxious about it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know what Member might be particularly interested in it, but in the consideration of this bill, Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to defer action on items to be inserted or eliminated to suit the convenience of Members.

Mr. AUSTIN. It is quite a common occurrence for the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and other chairmen of committees to pass over items and to return to them before the bill is finally passed. I think it is a matter of courtesy which might well be extended to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can make the request. I shall not object myself.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this item be passed over informally until the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] can be present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Until when?

Mr. AUSTIN. Until to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call attention of the committee to the unanimous-consent agreement that after the bill has been read down to page 22 the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] was authorized to offer an amendment dealing with all of these provisions in the bill. Now, the Chair simply desires to call attention to the proposition whether or not the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] will have effect if this unanimous-consent agreement is entered into. That is a matter for the committee to determine.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I am glad to see the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has just come into the Chamber again, and I am sure if he had been here and his attention had been called to this item of $50,000 for the commencement of a subtreasury in Missouri, in line with his policy of economy—outside of Kansas City—he would here on this floor voice his sentiments to have this item stricken from the bill. As the gentleman from Illinois has stated, there is no reason at this time why the commencement of a subtreasury building should be begun now anywhere in this country, involving a final expenditure of a million dollars. This item could well be stricken out of the bill and meritorious items pertaining to buildngs in smaller towns in different sectons of the country might be well substituted in its stead.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] asks unanimous consent that the item on page 17, line 14, subtreasury for St. Louis, Mo., be passed over until to-morrow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. With the understanding, Mr. Chairman, that it does not affect the right of the gentleman from Massachusetts to offer an amendment striking out all included under the head of public buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the proviso. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington, D. C., building, Interior Department offices: For continuation, $1,500,000.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York, how much that building for the Interior Department is to cost? This item reads "for continuation," $1,500,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Two million five hundred thousand dollars, as I recall it.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding—and I ask the gentleman from New York whether I am correct—that it is proposed to erect this building on F Street, two or three squares west of the State, War, and Navy Building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; west of the State, War, and Navy Building.

Mr. COOPER. On F Street, two or three squares west?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, that is a most extraordinary location for a building for the Interior Department. It is an out-of-the-way place, not at all in harmony with the plan for the improvement of the city of Washington and utterly inappropriate as a site for the home of the Department of the Interior. I can not conceive why that site was selected for this particular building. It was bought originally as a site for a hall of records. The Government needed and still badly needs a hall of records, for it has many priceless documents and records which if destroyed could not be replaced. Their preservation is of the utmost importance and requires a building—a hall of records—which shall be absolutely fireproof, if such a building can be constructed. As Members of the Senate and House would seldom be called upon to visit it, it might occupy the site in question, although, in my judgment, it would be much better to locate it strictly in accordance with the plan for the improvement of Washington.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I will.

Mr. BRYAN. Is it not a fact that the Interior Department is the department that requires more visitation by Members than perhaps any other department of the Government?

Mr. COOPER. Yes. I was just about to remark that. Here is the department to which Members are constantly required to go, and yet it is proposed to place this new building at about as inaccessible, inconvenient a point as could well be found The location will be good for the street-car companies, but very inconvenient for the Members of the Senate and the House. Now, years ago the Government condemned and purchased, and has ever since owned, the square on which Poli's Theater is located, and all the squares between that square and the Mall. These squares are unsurpassed as building sites. The Government bought them for the purpose, as the law expressly provided, of erecting on them three buildings—one for the Department of Justice, one for the Department of the Interior, and one for the Department of State. For years all of these buildings have been greatly needed, and to-day all are greatly needed. The Government is expending $600,000 a year, perhaps a little more, for rentals for public buildings in the city of Washington. Six hundred thousand dollars a year is 3 per cent on $20,000,000. The Government can borrow money at 3 per cent and less. Plans were completed for the construction of these three department buildings on those squares, at a total cost of only $8,000,000; but none of these buildings has been erected, and to my amazement, and I think it must be to the amazement of a large majority of the membership of the House, we find it now proposed that one of them shall be constructed on a site two or three blocks west of the building of the State, War, and Navy Departments—a site remote, inconvenient, awkward to reach, and which was originally bought as a site for a hall of records.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Can the gentleman inform us who makes these selections? I entirely agree with what the gentleman has said.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman from New York will wait——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. In just a moment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But at this point.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman will pardon me, I prefer to have him come in a little later.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not want the gentleman to labor under a misapprehension.

Mr. COOPER. I want to call attention to some evidence which, together with much other of similar sort, helped to convince me that there is a well-established industry in this city having for its prime object the renting of privately constructed buildings to the Government of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER. I ask for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER. When the sundry bill was up last year the distinguished leader of the minority [Mr. MANN] made a very suggestive disclosure. I pause to say that we all ought to thank him for the way in which he keeps watch over public expenditures. I never have seen any other man in any legislative body who does the work or has done the work which he has in this regard. [Applause.] His services are invaluable in these matters.

In the second session of the Sixty-third Congress the gentleman from Illinois referred to the location of the new privately owned building then recently occupied by the Department of Commerce, on Pennsylvania Avenue at Nineteenth Street. His remarks are found on page 11274 of the RECORD for that session. Before reading what he said I desire to direct attention to a few relevant facts. You will remember that Nineteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue is only two or three blocks from where it is now proposed to locate this new building for the Interior Department, to be occupied by hundreds of Government employees. Plainly there is being developed a new locality for Government buildings and for dwellings and boarding houses to house employees and for other structures necessary for their accommodation. If not, then I ask anybody why are those great departments sent to those remote, inaccessible places, putting Members of the Senate and the House to great and unnecessary inconvenience? Every person knows that the time of Members of each House of Congress is well taken up now by their legitimate duties on Capitol Hill, and that it is a time-consuming task to go from office to office in the widely scattered departments. For example, observe the location of the House Office Building, of the Agricultural Department, of the Pension Office, of the Department of Commerce, of the Department of Justice, of the Patent Office, and of the proposed new Department of the Interior.

But to return to the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. In speaking of the bill authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to enter into a lease for a building to be erected for the use of the Census Office, and to adjoin the then newly rented building of the Department of Commerce, on Pennsylvania Avenue away out at Nineteenth Street, the gentleman from Illinois said:

> As it passed the House it provided for 35 cents a square foot. After the provision had passed the House, it being subject to a point of order at the time it first came before the House, I received information and called it to the attention of the House that the private secretary of the Secretary of Commerce, and I believe the chief clerk of the Secretary of Commerce, and some other of the high officials of the department were interested in business with the person who was to put up the building.

A private secretary, a chief clerk, and other high officials of the department interested in business with the person who is to put up a building to be rented to the Government to be used by that Department!

Gradually we are learning how it happens that the Government rents private buildings in these outlandishly inconvenient places. For years the Government has possessed many sites, any of which would be convenient and in every way admirable for the new building for the Interior Department—vastly better than the site on which it is proposed to locate it.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], whose statement no one attacked, further said:

> The building is now under construction, apparently with very certain assurance that the lease will be entered into, although the authority has not yet been granted by Congress. Having passed the House at 35 cents a square foot, they succeeded in getting the Senate to raise the amount to 37½ cents a square foot.

Thereupon the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] rose and said that the Government could again rent the Census Building at the foot of Capitol Hill at the rate of 16 cents a square foot.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER. I think I will ask for three minutes more, because of the very great importance of this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Now I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. What I intended to say is inappropriate at this point.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman tell us how far it is from the House Office Building to the place where this new building is in contemplation?

Mr. COOPER. From the House Office Building to where this building is to be located is, I think, in the neighborhood of a mile and three-quarters.

Mr. NORTON. Just about.

Mr. COOPER. In the roundabout way in which we have to go. Now, as I say, the location of public buildings and the renting of them by private individuals to the Government is getting to be a very considerable industry in this city. The three buildings for which we have the sites and for which plans were drawn—one for the Department of Justice, now housed in an inconvenient and inaccessible private dwelling on K Street; another for the Interior Department, and another for the State Department—could all have been built for $8,000,000. We are paying $600,000 for rents each year; that is 3 per cent on $20,000,000.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Can the gentleman inform the committee why it is that the original plans for which those blocks of ground on this side of the White House property were bought are not being used for the purposes for which they were bought?

Mr. COOPER. I do not know. If the Department of Justice were located at Pennsylvania Avenue and Fifteenth Street, and the other buildings on the squares toward the Mall, in accordance with the plan for the improvement of Washington, not only would the effect be beautiful, but the public convenience would also be well served.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. The gentleman will take into consideration the fact that it costs quite a considerable sum to employ messengers to go from one of these buildings to the others.

Mr. COOPER. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Who determines where these buildings are to be erected?

Mr. COOPER. I do not know. The remarkable thing is that somebody somewhere was authorized to make a lease for 10 years for that Department of Commerce Building out at the corner of Pennsylvania Avenue and Nineteenth Street. In my judgment that transaction was without justification; but this proposition to locate the Department of the Interior over west of the State, War, and Navy Building is worse.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not a fact that a good many of the Secretaries and men who occupy these offices generally prefer offices in modern office buildings rather than these architectural structures that are built by the Government?

Mr. COOPER. That is not it at all. I am not talking about the style of architecture. I am talking about the location.

Mr. PLATT. They have to put these skyscrapers out of the way, so that they will not interfere with the beautification of the city.

Mr. COOPER. I do not think that any sensible person would prefer going into a skyscraper at Nineteenth Street rather into a commodious, well-appointed building on Fifteenth Street facing the park.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was one of the Members of the House who opposed the public-building bill of 1913. I do not know whether the gentleman from Wisconsin opposed it or not.

Mr. COOPER. I did not know anything about this until a week ago. It may have been in that bill, but, if so, it escaped my attention entirely.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is one thing that I suggested, that the bill should have been considered as other bills were, so that Members might know what was in it. Many Members interested in one item do not pay any attention to other items in the bill, and then come in, after they have waked up, years after, and protest against them. It is locking the stable after the horse is stolen.

I not only antagonized the bill when it was in the House, but I protested against its approval by the President of the United States. President Taft is now making speeches on economy and writing articles for the popular magazines on economy. When the contest was on over this bill current rumor at the time had it that his ultimatum was that if the bill was not to receive his veto it had to provide for four items—one, the Rock Creek item, the archives building, the Geological Survey building for the Department of the Interior, and the other, if I recall correctly, the Arlington memorial item. Those items only involved a total expenditure of $6,500,000. When I protested to President Taft about the approval of the public-building bill, just before he was about to leave office, he said, "Oh, there were so many things in the bill that peculiarly benefited Washington that I could not forego an opportunity to have them authorized."

Now he is writing articles about economy and criticizing Congress for not economizing, when he had the power to do more effective work in that direction by refusing his approval of bills than anybody within my recollection.

There is one thing about this proposed building, however, that commends it to me. It provides for the construction of a building of the modern office-building type. It prohibits the construction of a building of a so-called monumental character. The public buildings erected for the Government of the United States, so far as my observation has gone, because of the attempt to make them of a monumental character, has made them more inapt for governmental purposes than any buildings that could possibly be designed unless somebody deliberately drew plans for a mausoleum. [Laughter.] It has made more waste space, more useless arrangements, and more money expended wastefully, of no serviceable return to the Government, than in most any other way.

In 1903 the site upon which this building is to be erected was purchased by the Government. I do not know whether the gentleman from Wisconsin recalls the rumors current at that time, but there was that terrific insistence upon the purchase of this particular site for a hall of records building. After the site was purchased that was the only part of it that persons were interested in, and the site was unoccupied for 10 years. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds decided that it would utilize that site in authorizing this building and provided that it should be upon it.

I do not know that it is so inconvenient. Any place in Washington is sufficiently convenient for Members of Congress. I think it would be a good thing if all public buildings were so far away from the Capitol that it would compel Members of Congress to stay here rather than to spend their time in the departments. If placing the buildings in these so-called inaccessible places would make Members remain here rather than spend their time around the departments, another good would be accomplished not contemplated when the buildings were authorized.

Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of defending the location of public buildings. The site which the gentleman from Wisconsin refers to upon Fifteenth Street was purchased in order to permit the erection of three public buildings—one for the Department of State, one for the Department of Justice, and one for the Departments of Commerce and Labor. So that this building could not have been located there. I know it would have been entirely impossible to have provided for the erection of an office type of building at that point.

Now, in reference to the rented offices for the Census Bureau, I was one of those who thought that the old Census Bureau Building was a very satisfactory building and could have been rented very cheaply, but the information presented to Congress as to the terrible danger from fire, the insanitary condition of the building, the excess of heat of the building in summer time, and the great inconvenience in the transaction of public business finally overwhelmed me, as it did other members of the committee, and the authorization was made to rent the building to be erected under certain conditions. I know that it is a very fruitful industry in the city of Washington to erect buildings for the use of the Government, and yet in a majority of these cases in which contracts of that character have been made, while it has been a profitable transaction to those who erected the buildings, I think it has been a profitable transaction in most instances for the Government, because we have had provided office buildings suitable for the transaction of Government business rather than having invested our money in so-called monumental types of building, with a very large permanent annual charge on the Treasury and very unsatisfactory conveniences for the transaction of business.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I fully approve of what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has said with reference to the location of this building. I think when that site was originally acquired it was largely for the purpose of cleaning out a sore spot that somebody did not like. Whether that was desirable or not I would not undertake to say.

I rose particularly to again call the attention of the House to the fact that the public-building act of 1913 is not a law, although we proceed upon the supposition that it is. It is true it received the signature of the President of the United States and also of the Speaker of the House and of the President of the Senate. We passed the public-building bill through this body. The Senate added a large number of amendments to it. On a conference report we agreed to three of those items. The House never agreed to any of the other items that are incorporated in the act. We had disagreed to all of them in the first instance, as a matter of form in the House. Through an inadvertence the Speaker had presented to him a copy of the enrolled bill as having passed both bodies. He signed it. It was sent to the Senate and the President of the Senate signed it. It was sent to the President of the United States and the President of the United States signed it; but the Journal of the House, which is the official record of the proceedings in the House, shows that the Senate amendments were never agreed to, and there was no accord reached between the two bodies. I believe that some time after the adjournment of Congress the Senate Journal was doctored up, and I say "doctored up" advisedly, to show that there was a conference report presented to that body covering all of the items. There had been one presented once before and it was rejected. There never was any other presented to the Senate, but the Journal of the House shows conclusively that that bill never passed this body. I do not know how far the fact that the Speaker signs a bill which was never introduced, that the Vice President signs a bill that has not been introduced, and that the President of the United States attaches his signature to a bill that has never been introduced in either body goes to make it a law, but I am very confident that this is subject to attack in a proper manner.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The United States Supreme Court decided that it would not go behind the certificates of the Vice President and the Speaker in a case involving the construction of the Dingley law, in which it was claimed Congress had not passed a certain provision but had authorized the conferees to incorporate it. I will put a reference to that case in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will read the case he will find that it does not apply to this case. I read that case, and I am afraid that my friend has not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I read the case, and I know that Mr. Justice Harlan in the opinion points out specifically that the court will not go behind a certificate of the presiding officers.

Mr. MANN. They will not unless you appeal to the Journal of the two bodies.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will get the case and put it in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can get the case and put the reference in the RECORD. I know what it is, for I read the case.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. In reference to the criticism of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] on the Interior Department Building, in the course of construction beyond the State, War, and Navy Building, I wish to say that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds gave that department the character of building that it requested. It was a new departure in Washington City, a great deal of this work was shop work, and the officials of that department insisted upon that character of building, and we gave them what they wanted.

In reference to the amount of rent expended in this city for public buildings, it is true that it approaches $600,000, but Congress can, whenever it feels so disposed, make an appropriation to give the Government the necessary housing room for all of its departments. The Department of Commerce was overcrowded in its building on Fourteenth Street between the Ebbitt House and Pennsylvania Avenue. That department had a number of its bureaus scattered over the city in rented quarters, and hence they made this agreement for the construction by private parties of a building sufficiently large to house all of its various bureaus on Pennsylvania Avenue at the corner of Nineteenth Street.

In reference to the lots purchased by the Government at the head of Pennsylvania Avenue and opposite the Treasury Department, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has reported—and there is now on the calendar—a bill providing for the construction of a building for the Department of Justice on a portion of that land, to cost $3,000,000, and carrying an immediate appropriation of $500,000 for the commencement of the work.

Before we prepared the last public-buildings bill we conferred with President Taft in reference to the amount which that bill should carry. The House committee held its down practically within the limits suggested by the President of the United States. We found it utterly impossible to care for more of the Government propositions in the District of Columbia and at the same time carry in that bill the needed propositions in practically every State in the Union. We gave what we thought was a just amount for public buildings in Washington City within the limits of the total amount authorized in the bill and at the same time provide for meritorious propositions in the various States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What was the agreement between the gentleman and the President?

Mr. AUSTIN. It was not an agreement. It was simply to ascertain from the President of the United States how much he would stand for in a public-building bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He also insisted that he would veto the bill unless certain items were included in it?

Mr. AUSTIN. He did not. When our subcommittee, I think composed of Messrs. CLARK, BURNETT, and myself, visited the White House, I will be very frank to say, I think I suggested to the other members of that subcommittee that we ask the President if he had any suggestion to make as to any proposition which should be included in a bill. I thought he would want the Red Cross building embraced in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was not in that bill, was it?

Mr. AUSTIN. I said, "Let us offer him something and get him interested in it and get as large a bill as we can." [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. As a matter of fact, he served notice when the vote was on in the Senate and there was a controversy between the two Houses that there were things that he wanted in that bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know what occurred in the Senate, but I know that the President of the United States did not seek to dictate to our subcommittee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not say that he did.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I first yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have reference to another stage in the proceedings.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I was with the subcommittee that waited upon President Taft, and there was not an intimation made by him that the condition of his signature to that bill would depend on whether he got any item.

Mr. AUSTIN. No.

Mr. BURNETT. Not a thing of the kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not talking about that particular stage of the proceedings.

Mr. BURNETT. The fact is President Taft stated to us that he would stand for a bill of a certain size, and that he was interested in a building he would like very much to have us make an appropriation for, which, as I recollect, we had already agreed upon, which building was in a city where he was expecting to be a professor in a college, but so far as ever mentioning that until after he had told us his desires in regard to the matter, that is actually untrue, so far as that committee is concerned. I do not know anything about what occurred in the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He was well taken care of, and more than that, after he left the White House he came down to Washington and used whatever influence he had with the Treasury Department to have them spend $100,000 or $150,000 for the use of one particular kind of marble instead of another in the New Haven building.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as most of my time has been consumed by my genial colleagues I will ask to have my time extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is correct in his statement of what ex-President Taft stated to our subcommittee. The President made a reference to an increased appropriation for the New Haven post office and customhouse, which had been recommended by the architect.

Mr. BURNETT. That is correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, in reference to the ex-President of the United States coming to Washington and exercising his influence for a certain kind of material for the post-office building and customhouse at Hartford, Conn., I do not know of any such fact.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

Mr. AUSTIN. But I do know that I wrote the ex-President of the United States and appealed to him to use his influence for the use of a certain kind of material for the post-office building in his town.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Was that the kind adopted?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; and it was the best material offered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And that cost between $100,000 and $150,000 more than the building could have been constructed for if a different type of material had been used.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, it was a question of the value and durability of the kind of material to be used in the New Haven building. It was quite a question whether to use marble from New York or Tennessee——

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the New York marble would have lasted as long as we or our children would live.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Tennessee marble was worth $150,000 more than the New York marble. The architect who prepared the plans recommended Tennessee marble. There was not any doubt about the Government receiving full value in the difference of those two bids or materials.

Mr. CANTRILL. What part of Tennessee did this marble come from?

Mr. AUSTIN. It comes from the Garden of Eden, the district which I have the honor to represent. [Applause.] I not only appealed to Mr. Taft, but I went to see the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, any number of times in reference to this matter. I take full responsibility, and hope I will have another opportunity in doing the same thing.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Tennessee says that President Taft did not call on him. From his position in matters of this sort, it would not be necessary for ex-President Taft to call on the gentleman from Tennessee to induce him to reduce any kind of an appropriation, would it?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; I believe in putting money in circulation instead of hoarding it in the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the case to which I referred a moment ago in reply to the gentleman from Illinois is Field v. Clark (143 U. S., 649), and the headnote is as follows:

The signing by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and by the President of the Senate, in open session, of an enrolled bill is an official attestation by the two Houses of such bill as one that has passed Congress; and when the bill thus attested receives the approval of the President and is deposited in the Department of State according to law, its authentication as a bill that has passed Congress is complete and unimpeachable.

It is not competent to show from the journals of either House of Congress that an act so authenticated, approved, and deposited did not pass in the precise form in which it was signed by the presiding officers of the two Houses and approved by the President.

An examination of the opinion in this case, though I have not read it recently, but read it some time ago when I was interested in another phase of a similar question, will show that Mr. Justice Harlan took the ground that the Supreme Court will not go behind the attestation of the presiding officers and examine the Journal, the records of the two Houses, to impeach a bill as approved after being attested to by the two presiding officers.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I read the case and I think it did not cover the case in reference to the public buildings bill at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know how it could be any more explicit than it is.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York how much construction work has been done on this site? As I understand it, there has been none done as yet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that part of the unexpended balance on the site, $96,000, was unexpended of the original $400,000 appropriated for this site and the authorization for the building, placing the limit of cost at $2,596,000. In the sundry civil act for the current year $40,000 of the unexpended balance was appropriated for the preparation of plans and this is the first appropriation toward the construction of the work.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consider the pro forma amendment as withdrawn and the Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because, in my judgment, it would be a very serious mistake to erect a building for the Interior Department in such a remote and inconvenient place. The site was bought originally, as the gentleman from Illinois said, to get rid of some things that the city wanted to get rid of and to be used for the purpose of a hall of records, which the Government then very greatly needed and still needs. This building for the Interior Department will be one to which more Members must go than to any other single departmental building in the city. It should be constructed at some point convenient as possible for a majority of the membership of Congress. There are many sites, the one on Fifteenth Street being especially suitable. But we can now stop its construction on this inaccessible site, and do no harm to anybody. We can have a reconsideration of this very important program in the interest of the public service and of the convenience of the membership of the two Houses of Congress. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. FITZGERALD], in whose judgment we all have great confidence, said he was opposed originally to this sort of thing. Only $40,000 has been spent and no part of that on the building. The gentleman said he wished buildings to be located at inaccessible places so that the Members of the House would remain here while the House is in session.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman overlook the fact that we have spent $300,000 on the site?

Mr. COOPER. We can use that for a hall of records.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman said only $40,000 had been spent on it.

Mr. COOPER. I meant, aside from the purchase of the site, only $40,000 has been spent on it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And there is the money which has been spent for the preparation of the plans.

Mr. COOPER. Those can be very easily changed for a hall of records. When you look forward to the future of the Republic of the United States and consider the convenience of all of the Members of the two Houses of Congress who must walk or ride up there through the centuries to come, the proposition in this bill seems inexcusable.

But the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] made a statement which seems plausible and somewhat effective when he said he wanted this building put up at an inaccessible place, so that the Members of the House would stay here during the sessions of the House. It is my experience, and I think it is the experience of the gentleman himself—and he is one of the most faithful of the membership of this House—that he does his department work in the morning after breakfast, between that time and the time he comes up to the Capitol or to the House Office Building. It is very rarely that I leave the Capitol to go to the departments in the afternoon. Sometimes I do, upon receipt of a telegram or of a letter on urgent business, but not otherwise. This is true also of the Members of Congress generally.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the Government owns a plot of ground, possibly 200 feet square, west of the Riggs Bank Building on Fifteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue and south of the Belasco Theater? I understand that the Government owns that splendid plot of ground.

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Should not the Interior Department building be located at some such place as that?

Mr. COOPER. But a much better place would be to locate it in accordance with the plan for the improvement of Washington and for the great convenience of the membership of the House, and that is——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER. I ask for a few minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the pending amendment be closed. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. COOPER. About three minutes, that is all—three or four.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto be closed in eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in eight minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. We have a site now which has been purchased, running, as I said, from Pennsylvania Avenue straight through to the Mall along Fifteenth Street, a site facing on the park, a beautiful site, accessible, and very admirable.

Inasmuch as no money has been spent toward the construction of this proposed building on that out-of-the-way site on F Street, and inasmuch as we are about to locate this great department for all time, we ought immediately to reconsider this proposition and choose a far better site. That would be no reflection upon the committee which brought in this appropriation. It acted in accordance with what it thought the desire of Congress. But we ought now to reconsider it. There is no pressing necessity for spending a million and a half dollars on this project while the Treasury is in its present condition. If we do not reconsider now, we never can reconsider it. Every reason which can appeal to the good judgment of the House requires us to strike out these two lines and have a reconsideration of this problem.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This building is more needed, perhaps, than any other building in Washington. It is to house certain bureaus of the Interior Department. It was urged particularly because of the fact that the Geological Survey is now housed in a building where several fires have threatened the destruction of very valuable documents.

This building is proposed to be erected on the lot bounded by Seventeenth and Eighteenth and E and F Streets. It is right in a cluster of public offices. The State, War, and Navy Building is on Seventeenth Street. The Department of Labor is occupying the Mills Building at Seventeenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue. The Department of Commerce is at Nineteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. NORTON. How long have the Department of Commerce and the Department of Labor been up there on Seventeenth Street?

Mr. COOPER. Two years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Department of Commerce went up there about a year and a half ago, I think. The Civil Service Commission is in that vicinity, and also the Navy Department

Annex, so that this building is to be located in the midst of a group of public buildings.

This building is needed for the public service. To strike out this item, for the purpose of enabling Congress to reconsider it, means that offices which are particularly desired in the interest of the public service must be delayed. It is believed that the building will be completed within two years. It is needed for the public service, and I think it ought to be constructed now.

Mr. COOPER. All these buildings which the gentleman mentions are leased buildings, built by private parties and leased to the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The State, War, and Navy Building is not.

Mr. COOPER. All the rest are.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and most of them are rented on terms which are quite advantageous to the Government. This building proposes something that many Members of Congress believe may be the beginning of a system that will result in a very different type of public building. Here is a proposal to erect a structure of the modern office-building type for the transaction of the public business. It will be economical, it will be useful, it will be satisfactory. The only time when we get such buildings is when we rent them. This is one time when we can get such a building under Government construction. The buildings are required for the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey. These two services are now paying $52,000 a year rent in the city of Washington. The more speedily this building is erected for all the services that are to go into it the better it is for the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COOPER) there were—ayes 27, noes 33.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wenatchee, Wash., post office: For commencement, $1,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wilmington, N. C., customhouse and appraisers' stores: For continuation, $220,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from New York if he is able to tell us how much the authorization is for this Wilmington, N. C., building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Wilmington, N. C., the total limit of cost is $600,000.

Mr. MANN. May I ask what is covered by the next item, "For rent of temporary quarters for the accommodation of Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $2,500"? Who are these officials to be accommodated? I assume, without knowing, that the Wilmington customhouse is to be erected on the site where there is now a Government building, and that you appropriate $2,500 for the rent of buildings for these officials during the erection of that building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is intended to commence the removal of the old building from its present site and commence the construction of a new building, and this is to provide accommodations for offices in another building while the new building is being constructed.

Mr. MANN. I may be in error as to the facts, but here is a case where the Government proposes to appropriate $2,500 for the rent of private buildings for customhouse and appraisers' offices in Wilmington, N. C. They can get the rent and move the offices for $2,500 a year, and yet we propose to construct a $600,000 building for their accommodation hereafter. That would be a considerable sum to spend for quarters that you can rent for less than $2,500 a year. I should say that was going some if these are the facts. Those are what appear to be the facts on the surface of the bill. Five per cent on $600,000 a year would be $30,000 interest, and the cost of light, heat, and janitor's services would be more than $2,500 a year, and yet I suppose we are to build the building as a matter of economy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois refused to join with me when this bill was up, but rather helped the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to pass it, and now the gentleman criticizes it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. He is ungrateful and his memory is poor. He is in the habit of saying "Look at me, I tried to beat it and you were for it." The fact is that I cordially joined with the gentleman from New York, and I was one of the very few who did.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not my recollection of it.

Mr. MANN. I had an item in the bill and the gentleman from New York did not have an item in it. The gentleman opposed the bill because he did not have an item in it, and so his virtue was not so strong as mine. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is in error as to both statements. He had an item in the bill and cooperated with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The committee proposed to put in an item for Brooklyn, but I requested them not to put it in. The Senate inserted the item in the bill, and I asked the conferees not to agree to it. That is where the gentleman from Illinois and I differ.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; that is correct; because the item was not as the gentleman from New York wanted it. It did not carry the amount of money the gentleman wanted; it cut it too fine and the gentleman wanted more money. He did not get it. I do not criticize him. I commend him even then for being opposed to the bill, and I joined with him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was not the reason. The gentleman from Illinois gave his valuable assistance to the men who were interested in public buildings. I do not find fault with him, but I hope his building will not come back to plague him as some others do. I think that these gentlemen who helped to pass a public-building bill and who profited by its passage in that they got some authorization of their own in it, should not, after the bill has become a law and they have gained the advantage they seek from it, turn around and criticize and condemn their associates in passing the bill. If they want to be free to criticize these items, they ought to criticize them when they are authorized, and not wait until the bill has become a law and after their particular item has been taken care of and then turn upon their former allies.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] voted, because there were so very few who did vote against the last public-buildings bill that I did not take much notice of it; but my understanding was that we had the moral support and cooperation of my good friend from Illinois. I flattered myself, from the few conversations I had with him in regard to the bill, that he was at heart with us. I did not think that the $50,000 that he had in the bill influenced him in any way whatever, but I thought that for the general good of the country the gentleman from Illinois recognized it as so meritorious a bill that at heart, if not by vote, he was with us. In regard to the item, Mr. Chairman, as I recollect it, it went to the Senate with a much smaller authorization. That was increased in the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is a New York item?

Mr. BURNETT. The Wilmington proposition. The House conferees finally yielded on that, and when it comes to the amount of expenditure I think that if the gentlemen will investigate it they will find that the $2,500 is for the payment of the housing of the Government officials till the new building is completed. Of course, I can not remember distinctly these matters that occurred two years ago, but my recollection is that part of the old building was being occupied, and is yet, by Government officials, and that this $2,500 is made up of rents made necessary by renting of outside buildings and the moving of these offices when they do move to the new building and when it is completed. I am stating that from recollection. I may be mistaken in regard to the matter, but I think upon investigation the gentleman will find that the facts are as I have stated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think perhaps the gentleman is correct about that. I have that information here.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if I supported upon the floor all of the propositions where I give parliamentary advice, I would very frequently find myself on both sides of the questions that come before the House. The gentleman from Alabama is a little ungrateful. I advised him how he could pass the public building bill two years ago. That was a matter of giving parliamentary advice. Only the other day he was courteous enough to ask for some parliamentary advice on another great matter that was before the House, and as far as my knowledge went I was very willing to give the advice, although I did not vote for his bill. I did not understand that when gentlemen taking advantage of my long experience upon the floor ask me for parliamentary advice, and I am courteous enough to give it to them, that they are thereby warranted in saying that I favor their bill. That is a rather ungracious statement to make.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I am sure I intended nothing of the kind. My remarks were intended to be more facetious than ungracious. I have conferred with the gentleman about the bill generally, but I had not understood that the gentleman was opposed to the bill. Perhaps I ought not to have referred to the fact of the parliamentary suggestions which the gentleman gave me, because I frequently do go to him for parliamentary advice. It was not that that led me to believe that the gentleman was not unfriendly to the bill, so much as the fact that I had talked with him generally about the bill and he had never expressed disapproval of the bill to me.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman and the other gentleman who came to me about the bill were told then that I did not intend to vote for the bill. That did not make any impression upon them, apparently, although the advice of how to do it did apparently make an impression. I do not consider that I am under obligation to give information to a gentleman about a parliamentary situation when he asks me, whether I am for his proposition or against it, and I hope that gentlemen will not consider when they ask as to what can be done in a particular parliamentary situation and I tell them what my views are as to what can be done, that thereby I am obligated to support their propositions, because if that be the case, I shall be as close as a clam hereafter.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I want to ask three or four questions of somebody. I tried to ask it of the chairman of the committee quietly, but I did not get much satisfaction. I would like to know, first, what the population of Wilmington, N. C., is? I would like to know, next, what the receipts of the post office are, and I would like, again, to know the customs receipts of that office?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will give the gentleman 66⅔ per cent of the informatoin that he desires. The balance I have not got. The population in 1910 was 25,748. The gross postal receipts in 1913 were $135,193.76; money-order receipts in 1913, $236,062.66; postal-savings receipts in 1913, $3,133. The building is for a customhouse and appraisal stores and other governmental offices exclusive of the post office.

Mr. DONOVAN. And the gentleman does not know what the customs receipts are?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not?

Mr. DONOVAN. Is that a very intelligent handling of the subject—not to know what the customs receipts are?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What difference does it make what the customs receipts are?

Mr. DONOVAN. I will tell what is necessary to know. I am going to tell what I think about it in my own way and in my own style.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not make any difference what the gentleman thinks about it. What the gentleman thinks about it and whether it is an intelligent handling of the subject are two entirely different things.

Mr. DONOVAN. Let us see, Mr. Chairman. A great man, a great committee, and the chairman of the same, engineered a bill through this House carrying $600,000 authorization for Wilmington, N. C., a locality of less than 30,000 souls. What do you think about that? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. The trouble with the gentleman is that he is incorrect.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman should conduct himself in an orderly way. You should first get recognition from the Chair before interrupting me.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. DONOVAN. Not at this moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DONOVAN. This is the proposition. I am obliged to repeat it lest my audience forgets the point I am trying to make. A great committee, a most important committee, and a great chairman in the Sixty-second Congress engineered a bill through this establishment known as the House of Representatives for $600,000 for a public building in a locality having less than 30,000 souls.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the chairman in this Congress very kindly told us awhile ago that a $75,000 proposition in every locality, with the same number in population such as the gentleman from California had offered, would bankrupt this great country. I can not understand why the people of my State have been shanghaied all these years. [Laughter.] We have a customhouse and we have a post office in a locality of 110,000 souls. The receipts of the customhouse are half a million dollars. The receipts of the post office are over $400,000. What happened to our little State when my predecessor, the greatest man this Congress ever had as a Member, when he, who was the greatest man in his own opinion who ever came out in the world, who was here for 18 years, and the only Federal building in his district with a roof or chimney on it cost a little over $250,000? What is it that they do to us from the Nutmeg State when they get our great men down here? Do they do as they do in other localities, pull them into a dark alley masked and strip them and take to themselves $600,000 for towns of 30,000 population?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say the Committee on Appropriations did not put through the House the bill authorizing this building. There might be something accurate about the balance of the gentleman's statement, but there is no accuracy——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONOVAN. We have just listened to the gentleman from Alabama, we have listened to the minority leader, as well as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and all hands of it in the steal. [Laughter.] Well, all acquiesced in it and no protest was made, but they have given the minority leader a $50,000 proposition in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I decline to yield further.

Mr. MANN. The statement the gentleman makes, like most of his statements, is absolutely without any foundation of fact.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Connecticut can not even repeat a statement made within five minutes here on this floor. I have stated here, I think, a dozen times to-day I opposed the passage of the public-buildings bill. If the gentleman were in his place, and attentive and alert as he pretends sometimes to be about what is transpiring in this House, he would not make so many absurd statements in one five minutes. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Wytheville, Va., post office: For completion, $25,000.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, in pursuance of the unanimous-consent agreement, I now offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after line 2, on page 2, down to and including line 6, on page 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to see if we can arrange time for debate upon this amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. What does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If nobody wants any time, I would suggest 10 minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. I want five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suppose a number of the Members——

Mr. MANN. Suppose we start for awhile without limitation and then see.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think the time should be divided between those in favor of the motion and those opposed to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am trying to see if we can arrange time for debate. I think it would be much more satisfactory to do that. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto be limited to 80 minutes, 40 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts and 40 minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending amendment and all amendments thereto be concluded in 80 minutes, 40 minutes of the time to be controlled by himself and the remaining 40 minutes by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, if the apportionment of time is for the purpose of lengthening the discussion on this bill, it seems to me that method will have that effect. If there are any who in seriousness expect to support the motion, except the gentleman from Massachusetts who offers it, they are not now manifest, and it seems to me if we are proceeding under the rules of debate and exchange time first to one for the amendment and then to one who is opposed to it we will get through with a good deal less than 80 minutes, in my judgment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If objection is made at the end of 80 minutes, I will move to close debate, anyway.

Mr. MARTIN. I am not objecting; but I suggest it seems to me on a proposition of this kind we are simply lengthening the consideration of the bill unnecessarily.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, my proposition is to strike out all the appropriations for public buildings now in the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the list of buildings which the Treasury Department has stated have been commenced or are now under contract. In other words it leaves out every building where no work has been done or where no contract obligation has been incurred.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. I followed the reading of the amendment as best I could, and I noticed a great many items in the bill marked for completion which are not included——

Mr. GILLETT. Those are for extensions which have not been commenced, and an appropriation will complete them.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I want to ask the gentleman if work has not begun on extensions if that should be included——

Mr. GILLETT. No; that would go out if the work had not been begun.

Now, the appropriations for public buildings in this bill amount to $11,984,920. My proposed amendment makes appropriations for $2,300,500. Consequently, if it should be adopted, it would save the Treasury $9,684,420, quite a comfortable sum in the present condition of the Treasury.

I offer this amendment, not as carrying out any opinions I may have as to the advisability of these public buildings—although I have decided opinions upon it—but on the ground that the Treasury is nearly empty, that according to our best advices as to income next year it is not likely to be replenished, and that now is a time when we should exercise strict economy, and should not appropriate for luxuries, but only for necessities. And it seems to me if anything is a luxury and not a necessity it is the new public buildings which this bill carries.

The other day I was reading a history of the English Parliament, and I came across this sentence, which, I think, is very appropriate to the American Congress. It ran:

If you want to raise a certain cheer in the House of Commons, make a general panegyric on economy. If you want to invite a sure defeat, propose a particular saving.

And, I confess, in the light of that statement—which, I think, applies to us quite as much as to them—my hope that this amendment will be adopted is not strong. The other side of the House have always been advocates of economy in theory, although I will do them the justice to admit that for the last few months I have heard no such boasts on that side. They have not recently had the assurance to pretend that they have been economical. But the leader of that side, Mr. UNDERWOOD, just the other day insisted in the House that there was great need of retrenchment. Now, here is an opportunity, not for a general panegyric on economy but to vote on a particular instance, an instance that will save the Treasury over $9,000,000. And there is not a building in this whole list, I think you will all admit, which can not be deferred without any interference with the functions of the Government.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How many items does the gentleman's amendment contemplate?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know the number.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does it not reduce the number something like 150?

Mr. GILLETT. I have not any idea of the number. The figures of dollars and not of particular instances are all I have.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If it does reduce the number that much, that will defeat the amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. I appreciate the force of the gentleman's argument that there would be 150 sure votes against it, but I thought there was only one line to follow, and that was to cut out everything which has not now been begun. Therefore I asked the Treasury Department to give me a statement of all those cases, so that there should be no favoritism.

In this bill there are many items, like Jaspar, Ala.—and I will only suggest one—where there is an authorization of $107,500 for a town with a population of 2,500 people. At present they are paying there for rent, light, heat, and janitor $372 a year. Yet there is an authorization of over $100,000. Heating, lighting, and janitor service would cost many times more than they are now paying for rent. I will not now discuss the propriety of that building, although I have a very decided opinion about it; but it seems to me that everybody who professes the slightest desire to make the balance of expenditures and revenues meet, who desire that in the next fiscal year we shall not have a great deficit, or who wants to reduce the deficit which there is certain to be, ought to say, "Here is an appropriation which the country can go without for another year as well as not," and vote for this amendment. The Government service will not suffer in the slightest, and the Government Treasury will be materially helped.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I never heard this howl for economy from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] when his party was manipulating the exchequer. I never heard much of it from the gentleman when he himself had an item upon the last public building bill, one of the smallest in the whole list. He was suddenly spurred and awakened, and made some kind of objection to the bill, and when taunted with the fact that he himself had an item on it his excuse was that others were getting in. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman the other day had the chance to vote for one battleship instead of two, when we were trying to cut off $15,000,000. He did not do it, but I believe admitted that for the first time he voted for two instead of one. Was he for economy then? His plea here to-day is to cut off $9,000,000 which is going almost entirely to the interior and the smaller towns of the country, at least the greater part of it. That is about all that the people of the interior districts ever see of what goes with the taxes that they pay.

Last year we passed a good-roads bill providing for $25,000,000 for good roads.

Mr. BORLAND rose.

Mr. BURNETT. I decline to yield. I have only five minutes. Did the gentleman vote for the people then? The RECORD will show; but I do not think I ever heard his voice or the voices of these gentlemen from the great cities, who are voting to curtail this expenditure, raised in favor of the people in the country who want good roads. We tried the other day to strike from the naval appropriation one great battleship costing $15,000,000, at a time when it seems to me that that appropriation is less excusable than ever, when the great nations of the world, the only ones that might at any time be a menace to us, are involved in a titanic conflict that will deplete their treasuries and decimate their armies, and for the next 50 or 100 years make our country more immune than ever from any attacks from outside enemies, why did not he and these other gentlemen who cry "economy" vote to save the Treasury? These gentlemen who are here wanting to cut down appropriations which we wish to make in order that the people in the small cities may see something of where their money goes, never raised their voices or cast their votes in order to cut off those expenditures that might easily have been dispensed with. Yet, now, in order to make a political cry of economy and in order to try to anathematize the Democratic Party for extravagance they come up here and attempt to make this cut on items that I think are just. Two years ago Congress, by an overwhelming vote, said that the items that were on the bill reported to the House by the committee, of which I was the acting chairman, ought to be authorized. The Appropriations Committee has come—in compliance with the mandate of the law that was then passed with only 25 or 30 dissenting votes, and bills passed in 1910 and 1908, and in compliance with the law which authorized these appropriations—has come in and said, "We propose now to comply with the directions that Congress gave us, regardless of whether we voted for the bills or not, by making a recommendation of appropriations to carry out the will almost unanimously expressed by Congress two years and four years ago."

And yet, in order to make cheap political capital, gentlemen who vote for other gross extravagances come now, when, as I say, there is the least excuse for it, and say to us who live in the interior section of the country, "We will cut you down, but we will not cut down the navy yards and the immense battleships." It shows an inconsistency in men who are prone to make these fallacious arguments on the floor of the House for the purpose of getting cheap notoriety and in order to undertake to assault the party they have been fighting so long. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] referred to Jasper, Ala., an appropriation, as I recollect, of $1,000 for beginning work. The gentleman from Massachusetts was not fair enough to state it, but there is not only a post office there, but there is a Federal court there, and certainly the amount that is authorized for the construction of a post office and a Federal courthouse would not be considered as excessive. Yet, without information or knowledge in regard to it, the gentleman makes a fling at it. It is not in my district; I have not a single item on this bill; but I am speaking for the men that are represented in the bill and who sustained our hands two and four years ago. [Applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I did not know that Jasper included both a courthouse and a post office. It is not my fault, because on looking up the record it did not show that it was for anything except the post office. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I shall oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I shall be very frank in stating my reasons for so doing. The first item under the public-buildings section of this appropriation bill reads:

Aberdeen, Wash., post office: For commencement, $1,000.

Almost the last item in the section reads:

Vancouver, Wash., post office: For commencement, $10,000.

Mr. Chairman, undoubtedly the condition of the country calls for rigid economy in the expenditures of public money. It is strange that we have waited until the last appropriation bill is under consideration and then propose to start in by cutting the initial appropriations for post-office buildings that were authorized years ago.

If it is desired that it is necessary to economize in the expenses of the Government of the United States to the extent of further delaying work on authorized public buildings, then the motion which should be offered should be a motion to strike out all of these items, including those which give money to buildings in the slow progress of construction. There can be no more reason why there should be further delay in starting $1,000 worth of survey and foundation work in Aberdeen, where a building has been promised and authorized, than there is in appropriating for further construction of a post office in Alliance, Ohio, or any city or town mentioned in the bill. Even under favorable circumstances suspension of work occurs time and time again, and as long as the amendment does not propose to strike out and postpone all of the construction work, I shall oppose this amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Let us all be treated alike. Suspend public buildings entirely for a year, or let the smaller places have their start along with other places which are given sums with which to carry on the slow work of building. Further, the situation is very much as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] has just said—the little cities which have been promised these offices by act of Congress are entitled to them just as much as the great cities, and very often a modest public building is the limit of their Government requests and about all that they get out of the millions appropriated yearly by Congress. The cry for economy has started in the wrong place and a little too late.

In this bill it is proposed to start four buildings in the great State of Washington—one at Aberdeen, $1,000; one at Vancouver, $10,000; one at Wenatchee, $1,000; and one at Ellensburg, $10,000; in all, $22,000. Certainly a modest sum, inasmuch as each one of these cities has a building authorized. Each city has been on the waiting list for three years or so. They have reached a place in the Treasury Department's list so that they come within the 150 buildings ready to be started. Two—Vancouver and Ellensburg—are ready for the initial contracts, being that much further advanced than Aberdeen and Wenatchee, and the two last named are clearly entitled to keep their places on the list and receive the starting appropriations.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, which, in effect, strikes from the bill all appropriations for buildings not yet commenced. It would strike from the bill the appropriation of $300,000 for the immigration station provided for the city of Baltimore.

It is useless for me to say how badly we need these buildings. I have spoken before the House on several occasions and have said that we now have practically no Government provision whatever for the Immigration Service at our city, but this appropriation will begin the work, which will be second to none in construction and usefulness in this country. Baltimore does not ask that the Government do things alone; she cooperates and does those things she can for herself.

It is a coincidence that 11 years ago this afternoon the great fire which swept the business section of Baltimore began. It spread over an area of some 140 acres and swept from our midst property estimated to be worth $125,000,000, and from which only $32,000,000 was recovered in insurance. The balance was a loss to our people; yet Baltimore arose phœnix-like from this great calamity, and while she had at the time of the fire an assessable tax basis of $439,000,000, in 1910 this had increased to $682,000,000, and to-day we have a $828,000,000 taxable basis. Not only did we recover in that time from the great conflagration and build up our city more magnificently than ever, but you will observe we have almost doubled the taxable basis in those 11 years.

Baltimore has expended millions of dollars upon its docks and wharves and in dredging its splendid harbor. Sixty-five millions of dollars have been voted to be expended in public improvements, and the city shows the results of this expenditure. Miles of smooth streets have been laid, and to-day she is one of the best-paved cities in the country. A sewerage system costing $23,000,000 has been constructed, and is the best in the world. The Key Highway, named after the author of the Star-Spangled Banner, has been largely constructed, leading from the center of the city, connecting with all the business sections, the railroads, and wharves, and reaching the site where the proposed immigration station is to be erected. This will give easy access from the railroads and steamship lines to the new immigration station for which this appropriation is intended. It will open to all railroads and steamship lines which come to Baltimore this new immigration, whereas now this business is controlled by one steamship line and one railroad.

I wish to call the committee's attention also to the admirable location of Baltimore from a commercial standpoint. It is pretty generally known that Baltimore is closer to the Middle West than any of the other Atlantic seaports. I think it will be a surprise, however, to the committee to know that she is closer to the Great Lakes, to wit, to Buffalo, by 16 miles than New York City itself. It will likewise be a greater surprise to learn how magnificently she is located as to the trade which we hope to receive through the Panama Canal from the western coast of South America. I take as a comparison the city of San Francisco, as that seems to be in the general mind, especially in view of the fact that San Francisco is now receiving such abundant advertising because of the great exposition about to be opened in that city. I therefore would remind you that Baltimore is 1,369 miles closer than San Francisco to the Panama Canal. It is 470 miles closer than San Francisco to the city of Valparaiso, Chile, which latter city is the chief seaport on the western side of South America. It is only 1,908 miles by water route from Baltimore to the eastern entrance of the Panama Canal, while it is 3,277 miles from San Francisco to the western entrance.

After computing the 50 miles which is the length of the canal from Colon to Panama, it is only 4,670 miles from Baltimore to Valparaiso, while it is 5,140 miles from San Francisco to the same place. Baltimore is also closer than any of the big Atlantic seaports to the South American cities on the east coast.

This amendment would, as I have said, strike down the appropriation for the building of that immigration station, which is most important to the handling of immigration at this port. For these and many other reasons I am opposed to its adoption. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to insert an editorial from the Baltimore Evening Sun of January 30, 1915, entitled "The city of Baltimore," which gives at length the great importance of our city.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the article referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the article:

THE CITY OF BALTIMORE.

Unfortunately it is necessary to remind the people of Baltimore from time to time that they, like Paul of Tarsus, are citizens of no mean city. We say it is unfortunately necessary to make this reminder because the vast majority of them do not realize the majesty and greatness of the town in which they live.

The great fire 11 years ago this coming February destroyed 1,343 buildings, which with their contents were valued as high as $125,000,000. The desolated area was 140 acres—as large as a farm. Only $32,000,000 was recovered in insurance—the remainder was loss. No people ever met disaster with a finer spirit. Aid was offered from every quarter, but all was declined. The legislature of the State appropriated $250,000 as an emergency fund, but only $24,000 was used. The people of the city met the situation single handed and turned misfortune to advantage. Since that great fire, from which many thought the city would never recover, Baltimore has steadily advanced in all material welfare. The people voted $65,000,000 for public improvements, and the result is manifest to-day.

Baltimore is now one of the best-paved cities of the whole land. It has a sewerage system which cost $23,000,000 and which is the best in the world. It has taken electric wires and poles from the streets and put them underground. It has acquired and now owns a splendid water front. The construction of a highway through the heart of the city, covering Jones's Falls, which has been an open sewer, was a triumph of engineering and of enduring value.

Baltimore has been called "slow" and without the spirit of manufacturing enterprise. And yet her factories put out a product worth a million dollars every workday of the year. The wages paid for labor amount to something like a million dollars every Saturday evening. Baltimore has a record of enterprise second to that of no other city. It has been a pioneer among cities. From our wharves 144 years ago the first cargo of grain that went from the New World to the Old sailed down the Patapsco. The year before the Declaration of Independence was signed Baltimore fitted out the first two vessels for an American Navy, and that same year the first frigate of the Navy was built at Fells Point. In 1792 the first water company in the United States was organized here and gave Baltimore the first waterworks in America. Here steel pens were first made and, in 1816, the first gas company of the country was organized. The first steam railroad chartered in the New World was in Baltimore—the Baltimore & Ohio—and later on the first electric road ever built in the world was built here. From Baltimore sailed the first steam vessel that ever crossed the Atlantic.

No mechanical device has done more for the spread of knowledge, for popular government, and popular education than the rotary press, and it was the Baltimore Sun that first employed this great engine of civilization, and nine years before that it had been the first newspaper in the world to employ the electric telegraph in gathering news—and it was Baltimore to which the first telegraph wire was stretched and to which the first message was sent.

People who call Baltimore slow have never read history and do not keep up with the times. Baltimore has been the most enterprising city in America, and the spirit of enterprise is still alive in this beautiful town.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for this amendment in the interest of economy in spite of the fact that it affects my district and my home town to the extent of $40,000. The city of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has an unusual post-office building, erected in 1886, during the term of my illustrious predecessor, Gen. Ketcham, and so well located that the building and grounds are probably worth twice as much now as when the building was constructed. The receipts of the office are something like one hundred and twenty-five or one hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars a year, and since the parcel post has been inaugurated, and even before that time, the office has been pretty badly crowded. Several years ago it became necessary to place the money-order and registry departments on the second floor, which is very inconvenient. But I am not altogether sure that it would make a real delay of any great account to cut an item like this out of this bill. There has been a previous appropriation to start the work, but I think none of it has actually been started or placed under contract, and everyone knows that the Supervising Architect's Office is so badly crowded with work, that if we give them a chance to finish up what they have got we probably will not lose anything by letting these items for extension work, where no work has actually been done, be postponed for the time being. In all probability when they get the work they are now engaged in done and take this work up again they will be just as far along and we will get the work done just as quickly as if it all went into the bill now.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York yields back two minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS.]

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I rather regret that the gentleman who has proposed this amendment did not see fit to leave in one item that I see on page 16 of the bill, because that one happens to be up in my district. I happen to know that at Ridgway, Pa., they are very much in need of quarters of some kind for their post office, and I find by personal inspection that at times they are obliged to use the back alley as a storage ground because of insufficiency of quarters. Yet at the same time it seems to me that at a time when we are stared in the face by the conviction that the money that is appropriated in this bill will have to be provided by additional taxation we should be very careful about making expenditures that might very well be postponed. I have been appalled at the size of some of these appropriations for little one-horse towns all over the country. Some of them have been referred to. For seven years I have served on the State armory board of the State of Pennsylvania and have been engaged in building armories all over that State. Our limit of expenditure has been from twenty-five to thirty thousand dollars for both construction and site. It is true that in most cases the people of the communities furnish the site, but the cost of construction of these buildings is limited to twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars, and they are large buildings, well and substantially built, always at least 60 feet front and 110 to 140 feet in depth, and are constructed of brick or stone. It seems to me that an expenditure of that amount ought to be sufficient for any post office in any of these towns of ten or fifteen thousand population anywhere in the country.

For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for this amendment, with the thought that additional time and consideration will enable the committee at another time to bring in a bill which is not so grossly extravagant and improvident as this bill is in many particulars.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back half a minute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] who makes this motion makes it upon the alleged ground of economy. I do not desire to call into question his sincerity, but it is very apparent that it is on a very small scale that he proposes to economize when, if he had desired it, he had an opportunity to economize on a large scale. Economy does not consist always in the failure to expend money. The best economy sometimes consists in the wise, just, and legitimate expenditure of public funds. The gentleman from Massachusetts and the other gentlemen who have followed him in this debate have been unfortunate in one thing. They give no just reason for the economy they are asking for. They concede that they are without knowledge as to the merits of the particular projects they propose to reject and have thrown from this bill. The gentleman does not present himself in a very enviable light when he makes a wholesale motion proposing to strike various items from the bill and concedes his ignorance as to the facts of each and every item that he would strike from the bill. I am going to take up one instance only as an illustration to show this House how unwise the proposition is, and I take it that the other instances are very much like it. He desired to strike $30,000 from the bill for the alleged extension of the customhouse at Chattanooga, Tenn. For want of sufficient appropriation heretofore that building was never entirely completed. It is a three-story building, and three parts of of it have been completed and the fourth has been completed only a part of the way. The new space desired is absolutely essential to carry on the public business. The clerks in the post-office part of the building are so close together in their work that when they come to handle the bags of mail they touch elbows. We need nearly twice the space that we have. The court officials are crowded for space. When you put the other two stories on the building as proposed, it will still be necessary in order to carry on the public business in decency and in order to rent some adjoining building for the purpose of storage. Chattanooga has about 100,000 population. The gross postal receipts are over $495,000 per annum. It would be very unwise not to make the customhouse improvement in this case in the public interest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, even those who desire to economize in the construction of public buildings should not vote for the motion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, because the effect of that motion will be to paralyze the public-building business and the Supervising Architect's Office. If we desire to economize in the public buildings, the way to do it is to adopt the suggestion of the Supervising Architect's Office to take the sums in the Treasury heretofore appropriated for public buildings and make them available for any construction that can be reached in regular order the coming fiscal year. In that way the Supervising Architect's Office will keep working steadily and with full force and no new sum need be appropriated. The Supervising Architect's Office expends ordinarily $12,000,000 a year. There must be about that much expended in order to keep the force at work. That means, among other things, the preparation of plans and the letting of contracts for about 70 buildings annually. If this amendment is adopted, as Mr. Wenderoth told the committee in answer to my questions, it will entirely take away from their office the work that they are prepared to do the coming fiscal year. I asked Mr. Wenderoth this question:

Mr. MONDELL. These estimates of $1,000 which you make for the purpose of enabling you to make the survey and examinations preliminary to the preparations of plans, if those items were not provided for you could not go on with the preparation of the plans for those buildings?

Mr. WENDEROTH. No, sir. It would virtually wind up the office in the fiscal year 1917.

There is considerable more of that, but I have not time to go into it in detail.

Later there was the following said in the hearings:

Mr. MONDELL. The small items are necessary to enable you to do anything beyond the acquisition of the sites?

Mr. WENDEROTH. Yes, sir. For the new projects that are reached so near the end of the 16-month period we only need the $1,000 for the survey, etc. If we do not obtain at least that amount in each case we will have nothing to work on during the fiscal year 1917.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HULINGS. Is it not true that the architect's office is about four years behind time now?

Mr. MONDELL. But it does not help them to catch up by stopping all work on new buildings. The entire force in the architect's office can not be advantageously used on the contracts already let. If we are to expedite the work, we must make appropriations necessary for the examinations that precede the preparation of plans. If we suspend work on the plans for new buildings, we will further delay, we will further check, the development of the public-buildings program. If gentlemen really want to economize, the way to do it is to give the Supervising Architect an opportunity to use the funds that he already has and give him $2,000,000 additional if he desires it, and allow him to go on in an orderly way; but the program presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] will disorganize the work of the office and prevent them from carrying it on in an orderly way, and place them in a position where they will have nothing to work on the fiscal year 1917.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand fully the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] as to the basis on which buildings are included in his amendment on the one hand and excluded on the other. There is one item in the bill I did not hear read as part of the amendment of the gentleman, pertaining to Cookeville, Tenn., post office and courthouse, for completion, $40,000. The facts in this case are that Congress has already appropriated $60,000, and this remainder is necessary to complete the construction of the courthouse building, which is urgently needed. The construction of the building has already been let some weeks ago. I am not sure whether the work is commenced or not. I do not know how the gentleman from Massachusetts, or even the Treasury Department, would know as to that. However, that is one of the cases presented here which the amendment, if I construe it correctly, would exclude from this bill. I heard several items embraced in the amendment of the gentleman for the completion of post-office buildings in cities and towns of different sizes, cases where there were certainly not as much urgency as the present case, where the Federal court is really postponed at times for lack of an adequate building in which to hold it and to keep the records, and so forth. It seems to me that where the Government has let a contract for the construction of a building, a courthouse building, urgently needed, as I say, and the department has notified the people interested and notified the contractors that the work shall proceed, that it would result in much confusion on account of the delay by striking out the appropriation and abandoning the premises and the project which has already been carried out to the extent I have stated. I think in cases of urgent need, where the contract has already been let, the items should stand. I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman used three minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to use some time.

Mr. GILLETT. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, this proposition means that the Government of the United States will not encourage the building business or the employment of idle mechanics throughout the United States. I believe it is a mistaken idea of the National Government in times of distress and idleness to economize and delay and postpone building operations which would put into circulation money, and at the same time give employment to thousands of American workingmen who are walking the streets of the industrial cities seeking employment—many almost starving. Let the Government, if it desires to delay business or building operations, do it in a prosperous period of the country's history, when private corporations, private firms, and municipalities can furnish employment for every mechanic in the land. There are no less than 5,000,000 deserving American citizens out of employment to-day.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. AUSTIN. There are over 500,000 in New York alone.

Mr. BORLAND. There are not 5,000,000 of American citizens out of employment to-day, and I challenge the gentleman to produce any reliable figures to prove it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, a year ago I read to the House a statement from a New York daily giving a list of 331,000 idle mechanics in that city.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will yield later on. Judge Gary, chairman of the executive committee of the unemployed in New York City, says the number out of employment in that city is 200,000 more than at this time last year. In one American city alone there are more than half a million workmen out of employment, and if the gentleman will take Boston, Kansas City, and Pittsburgh, and every city, village, and hamlet in this land, the number of idle people will exceed 5,000,000.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Did the gentleman see a statement in the paper a few days ago which said that the city of New York wanted to get men to shovel snow off the streets and they could not secure a sufficient number to do it?

Mr. AUSTIN. There are 10,000 in the bread line alone in that city, and they have to use the recreation piers in order to furnish idle people a place to sleep.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. I have a paper that I hold in my hand here which says there are more men out of work than ever, reported from New York.

Mr. AUSTIN. A man who will state that there are not thousands and millions of men out of employment is mistaken; he is simply blinded to facts that exist in the district of every man who has a seat on the floor of this House.

I think the National Government ought not only to do this work but it ought to pass a good-roads bill and put millions in circulation and employ the countless thousands of idle men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

A MEMBER. Where are we going to get the money?

Mr. AUSTIN. Get it from selling Panama bonds.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment, perhaps, because it involves some work to be done in some of the cities of my district, and on that account I speak from personal knowledge. From the very hour this bill was passed negotiations have been pending for the purchase of land that have not been concluded, and any further delay in closing them up would add to the amount of expense, I firmly believe, of the Federal Government. I can say, as some other gentlemen have said in regard to conditions existing in the post-office building, the one in the city of the district which I speak of is congested, and work is carried on at great inconvenience and in a manner that ought no longer be tolerated.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further debate, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. GILLETT. I think the other side ought to use some time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN].

Mr. DONOVAN. I should like five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield four minutes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I am entitled to five minutes. What are you going to do with it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am going to give the gentleman four minutes. If he does not take that I will give him nothing.

Mr. DONOVAN. And from that decision there is no appeal; is that it?

Mr. MOON. I believe I have two minutes left——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to state that the gentleman can not yield that.

Mr. DONOVAN. Am I going to have my five minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not give the gentleman five minutes. There are more gentlemen who wish to speak.

Mr. DONOVAN. Never mind; never mind. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] explain in a moment, without using up all of my time, by what sort of reasoning he can come in here with an amendment to eliminate the carrying out of an obligation on the part of the United States, when a contract has been let for the construction of a building?

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman is mistaken. No such cases are carried in the amendment.

Mr. DONOVAN. Has not the gentleman eliminated Danbury, Conn.?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know. I asked the Treasury Department to give me a list of all the places where no work had been begun.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman has answered me, and I decline to yield further. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] did not know what he was doing when he offered the amendment. That is all there is to it. He has been a Member here for many years, and he does not know what he has been doing. This is the fact: The gentleman has by his amendment endeavored to strike out public buildings for which contracts have been entered into and obligations created, and he would repudiate them. Now, that is the Massachusetts way of doing things—without knowledge. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, there has been only one public building in my district, a locality settled over 200 years ago. I stated a while ago that the cost of the building was $250,000. That was the cost of the public building in a place of 110,000 population. I find you have passed an appropriation of $600,000 for Wilmington, N. C., which has less than 30,000 population. I find, too, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the minority leader, had in the same bill an appropriation for his district of $50,000 passed on February 17, 1913. Now, during the discussion of that bill, from the first presentation by the Clerk until the final vote, there was not the slightest objection on the part of Mr. MANN, the minority leader, to that bill giving $600,000 to Wilmington, N. C., on the pretense that it was a building for public purposes. I believe the customs receipts of Wilmington, N. C., are less than $20,000 a year. In my district the customs receipts in a $250,000 building are half a million a year and the postal receipts $400,000 a year, while the postal receipts of Wilmington, N. C., are $135,000 a year. But this great minority leader, with a $50,000 appropriation in the bill, by some sort of process remained silent to that way of doing business. For verification you will find it in the proceedings of the House on February 17, 1913. Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] may think it is a proper way to do business to abrogate contracts advertised by the Government, duly let and signed, and he comes in here and wants to repudiate them. Is that the way you do in Springfield, Mass.? Is not that a fine proposition to offer and to advocate in this body, where there should be fair play, where there should be some honor?

I yield back the balance of my time under the circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used his time.

Mr. GILLETT. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, of course this amendment is not at all likely to pass, for there are 270 items in the bill and the amendment strikes out 207 of them. We are not going to vote on this amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] on the theory of economy. We are going to vote on this amendment on the theory of self-interest, I regret to say. If there ever was a time when this House should adopt an amendment of this sort, now is the time. The Treasury will be short something like $80,000,000 at the end of this fiscal year if I can read aright. There will be a deficit to that extent.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DONOVAN. Does the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman does not want any information, I take it.

Mr. MADDEN. By this amendment we will save $9,000,000 to the Treasury. The items to be stricken from the bill by the gentleman's amendment are items that can not be used in any district between now and the beginning of the next fiscal year. Most of them are to begin buildings. Many of them carry only $1,000, said to be for surveys and borings. Nonsense! Of course the Appropriations Committee are bound by the directions given to them through the law enacted in 1913 to report these appropriations. They are not to blame because they have done so.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield one moment for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BURNETT. They were authorized in 1910 mainly.

Mr. MADDEN. It would hurt no one to delay it for the time being. It would prevent additional taxation on the already overburdened American people, many of whom are out of employment. The enactment of the bill with all the items in it would not add to the employment of the men of the country, because the Supervising Architect in charge of the construction of public buildings says himself that all he wants is to maintain his force in his office. Well, are we going to impose additional taxation on the already overtaxed, idle people of America, in order that the Supervising Architect of the Treasury may keep 5 or 6 or a dozen or 15 draftsmen at work? I apprehend not. Gentlemen, if you are really in favor of the economy that you preach, here is an opportunity to practice it. Quit going to the people in your campaigns and saying that you are to be the advance guard of economy if you are charged with power. Now is the time to prove your patriotism. We are in a period of distress. We have no new sources of revenue. The President of the United States will be here again shortly, asking for a new law to create new taxes, still further to burden the people who are out of employment. Vote to save this $9,000,000!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, whether this amendment is taken seriously or not by the members of this committee, it ought to be. It has been drawn, as I understand, after consultation with the Treasury Department, and it indicates in a fairly accurate way the buildings which are not imperatively needed for the transaction of the public business and which can be omitted or postponed at this time.

The Appropriations Committee included these items because they had in their turn been recommended by the Supervising Architect. That committee is not charged with legislation, it can not repeal any of the authorizations for public buildings, neither did it create the authorizations for public buildings. But it leaves the matter to the judgment of this House, as it ought, whether at this time in comparison with other necessary demands on the Public Treasury new buildings ought to be begun.

There seems fortunately to be no partisanship on this question. Gentlemen are opposed to the proposition on both sides of the House, and some gentlemen on both sides of the House are advocating the passage of the amendment. There is no necessity at the present time for the beginning of new work on public buildings except to a limited extent, to which exception is made in the amendment proposed. If gentlemen want to divorce themselves from any special interest they may have in these appropriations and consider this matter as a board of directors of a business concern would consider it in view of the probable receipts and necessity of expenditures, whether they want to authorize these expenditures to the possible exclusion of other necessary expenditures, they will vote for this amendment. There are many other demands made by the American people on the American Congress much more imperative than the construction of the buildings eliminated by this amendment.

Take any one of these projects that gentlemen think is meritorious, and it is scarcely to be argued that it can not be postponed without great injury to the public service. Assuming that at some time most of these appropriations must be made, still it does not argue that they must be in this bill. I take it that there are many public buildings in the bill that could be eliminated without any injury to the public service. I might even go further and say that we could repeal the authorizations with distinct advantage to the public service by not saddling on the Federal Government the care and maintenance of buildings which are not needed for the transaction of business in that locality.

There is a class of buildings that will be needed in the future and there is a class of buildings under construction now. Those that are under contract are to be appropriated for. A business man will lay aside enough money to meet current obligations, and he will do that first, before he engages in new obligations that he does not have to meet. Before a business man enters into a contract imposing on him additional liabilities he will compute the liabilities, actual and contingent, he is already under and his sources of income that he has to meet them. The American people have a right to demand that kind of business honesty and sagacity from the Members of this House. They have a right to demand that every Member of Congress shall divorce himself from every private, personal, and political interest he may have in the outcome of this legislation——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I can not; and say, that unless he is satisfied that the money shall be expended in that direction, to the exclusion of others, he will vote for the amendment. I hope the amendment will be seriously considered by the Members of this House.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. For a very short question.

Mr. DICKINSON. Does this amendment include the proposition for an appropriation for the Kansas City extension?

Mr. BORLAND. That is excluded by the amendment. If this amendment passes, Kansas City extension waits.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, that was a wholesome lecture delivered to the Members of the House by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. I regret that the gentleman did not think to deliver it when the river and harbor bill was before the House. The river and harbor bill contained an item for Missouri River for $200,000, and that made the river and harbor bill a very, very just bill, and one that every Member of the House should vote for.

Mr. BORLAND. I regret that there was no item in it for Cow Creek.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The money that is put into the Missouri River could just as wisely be dumped into Cow Creek, because Cow Creek will carry in the future years as much freight as the Missouri River; it carries now 35,000 tons of freight in a year, the most of it sand that has been taken out of the river, and yet the gentleman from Missouri, whose town has a substantial public building already provided for, comes smugly before the House and says there ought to be no further appropriations of this kind. He says, however, that where buildings have been begun the contract should be continued.

Now, this motion does not include all the buildings now under way and under contract. I know one that is left out of the motion, unintentionally I presume. That is a little building in Chanute, Kans., provided for seven or eight years ago, $75,000, the balance to complete it. The building is now under way, and it would be a very great hardship not to appropriate the remainder for its completion.

Mr. GILLETT. That was a mistake.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Of course, and I presume it will be put in by unanimous consent, even though no motion was made to. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that Chanute, Kans., for completion, $42,000, be inserted in the alphabetical list.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know if the gentleman from Kansas will then vote for the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; I promise to vote against the amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to insert in the amendment "Chanute, Kans., for completion, $42,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall object to that. Let the gentleman from Massachusetts amend his own amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. I object.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Did the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] object?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, that does not change my position in regard to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] nor with respect to the lecture delivered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. I regret to say in closing that he did not deliver that great moral lecture to the House of Representatives when he was getting $1,200,000 to dump into the Missouri River.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like the privilege of asking the gentleman one question. On page 7 of the bill, in the seventeenth line, there is provision for continuation of the work on the post office at Fulton, Mo., $30,000 being appropriated. I would inquire of the gentleman whether he has put into his amendment all of the buildings that are under construction, and if he has, how does it happen that language is used there?

Mr. GILLETT. Is that building in the amendment or is it not?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is not in the amendment, but they are digging the foundation for the building at the present time.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the Treasury Department furnished this statement of all of the buildings which were either under contract or where work was being done upon them. Is the building under contract?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not know whether it is under contract or not. I know they are making experiments in the soil of the lot which was purchased to find out the character of it.

Mr. GILLETT. They do not consider that as being under construction.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then they do not know what they are talking about.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will if the gentleman gets the time. I have not the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] will be recognized.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I am earnestly opposed to the adoption of the amendment. It is my firm conviction the so-called economy urged by its proponents is fallacious. It is plain to everyone that the effect of the adoption of the amendment would be to contribute over the country generally to the already large numbers of unemployed. The number now unable to find employment is deplorably large, and instead of making an effort to find means to add to this, it would be a more humane and sound policy for the Government to follow to find means for finding employment for every worthy unemployed loyal citizen of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment is illogical and inconsistent within itself, even from the standpoint of economy and a depleted Treasury. It would strike out all of the one thousand dollar appropriations and leave stand the ten, twenty, thirty, and fifty thousand dollar appropriations. Is this the way to discriminate with a view to keeping money in the Treasury? The proposition is also inconsistent and illogical in that while granting considerable appropriations for the completion of buildings now in course of construction it is so cold-blooded and parsimonious as to forbid a paltry $1,000 wherewith to commence preparing for a foundation for wholly new structures. The supporters of the amendment absurdly stand for large in preference to small appropriations while proclaiming that they are trying to prevent a deficit in the Treasury. The buildings which have not been commenced and which have been awaiting a start for from two to four years or more are not to be allowed the trifling sum of $1,000, which will advance their construction one year over what will be realized if the $1,000 appropriations are not allowed. Talk about economy!

Mr. Chairman, is it not plain that the $1,000 appropriations will thus save to the Government one year's rental of buildings for post-office purposes and in many cases for both post-office and Federal court purposes? It is well known that these rentals amount to from $2,000 to $10,000 or more a year, and that thus the Government would make from 100 to 1,000 per cent or more by making the timely investment of $1,000 wherewith to commence these public buildings, and thereby save rent for one year.

Mr. Chairman, aside from the considerations I have mentioned is the broader and more enlightened one—I mean the justice that will be brought to the different cities where these public buildings are to be erected, instead of prolonging the delay which has already very reasonably overtaxed the patience of their respective populations.

Mr. Chairman, in both a direct and an indirect sense—from both the individual, the community, and the public national standpoint—it is uneconomical and even losing in dollars and cents to the Government to not accord $1,000 each wherewith to commence the buildings named in the bill which are attacked by the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. Chairman, I have confidence that the wisdom of the membership of this body by the vote to be expressed will result in the defeat of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I will care to use all of the three minutes. I only want time enough to ask a question of the gentleman from Massachusetts, the author of this amendment, in reference to a building on which the contract has already been let. Some time ago I was informed by the Treasury Department that the contract had been awarded for a building. I would like to inquire whether that item would come within this exclusion?

Mr. GILLETT. I should think that would undoubtedly be in the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. No; it is not in the amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Then either the statement that the Treasury Department made to the gentleman or the statement that they made to me is incorrect, and I do not know which.

Mr. FOSTER. The Treasury Department gave me the information some time ago, and I verified it to-day. If the contract has not been let for this building I will be glad to see that item left out of the bill until such time as the Government is better able to construct public buildings. I know the people in the district I represent do not want appropriations at this time wherever it can be avoided.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. The contract could not be let until an appropriation had been made, because that is contrary to law.

Mr. FOSTER. There was an appropriation made last year for the commencement of the building.

Mr. BORLAND. Under that, of course, the contract could have been let to that extent.

Mr. FOSTER. And this amount is for the completion of the building.

Mr. BORLAND. If an isolated case of that kind is discovered, an emergency appropriation can be made.

Mr. FOSTER. I am asking information as to whether or not an amendment of this kind would affect existing contracts? I only want an understanding of the situation—not asking for appropriation.

Mr. BORLAND. It will not.

Mr. FOSTER. Where contracts have been made?

Mr. BORLAND. If there is money due on a contract, the deficiency appropriation bill will carry it.

Mr. FOSTER. The contract has been made, and the appropriation has been made to start the work, though I do not know that any money is due on the contract.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. HULL. I want to inquire of the gentleman how it is possible, in a case where the Treasury Department has let a contract two months ago, for that department now to know whether the work has already been commenced or not?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know. That is what I am trying to find out. I am in favor of eliminating all items where it can be done. If it is an item that affects the district I represent, I am perfectly willing to have it taken out of the bill, and will vote for this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have always believed that the Government properly should construct public buildings throughout the country, and that the Government ought to carry on a certain amount of Government construction in various directions—public buildings, river and harbor improvements, and other constructive work properly governmental in character. I have opposed a public-buildings bill, I think, only twice since I have been a Member of the House, once when it carried a large appropriation for the Chicago post office—which it were better had never been expended—and the last time when I merely voted against the bill, which, I think, was passed under suspension of the rules.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN], with his usual style—rather coarse, as it seems to me—said I had not opposed that bill because I had an item of $50,000 in it. If it had not been for the statement of the gentleman, I would not make the statement which I am about to make, because I claim no special virtue for myself.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I do not yield.

Mr. DONOVAN. But the gentleman must not misquote me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman refuses to yield.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman is making a misstatement.

Mr. MANN. I am not making a misstatement.

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes; he is.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, with his usual style, is proceeding, notwithstanding that I decline to yield. The gentleman does not know a misstatement from a correct statement. The difference between the gentleman from Connecticut and myself is that my statements are based upon facts, while his are imaginary. [Laughter.]

After the public-building bill passed two years ago providing for the purchase of a site for a post-office building in my district, which might well be constructed in the interest of the public service—and there can be no criticism of the committee for making the recommendation or including it in the bill—but the trouble came last summer, and the deficit in the Treasury began to be in sight, and I could see how rapidly the sums in the Treasury were retreating, without advertising it, so far as I was concerned, I recommended to the Secretary to reject the bids which had been received and not to purchase sites until the Treasury was in better condition to afford the money. So far as I know—I have not particularly canvassed the subject—but, so far as I know, I met with no disapproval from my constituents, who wanted the public building. They were patriotic; they are patriotic. They could see that we could get along fairly well without the immediate construction of this post-office building. They could see at the same time that the Treasury could not get along fairly well if we concluded to expend these sums of money. Now, that is the same situation all over the country. It is not because these buildings can not be properly constructed, not because they may not be needed that I favor the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, but because it is impossible to pay these appropriations out of the Treasury during the next fiscal year without either borrowing money or increasing the taxes. I doubt very much whether the people desire to have the Government borrow the money for this purpose, and I am quite confident that they do not desire an increase of taxation for these purposes. I appreciate that school of governmental economics who believe that in case of hard times the Government ought to appropriate immense sums of money for public improvements in order to give labor to those who are idle and enable them to obtain employment. There is a little to be said on that side of the question; but if that should be the policy of Congress, this amounts to nothing. This is a mere bagatelle. If we should have a policy of the Government to expend public funds at this time in order to give work to the idle, then we ought to borrow hundreds of millions of dollars and engage in public construction on a gigantic scale, and I think we are not prepared to do that. In the end that probably would be more disastrous than it would be beneficial. Where are you going to get the money? It was only a few months ago that the Treasury had $125,000,000 balance available for public appropriations. To-day, a day or two ago, it was $53,000,000; and I did not examine the daily statements which came this morning, and I do not know that I looked at the one of last Saturday, but it has been running down from day to day, and the money that will come in from the income tax will not be sufficient——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to enter into any discussion of the motives of the gentleman from Massachusetts in offering his amendment. I regret to have observed that so brilliant a man and so great a philosopher as the gentleman from Massachusetts is seldom approaches a great question in this House except from an extremely bitter partisan standpoint. But whatever the motive of the gentleman from Massachusetts may be in the motion which he presents, and whatever may be the reasoning with which he attempts to support that motion, the conclusion which he desires to reach is, in my opinion, desirable to be reached, and I shall therefore support the motion. Following a custom which has prevailed through several years in this House, I have from time to time, as public-building bills have been passed, asked for recognition of certain towns in my district, and they have been recognized.

In the bill of 1910 there was a provision to purchase a site at a town in my district. The site was purchased. This bill carries $1,000 for the purpose of beginning the work on the building at some indefinite time in the future. It may be temporarily affected if the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts shall prevail; but, Mr. Chairman, I believe that the people there are willing to leave something in business judgment to me to pass upon. Because of the European war, for which this country is not responsible, a condition has come about whereby the revenues of the Government have fallen. Conditions have become such that it is not only desirable, but extremely important as a sound business proposition, that we shall not make any except necessary expenditures. In my opinion an expenditure for ornamental purposes is not, under the conditions which now exist, desirable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield the gentleman another minute.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And as I understand from the statements of fact which have been made in the course of this argument, the great bulk of the propositions that will be affected by the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts consists of propositions that can not on a business basis be regarded as essential to the conduct of governmental activities. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I take the chances of casting what I consider to be a business vote.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, ordinarily I should be heartily in favor, under existing conditions, of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Opinions differ as to the present condition of our finances and as to what the situation will be during the next fiscal year. Whoever forms any opinion upon this question must do so in the light of information available to him. I have myself given considerable study to the public finances and to the probable situation of the Treasury during the next fiscal year. I can not escape the conclusion from the information afforded to me that there will be a deficit in the Treasury in the next fiscal year which will be unquestionably $30,000,000, and may reach the sum of $80,000,000 or $100,000,000. I do not state these figures as mere idle guesses, but I state them as my opinion after a very thorough and exhaustive examination of our probable receipts and expenditures. My opinions are not shared by others in responsibility. Believing, however, that the opinions which I now express are based upon information that is reliable, I was of the opinion that it would be advisable, from the standpoint of good administration, to reduce the probable expenditures of the Federal Government for the next fiscal year below what it is proposed to expend by at least $50,000,000. That could easily have been done by a radical scaling in the proposed naval program, by the elimination of appropriations for the construction of buildings not yet begun, by the reduction of the appropriations for the maintenance of rivers and harbors to a sum similar to the appropriations for the current year, and by the withholding of appropriations for a number of objects which, although desirable, could readily be deferred until a time when the Treasury would be in better condition to meet the drain upon it.

I was unwilling, however, to ask Members of Congress to refrain from supporting propositions to expend public money to construct public buildings in their respective localities, and to make no attempt in any other direction to curtail the expenses of the Federal Government. And since there has not been any real attempt to curtail the expenditures of the Federal Government in the next fiscal year to such a degree as would eliminate the possibility of a deficit in our revenues, I did not bring myself to agree to support a proposition to eliminate the money proposed for these buildings. I am perfectly frank to say that I did not do it, because I did not believe that the Congress would be in a temper to economize at the expense of public buildings, if other things were not to be touched. The Treasury Department has submitted these estimates with the knowledge of the situation relative to the public finances. It has pressed these items in the belief that the Treasury will not be embarrassed by the appropriation of the money. I am not in accord with that view, but I do not believe that the elimination of these items alone will prevent a very substantial deficit.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURNETT. Is it not a fact that most of these new buildings that are contemplated are the result of authorizations in 1910——

Mr. FITZGERALD. They run through different years.

Mr. BURNETT. And not of 1913?

Mr. FITZGERALD. But perhaps that would be another reason for striking out the authorizations in 1910 and prior years, because I find in the report of the commission created in the last public-building bill a statement that I will read to the committee. The requirement is that the commission shall report as to the desirability, size, accommodation, and cost of the buildings hitherto authorized to the communities in which they are to be located, and also whether existing appropriations shall be increased or diminished to meet such requirements. That commission in their report say:

A general examination of sites and buildings authorized but not consummated has been made and the commission is satisfied that some appropriations and authorizations have been made which are not justified. Other authorizations are too large.

These authorizations were, it is believed, the result of the present unsatisfactory system of providing for and constructing public buildings.

To attempt to make changes in authorizations already made would be to change existing law. Many of the Members of Congress who furnished the facts on which the authorizations were approved are not now in that body. The commission believes, therefore, that it is best to make recommendations as to future appropriations rather than for those already authorized by law.

Therefore the commission recommended that no attempt be made to eliminate the basis existing.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). Under agreement of the committee all time for debate on the amendment and all amendments thereto has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. GILLETT) there were—ayes 40, noes 88.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, REPAIRS, EQUIPMENT, AND GENERAL EXPENSES.

Repairs and preservation: For repairs and preservation of all completed and occupied public buildings and the grounds thereof, under the control of the Treasury Department, and for wire partitions and fly screens therefor, Government wharves and piers under the control of the Treasury Department, together with the necessary dredging adjacent thereto, buildings and wharf at Sitka, Alaska, and the Secretary of the Treasury may, in renting said wharf, require that the lessee shall make all necessary repairs thereto, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, in his discretion, to dispose of said wharf and warehouse upon such terms and conditions as may be for the best interests of the United States; for care of vacant sites under the control of the Treasury Department, such as necessary fences, filling dangerous holes, cutting grass and weeds, but not for any permanent improvements thereon; for repairs and preservation of buildings not reserved by vendors on sites under the control of the Treasury Department acquired for public buildings or the enlargement of public buildings, the expenditures on this account for the current fiscal year not to exceed 15 per cent of the annual rentals of such buildings: Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated not exceeding $100,000 may be used for marine hospitals and quarantine stations, including wire partitions and fly screens for same, and not exceeding $14,000 for the Treasury, Butler, Winder, and Auditors Buildings at Washington, D. C.: Provided further, That this sum shall not be available for the payment of personal services except for work done by contract or for temporary job labor under exigency not exceeding at one time the sum of $100 at any one building, $750,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent to recur to page 9, for the purpose of offering an amendment to strike out the item in line 9:

Humboldt, Tenn., post office: For commencement, $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to recur to page 9 for the purpose of offering an amendment to strike out line 9, providing for the commencement of a post office at Humboldt, Tenn. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I also ask unanimous consent to return to page 16 for the purpose of offering an amendment to strike out lines 8 and 9:

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., post office (extension): For completion, $40,000.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the request. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to recur to page 16 for the purpose of offering an amendment to strike out lines 8 and 9. Is there objection?

Mr. PLATT. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have one more request. I ask unanimous consent to recur to page 16, lines 20 and 21, to strike out the Ridgway, Pa., post office.

Mr. HULINGS. Oh, I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The committee will observe that in line 18, on page 22, there is a reference to Government wharves and piers under the control of the Treasury Department. Then follows a provision for leasing, and so forth. Then appears, beginning with line 23, this provision:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, in his discretion, to dispose of said wharf and warehouse upon such terms and conditions as may be for the best interests of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to conferring upon any executive officer of the United States the power, in his discretion, to dispose of a Government wharf anywhere, but especially one in Alaska. More and more it is being brought home to the shipping interests of the United States that if there is anything for them to remember, and remember all of the time, it is that where a shipping company has absolute control of wharves it can perpetuate one of the most exasperating of monopolies. And more and more the people of the various cities throughout the country have been buying wharves, even at very great expense. New York City was compelled to condemn and purchase wharves and make them public. The city of London was compelled to expend many millions of dollars in condemning and purchasing wharves and making them public. Germany did the same thing at Hamburg. Those who have visited Liverpool know of the magnificent Government docks erected there at great expense. One of the objections made to the improvement of portions of the Mississippi River is that private owners have secured the wharves. Why do they get hold of the wharves? To control the shipping on the river and, if they do not want to engage in shipping themselves, to baffle the efforts of anybody else who may wish to engage in that business.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I will.

Mr. MANN. This proviso is law now; it is in the current law. I do not say whether it is right or wrong, and why it should be covered in here I do not know.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, the Congress has just voted a lot of money for public improvements, railroads, and so forth, in Alaska, which we hope will help to develop that amazingly rich country. The fisheries have not been developed, the mines have not been developed, the forests have not been opened. The bulk of the products is going to be carried in boats when it comes to this country, and the United States Government ought not to sell, nor permit to be sold, the only wharf it has to a steamship company.

The steamship company, if it could get hold of that wharf in Alaska, would have something of an advantage over its rivals and over the Government itself. Public opinion to-day favors the public ownership of at least some wharves when they can be purchased at a reasonable cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Certainly.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. I understand that good wharves are very scarce in Alaska. Can the gentleman inform the House how many there are?

Mr. COOPER. I think the gentleman's statement is correct. I remember that is was said during the debate on the railroad bill that good wharves and good harbors in Alaska are not plentiful.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. I understood that there are only two or three.

Mr. COOPER. Yes; that are in good harbors. It strikes me, Mr. Chairman, that, having seen the evils of exclusive private ownership of wharves, we ought not to allow Secretary McAdoo to dispose of the Government wharf in Alaska to a steamship company nor to any other private corporation, and therefore I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment to strike out that provision to confer such authority on the Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 23, after the word "thereto," strike out all down to and including the word "States," in line 1, page 23.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin has not made so extraordinary a discovery as he imagines. The authority to dispose of the wharf is in the current law. The Treasury Department now has the authority, and although it has not exercised it, it will do it probably before the expiration of the current fiscal year.

There was a very good reason urged for the proposition by the Treasury Department, and the proposition was not to give some private concern an opportunity to get exclusive use of the wharf. The committee couched the authority in such language as would enable the Treasury Department to keep the wharf in public ownership.

The wharf was built in 1845, and we acquired it from the Russian Government at the time Alaska was purchased. The wharf was in very bad condition. It cost about $5,000 to put it in proper shape. It was impossible to lease it unless it was leased for a period not shorter than 10 years. The city of Sitka, however, asked that the wharf be turned over to it. The city was willing to make the necessary repairs and put the wharf in proper condition, and to permit the vessels of the Government of the United States to use the wharf when they found it necessary to do so.

At one time the Revenue-Cutter Service used the wharf. It was in such bad shape, however, that they abandoned it and used the landing place in the island of Japonski instead. At one time the wharf was leased for as much as $75 a month, according to my recollection.

This provision was incorporated in the bill last year in order that the Treasury Department might turn this over to the local authorities and put the burden of getting it in proper shape on the city of Sitka, and obtain for the Government of the United States all the possible advantages that could come from the ownership of the wharf by the Government without being subjected to the burden of keeping it in repair.

I do not think it is material whether the provision remains in the bill or not, because the authority now remains in the department, and I have no doubt it will be exercised before the end of the current year.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York does not meet the question. This bill does not declare that the purchaser of this wharf shall be the city of Sitka, nor does it authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell to the city of Sitka. It authorizes him to sell to any private corporation to which he may feel inclined to sell this public wharf. We have owned the public wharf since Russia sold it to us in the sixties. Five thousand dollars will put it in repair. I have no doubt that many of the steamship companies would be willing to buy and to put it in repair. The Government to-day owns over 90 per cent of Alaska. We have just voted $30,000,000 to open up its resources. We spent many days here debating a proposition to authorize the Government to lease certain lands and other properties up there. And yet here is a proposition to authorize the sale outright of a Government wharf in the same Territory. The Secretary, by this provision, is authorized to sell it to any person or corporation. The city of Sitka is not mentioned in the bill, nor is the Secretary limited to the city of Sitka for his vendee.

Public policy to-day demands the retention of wharves which the public owns.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What can be gained by owning 98 per cent of Alaska and then selling the wharves?

Mr. COOPER. I will repeat the question for the benefit of gentlemen who could not hear. The gentleman from Washington asks what benefit is to be gained when we own 98 per cent of Alaska if we sell our wharf to a private owner. I answer that the benefit will go to the private owner, who will have the wharf that the Government ought to own.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COOPER) there were—ayes 16, noes 14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, OPERATING EXPENSES.

Operating force: For such personal services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary in connection with the care, maintenance, and repair of all public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department (except as hereinafter provided), together with the grounds thereof and the equipment and furnishings therein, including assistant custodians, janitors, watchmen, laborers, and charwomen; engineers, firemen, elevator conductors, coal passers, electricians, dynamo tenders, lampists, and wiremen; mechanical labor force in connection with said buildings, including carpenters, plumbers, steam fitters, machinists, and painters, but in no case shall the rates of compensation for such mechanical labor force be in excess of the rates current at the time and in the place where such services are employed, $2,750,000: Provided, That the foregoing appropriation shall be available for use in connection with all public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, including the customhouse at Washington, D. C., but not including any other public building within the District of Columbia, and exclusive of marine hospitals, quarantine stations, mints, branch mints, and assay offices.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows.

Page 29, line 1, after the word "of," insert the words "nor below."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MANN. It is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is legislation.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; it is legislation, but this is legislation in the bill and my amendment perfects it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think this provision is legislation. I do not think the provision is subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes it is. I did not make it, however, and the Chair will not be called to pass upon that.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MANN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Operating supplies: For fuel, steam, light, water, ice, lighting supplies, electric current for lighting and power purposes, telephone service for custodian forces; removal of ashes and rubbish, snow and ice; cutting grass and weeds, washing towels, and miscellaneous items for the use of the custodian forces in the care and maintenance of completed and occupied public buildings and the grounds thereof under the control of the Treasury Department, and in the care and maintenance of the equipment and furnishing in such buildings; miscellaneous supplies, tools, and appliances required in the operation (not embracing repairs) of the mechanical equipment, including heating, plumbing, hoisting, gas piping, ventilating, vacuum cleaning and refrigerating apparatus, electric-light plants, meters, interior pneumatic-tube and intercommunicating telephone system, conduit wiring, call-bell and signal systems in such buildings (including the customhouse at Washington, D. C., but excluding any other public building under the control of the Treasury Department within the District of Columbia, and excluding also marine hospitals and quarantine stations, mints, branch mints, and assay offices, and personal services, except for work done by contract or for temporary job labor under exigency not exceeding at one time the sum of $100 at any one building), $1,625,000. The appropriation made herein for gas shall include the rental and use of gas governors, when ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury in writing: Provided, That rentals shall not be paid for such gas governors greater than 35 per cent of the actual value of the gas saved thereby, which saving shall be determined by such tests as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item in reference to gas governors has been carried in the bills for quite a while in some form, if I correctly remember, and I have no doubt that there ought to be a provision for gas governors, but since this item went into the bill there have been a great many gas governors invented or used which it is claimed will save half the cost of the gas. They are cheap and are sometimes furnished for almost nothing. Why should we pay to the men who furnish these gas governors on a rental now 35 per cent of the amount of gas that is saved, assuming that these gas governors will save one-half of the gas that they used to consume years ago with the old form of gas light? This looks to me like a pretty ready "cinch" for the fellows who rent the gas governors, if we pay 35 per cent of the amount saved.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This limitation was put in the bill a few years ago when it was found they were paying as high as 50 per cent.

Mr. MANN. I understand. The limitation was a good limitation when it was put in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are very few gas governors used. We went into the matter quite fully last year, but I do not remember what was said about it. There are not many used. Electric light is supplanting gas very largely.

Mr. MANN. Nearly everybody who uses gas for lighting purposes now uses some contrivance which aids to save the gas and has more light, and those contrivances are not expensive. The private owner who would save 50 per cent of his gas—they advertise that they save that, and I do not know whether they do or not—and who would then pay 35 per cent of that saving as rent for a gas governor that would not cost one-quarter the amount to purchase would think that he was being robbed. I do not know whether the Government is or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the maximum.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether they pay this amount or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recall now.

Mr. MANN. Sometimes these things run along without anybody being subject to criticism in the departments or elsewhere.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The matter was gone into quite thoroughly last year, but I do not recall what was said about it.

Mr. MANN. The action of this House in reference to matters which the Government rents has from time to time saved a good deal of money. We used to pay very large sums for renting postage stamp cancellation machines. In the course of time the House restricted the amount of the rent. We restrict the amount that can be paid per gas lamp and all that sort of thing. If we did not, I suppose we would pay more. I do not desire to detain the committee or the gentleman, however. I call it to his attention because if we rent any of these I suspect that we are paying too high a price for them now. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

COAST GUARD.

For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the authorized work of the Coast Guard, as follows:

For pay and allowances prescribed by law for commissioned officers, warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, active and retired, not exceeding 21 cadets and cadet engineers who are hereby authorized, and one civilian instructor, $3,759,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I would like to inquire about the 21 cadets and cadet engineers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That provides for 7 additional to enter in the next year. They have 14 now which are authorized, and this will provide for 7 to go into the class at the beginning of the next year.

Mr. MANN. This is to overcome again that provision which the gentleman inserted a few years ago in the sundry civil appropriation bill that there should be no more cadets?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They say now that they are short, and that they have got to keep educating them.

Mr. MANN. Why not repeal that provision of the law, and we would not have to stick this in every year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This enables us to keep a little more closely in touch with the number they have.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all. The law fixed the number they had before, and that is precisely the number that you are carrying now. You passed a law forbidding them to employ any more without subsequent authorization of Congress, and ever since then you have given the authorization carried in the original law. Of course it is that much more work for the committee and the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, they said at that time they would not need any more.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nineteen of them.

Mr. MANN. They said they would.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was the statement of the very excellent gentleman from Chicago at the head of the Treasury Department. I had so much confidence in the statement of gentlemen from Chicago that the committee acceded——

Mr. MANN. There is another gentleman from Chicago who knew more about it than the Secretary of the Treasury, and informed the gentleman on the floor of the House that the statement was not correct, that they could not run the service without having these cadets.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not like to take sides in a controversy between the two gentlemen from Chicago.

Mr. MANN. Well, I will withdraw the point of order and I will move to strike out the last word. A few days ago we were entertained, as we always are when the gentleman speaks, and instructed, as we always are when the gentleman speaks, by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] in the consideration of some of the appropriation bills on the subject of lump-sum appropriations. I butted in and advised my friend from North Carolina that when it came to lump-sum appropriations he ought to address his remarks to the Committee on Appropriations. Now, in the military bill that is being criticized, in the Agriculture bill that is being criticized, there are some segregations. The Army bill appropriates for certain classes of officers—so much for officers and for enlisted men so much—and some criticism has been indulged in on the Navy bill, where they did estimate separately for the enlisted men and for the commissioned officers; but here is an item for pay and allowances for commissioned officers, warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, active and retired officers, $3,759,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is all statutory.

Mr. MANN. So is it statutory in the Navy and in the Army, and so it is statutory in the main in the Agriculture Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. But if the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] should bring a military bill in here and say so much for the pay of commissioned officers, warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, active and retired, $49,000,000, the Committee on Appropriations would have a cat fit. And yet that is what they do here. Now, no one can tell how much goes to retired officers, no one can tell how much goes to enlisted officers, no one can tell how much goes to the warrant officers, no one can tell how much goes to the commissioned officers. It is the most glaring illustration of the lump-sum appropriations, which could be easily separated, that I have seen for a long time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois has not examined this bill as carefully as usual or he has not been quite as frank in his statement as usual. In the current law and in every sundry civil act prior to this one, appropriations for the Revenue-Cutter Service were all in one single paragraph—one single appropriation. In this bill they are segregated into 12 different items, and they have been segregated with some degree of logic. Under the law the pay of commissioned officers, warrant officers, petty officers, and enlisted men is fixed. It is a matter of computing what the compensation and allowances are and whether they are on the active or retired list, so that we have segregated from other appropriations. The Agricultural bill, which the gentleman from Illinois mentioned, but did not dwell on at any length, had a provision inserted in it, with the gentleman's support, which places the Agricultural Department upon an entirely different footing from any other department of the Government. A few years ago Congress enacted a provision which prohibited any increase in the compensation of persons paid from lump-sum appropriations. A year or two after that law was enacted the Senate put a provision on the Agricultural bill excepting the Agricultural Department from the operations of the law. That department of all others was the most notorious for its violation, or rather for its pursuit, in a practice which was sought to be broken up, and was openly going into the field and inducing the employees of one department of the Government to leave the service of that department and go into the service of the Agricultural Department, holding out the promise of larger compensation out of the lump-sum appropriation, because there is no limitation upon its power to increase compensation; and it is the most lavishly conducted department in the way of indefensible expenditures and manner of compensation of any department of the Government. It has had the help, cooperation, assistance, and protection of the gentleman from Illinois. They say that every man has his weakness, and the weakness of the gentleman from Illinois is his undue favoritism and partiality to the Department of Agriculture, due to the fact that either he himself imagines, or somebody imagines, that he is some sort of an agriculturist or farmer. It is unfortunate for the Government that he has not some other hobby, because if he devoted himself and the same scrutiny and criticism to the Agricultural bill that he does to the other appropriation bills, there would be saved a very considerable sum of money and the Agricultural Department would be a much better department. I am hoping that some germ or microbe or bug some day will get possession of the gentleman from Illinois, so as to divert his interests and activities along other lines than that of an amateur agriculturist, in the interest of the public service.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield.

Mr. MOORE. Coming from a peaceful city, far be it from me to break in between two belligerents, the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Chicago——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would be sorry to disturb the gentleman. I hope he is engaged in that peaceful slumber for which the inhabitants of his city are always noted. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman's very lucid explanation of the lump-sum appropriation which the gentleman from Illinois criticized did arouse me, and I was intensely interested in the explanation of the item as made by the gentleman from New York. It seems to me that everyone who heard the gentleman from New York clearly understands his defense of the item coming in in the way it does. He has told us all about the Agricultural Department and the Agricultural bill, but he has not answered the criticism made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no other answer to make, except what I said at the outset, that these are statutory places and compensations, and it is entirely a matter of computation. If we should divide it up into 100 different divisions, it would still reach the same result.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the gentleman for clearing away the situation in this lucid manner.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman had not awakened when I first made the statement.

Mr. MOORE. I am aroused now by the gentleman's explanation. I want to inquire, however, merely so that it may show in the RECORD, whether this appropriation for the Coast Guard includes all appropriations heretofore made for the Revenue-Cutter Service and the Life-Saving Service?

Mr. FITZGERALD. These appropriations are made upon revised estimates prepared since the approval of the Coast Guard bill. When the Coast Guard bill had been enacted the committee had already finished the work of agreeing upon the recommendations for the Life-Saving and Revenue-Cutter Services, so that in making these recommendations it added to the amount previously decided upon the sum that resulted from mandatory increases as the result of that legislation.

Mr. MOORE. Then there will be no Revenue-Cutter Service appropriations or Life-Saving Service appropriations, but they will all be concentrated under this head of the Coast Guard?

Mr. FITZGERALD. All consolidated under the Coast Guard.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman from New York yielded the floor?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] referred to me as having criticized the item in the bill. I do not want anybody to take it that I am criticizing the item in the bill. I have simply called attention to certain facts. No one has disputed those facts. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] talked about the Agricultural Department, but did not say anything at all about the Coast Guard Service or the appropriation. Now he says that this item in the bill is only to pay certain statutory compensations, and I accept his statement. The other day we passed a Coast Guard bill. I say "we" passed it. I did the best I could to prevent its being passed, but the noble majority in this House—and I am not speaking of the Democratic side—talked of economy and voted for the bill. I believe we were told at that time that it would cost at the present time in the neighborhood of $100,000 a year. I said that in my judgment it would cost, to begin with, nearer half a million dollars a year, and how much it would be in the end no one could tell, but probably nearly a million dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In this bill we added——

Mr. MANN. I am making this speech.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to give the gentleman some information.

Mr. MANN. I have the information, and will give it to the gentleman if he has not got it.

For the current year, before these services were combined and the Coast Guard bill passed, we appropriated for the maintenance of the Revenue-Cutter Service $2,350,000, and for the maintenance of the Life-Saving Service $2,406,700, or a total for the maintenance of the two services of $4,756,700, and because of the passage of the Coast Guard bill, we have increased the items for the maintenance of the service by $411,200. The gentleman says that these increases are statutory law, which we have to pay. Well, they were not statutory until very recently to the same amount of appropriations as now. The little Coast Guard bill that we passed the other day, which gentlemen had been begged for from various portions of the country, which they were told would cost the Government only a nominal amount, is already costing the Government, right at the beginning, before it has really gone into effect, as to the retirement features, $411,200 more for next year than it would have cost if the Coast Guard bill had not passed. Of course there will be a deficiency appropriation for the balance of this year after a while.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To be accurate I want to say for the RECORD that the mandatory provisions of the Coast Guard bill added $386,228 to the appropriation. An increase of $25,000 was due to other causes than to the mandatory provisions of that bill. The $25,000 would have been added regardless of the passage of that bill.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is not a question of "perhaps," it is a question of fact. In order that the RECORD may not be criticized I want to state that the mandatory provisions of the Coast Guard bill have increased this appropriation by $386,228 more than would otherwise have been carried for the two services if the law had not been enacted.

Mr. MANN. That was an act of economy, of course?

Mr. FITZGERALD. And there probably will be estimates for deficiencies for the balance of the current year.

Mr. MANN. I take it there will be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. About $100,000 for the balance of the current fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. And 10 years from now the two services combined because of the Coast Guard bill will cost the Government at least $1,000,000 more than if they had not been combined, and that is just a waste of that much money, so far as the Government is concerned. It is a present which the Members of this House, by quite a large majority, made to the constituents of a few of the Members because they begged sufficiently hard. Their constituents ought to know it, because their constituents will pay the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 12 clerks to district superintendents, at such rate as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine, not to exceed $900 each, $10,800.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, a typographical error, in line 7, page 32, in the word "to," will be corrected by the Clerk.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel for vessels, stations, and houses of refuge, $277,000.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, for the past two days the public press has contained reports that a merchant vessel of one of the belligerent nations went into an English port on Saturday sailing under the American flag. If any protest or criticism of this unwarranted use of our national colors has been made by the Executive or by the Department of State, neither the country nor the Congress has been informed of that fact. In my opinion this is a very serious violation not only of that comity which prevails between civilized nations but as well of the principles of international law, and an incident, if allowed to go without protest, which is likely to lead us into serious international complications.

The circumstance that citizens of the United States were traveling on the boat does not alter the situation in any degree. Persons and residents of the United States in time of war who desire to go to foreign countries and instead of embarking on American ships or upon ships of some neutral country, if they wish to embark upon a boat of any belligerent nation, do so with the full knowledge of all the contingencies and extra hazards that apply to conditions of war.

Dr. Taylor in his American work on international law says:

At sea as on land the use of false colors in war is forbidden. When a vessel is summoned to lie to, or before a gun is fired in action, the national colors should be displayed. And yet it is lawful to use false colors as a ruse, as Nelson did while he lay off Barcelona for a long time showing the French flag, with the object of drawing out the ships of Spain, then allied with France.

It will be observed that the use of another flag by Nelson under these circumstances was upon a battleship, and he used the flag of a belligerent ally for the purpose of deceiving the enemy. And we know that the use of almost any ruse by the navy or army in conflict to the disadvantage of the enemy is permissible. That does not alter the principle to which I am referring.

Calvo, in his work on international law, has this to say:

The flag is the visible sign of the national character of a ship. Each State has its own colors, under which its nationals sail and which can not be used without its permission.

The assumption of a flag of a foreign State without its authorization is considered as a violation of international law, as a device both fraudulent and injurious to the honor of such State. Both the State whose flag is wrongfully used and that in regard to which the use of the false flag is made have the right to demand the punishment of the guilty persons, and, according to circumstances, to punish them themselves.

I think it will appear upon the most casual consideration that a failure to protest against the unwarranted use of the national colors in this way is a tacit consent to their use. It must be so interpreted by the other belligerent powers and as a practical favoritism to the nation whose citizens undertake to deceive the enemy by the use of the flag of a neutral power.

If Great Britain could assume the flag of the American merchant marine for her craft, the merchant marine of any other country could do the same; and if the belligerent countries can fly the American colors over their vessels, the neutral powers can do the same, and our flag would become an object of disrespect throughout the world.

If we allow the merchant marine of belligerent countries to fly our flag to deceive their enemies, it will soon cease to afford protection to American citizens and to the American merchant marine. When the American flag floats over a ship at sea it should mean that the ship, its passengers, and cargo will be protected to the last limit of American power.

I believe that Congress in this short session should pass an act prohibiting the use of the American colors on any but American vessels and making it an offense for the master of any foreign vessel, whether of a belligerent or a peaceful nation, to fly the American flag over a foreign ship. Severe penalties for the violation of the statute should be provided, including the confiscation of the boat as well as punishment of the commander whenever the ship may return to an American jurisdiction.

I can not see how the Nation can protect the dignity and honor of its flag unless it does something of that kind. The American flag is the insignia of American sovereignty, and its use by any other nation without our consent is unwarranted and ought to bring from Congress some action on the subject. In my opinion, if the President of the United States and his Cabinet will cease blocking legislation for the balance of this session with the impossible shipping bill, which is liable to draw us into serious complications——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask for one minute more.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum. I only ask for one minute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not object to one minute.

Mr. MARTIN. I only desire to conclude the sentence that I had started upon. If instead of clogging the passage of necessary appropriation bills through Congress the captain of the team would organize for some teamwork upon a patriotic measure of this kind which would place before the world in a proper light the respect of American citizenship for American colors, he would be conferring a service upon the country.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

For the work of engraving and printing, exclusive of repay work, during the fiscal year 1916, of not exceeding 74,000,000 delivered sheets of United States notes, 13,500,000 delivered sheets of national-bank notes and Federal reserve currency, 90,000,000 delivered sheets of internal-revenue stamps, 8,000,000 delivered sheets of emergency-revenue stamps, 200,000 delivered sheets of customs stamps, 4,225,000 delivered sheets of opium orders and special tax stamps required under act of December 7, 1914, and 1,600,500 delivered sheets of checks, drafts, and miscellaneous work, as follows.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I wanted to find out the object of limiting the amount of sheets that can be printed under this paragraph. Why is that done?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the number of sheets of various kinds are incorporated in the bill in order to enable the committee to keep some track of what is done in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. For the last few years, ever since an attempt has been made to ascertain just what was being done, the absolute inability to reconcile the figures of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing with the figures of the United States Treasurer's office has been such that it has been impossible to work with any intelligence. We have now given them enough money to enable the bureau to deliver a certain number of sheets of various kinds. That puts the work upon a logical and proper basis.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that provide for printing all that is estimated for for the coming year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it does not; not all that was asked, because there is always a difference of opinion between the committee and the department as to just how much work should be done. This provides for as much work as was authorized for the current year, and in addition emergency currency, amounting to $500,000,000, was thrown open to the extent of over $200,000,000, and the balance of two hundred and odd million dollars gives an additional reserve which heretofore had not been counted, so that the committee believed that for the present, in view of present conditions, this number of sheets of the various kinds will be sufficient.

Mr. FOSTER. Will it supply all that is necessary for the coming year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was the opinion of the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. But under this provision the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing could not print more than that number?

Mr. FITZGERALD. He can not deliver more than that number. It says "deliver," because 5 per cent is usually allowed for wastage. They spoil about 5 per cent of the sheets in the work.

Mr. FOSTER. And the gentleman thinks that furnishes all that is necessary?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it furnishes all that is necessary for the proper conduct of the Government. It may be that later on it will be determined that additional revenue stamps may be needed, and if they are the committee will be ready to provide for the appropriation to furnish them. There is a continual controversy as to the amount of new United States notes that ought to be issued.

Mr. FOSTER. And this is simply to find out what is done each year instead of going on in that way without knowing?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Without having any basis on which to work, except figures that are never to be reconciled.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this is a limitation on the amount of work that can be done, and it is nothing further than that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is all.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice here in line 18, on page 33, reference is made to 74,000,000 delivered sheets of United States "notes." On page 38 reference is made to 73,500,000 sheets of United States "securities."

Mr. FOSTER. Would not those be the gold notes and the greenbacks?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; these are for United States notes—gold and silver certificates.

Mr. MANN. Why do you call them notes in one place and securities in the other? It refers to the same thing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What was the other page?

Mr. MANN. Page 38, lines 5 and 6.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will notice it says "for distinctive paper for United States securities, not less than 73,500,000 sheets."

Mr. MANN. Yes; but on page 33 it says 74,000,000 sheets of United States notes. The context of the bill shows that this reference is to the same thing. In one place it is called "securities" and in the other "notes," just as in one place reference is made to Federal reserve bank currency and in another case Federal reserve currency. On page 33 it is called "Federal reserve currency" and on page 38 it is called "Federal reserve bank currency." I suppose the latter is the correct form, but it ought to be the same in both places, I think.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under this title, "Distinctive paper for United States securities," my recollection is that sometimes paper is for other forms of securities and notes, for instance, bonds, so that the word "securities" would be used.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but in the other place, when you provide for 74,000,000 sheets of notes and then authorize 73,500,000 altogether for securities, including notes, it is very evident that you are not providing for many other things except notes, because you are shy a half million sheets. That might easily have been made up in different places, but it is perfectly plain that means the same thing, and it certainly does.

I think the gentleman ought to have time to examine that, and it seems to me, inasmuch as we have been running now for seven hours, and we do not know how long we will run to-morrow, that the gentleman ought to move to rise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, as the House was not notified that I would ask it to stay to-night, I will move to rise now, but I give notice now that I will ask the House to stay to-morrow night. First, however, Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment which I offered submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, line 1, strike out the word "seventh" and insert the word "seventeenth."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 21318, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WALTERS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. WALTERS. To ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONNOLLY of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the requests of the gentlemen? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 19424. An act to extend the time for the completion of the municipal bridge at St. Louis, Mo.

JUDGE ALSTON G. DAYTON.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Judiciary Committee, I desire to present a report (No. 1381) on House resolution 541 in reference to an investigation of the alleged official misconduct of Judge Alston G. Dayton. I ask that it be printed, and I will call up the report probably to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report on House resolution 541, directing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire and report whether the action of the House is necessary concerning the alleged official misconduct of Alston G. Dayton.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed and referred to the House Calendar.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, did I understand the gentleman to say that he intended to ask the House to remain in session right along to-morrow until what time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, until 10 or half past 10.

Mr. MANN. Without taking a recess for dinner?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. If we are going to do that——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask, in order to expedite this bill, that by unanimous consent we agree that this bill shall have the right of way next Calendar Wednesday, and suggest to the gentleman that he ask for unanimous consent to meet at 11 o'clock on both days. Pending the request of the gentleman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with next Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama, pending the request of the gentleman from New York, asks unanimous consent that we dispense with the business in order on next Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what committee has the call on Wednesday?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and they are not adverse to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the hour of meeting for the rest of this week, providing the sundry civil bill is under consideration, be fixed at 11 o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that during the rest of this week the House meet at 11 o'clock a. m., providing the sundry civil bill continues that long. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LINCOLN MEMORIAL.

The Chair has been requested to state to the House that the Lincoln Memorial Commission wants the signatures of all the Members of this House to be put in the corner stone which is to be laid on next Friday, and in order to do that they have fixed parchment sheets with a kind of ink that they say will never fade and a special pen, and the Chair is going to have them put on a table in the lobby so everybody can sign it. They want the Kentucky delegation to sign in a body and the Illinois delegation to do the same thing.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet at 11 a. m. to-morrow, Tuesday, February 9, 1915.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $5,000 for protection and improvement of Glacier National Park, Mont. (H. Doc. No. 1576); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules of claims amounting to $650,373.04 allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations, the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874 (H. Doc. No. 1579); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims amounting to $29,189.08 which have been presented to this department and require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 1577); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Navy of the 1st instant reporting that the Navy Department has considered, ascertained, adjusted, and determined that the sum of $140.25 is due the owners of the German ship Indra for damages for which a vessel of the Navy was found to be responsible (H. Doc. No. 1578); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting estimates of appropriations for rent of buildings for use of Government officials at Boise, Idaho; Charlotte, N. C.; Concord, N. H.; Harrisburg, Pa.; Lincoln, Nebr.; Madison, Wis.; Newport, R. I.; Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Reading, Pa.; Sandusky, Ohio; Toledo, Ohio; and Mount Clemens, Mich. (H. Doc. No. 1580); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a communication from the Attorney General, of February 6, 1915, submitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredations cases, amounting to $6,279, which require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 1581); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, of the 6th instant, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for transportation of troops and equipment to and from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, for preparing camp sites, construction of buildings, installation of water system, oiling of roads, etc., to be immediately available and to remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1582); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

8. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting copy of a communication of the commissioner, United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation, submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for expenses of the board for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 1583); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

9. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $292,000 for the enforcement of the provisions of the act of December 17, 1914, entitled "An act to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or cocoa leaves, their salts, derivatives, and preparations, and for other purposes (H. Doc. No. 1584); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

10. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments rendered against the Government by the district courts of the United States as submitted by the Attorney General and which require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 1585); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. GILMORE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18310) to acquire a site for a public building at Hartford, Conn., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1375), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SINNOTT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2223) to authorize the use of the revenues in the Crater Lake National Park in the management of the same, and the construction, repair, and improvement of roads, trails, and bridges in the park, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1376), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Ways and Means was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19828) for the relief of the Longini Mexican Hat Co., of San Antonio, Tex., and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 9, 1915.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, from whom proceedeth all things, without whom we are nothing, impart unto us light, strength, courage, that we may meet the duties and responsibilities of the new day, and receive at its close Thine approbation and the approval of our own consciences; in the name of Him who taught us life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and all praise, glory, and honor shall be Thine forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FEDERAL BUILDING, HONOLULU, HAWAII.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 5295) to amend existing legislation providing for the acquisition of a site and the construction of a building thereon for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, customhouse, and other governmental offices at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes, and to agree to the conference asked by the Senate on said bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. CLARK of Florida, Mr. BURNETT, and Mr. AUSTIN.

ALSTON G. DAYTON.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, I desire to call up House resolution 541, directing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire and report whether the action of the House is necessary concerning the alleged official misconduct of Alston G. Dayton.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the resolution.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, by some oversight this resolution and the report upon it were not printed last night, and I ask unanimous consent to consider it nevertheless, and that the resolution be printed in the RECORD to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider the resolution at the present time, and that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

[House Report No. 1381 to accompany H. Res. 541.]

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration House resolution 541, relating to the alleged official misbehavior of Alston G. Dayton, United States district judge from the Northern District of West Virginia, report the same back with the recommendation that it be amended to read as follows; and as so amended, that it be adopted:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report whether the action of this House is necessary concerning the alleged official misbehavior of Alston G. Dayton, United States district judge for the Northern District of West Virginia; whether he, the said Alston G. Dayton, has unlawfully conspired with certain corporations and individuals to bring about the removal from office of the late John J. Jackson, judge of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia; whether he has shown marked favoritism to certain corporations having extensive litigation in his court; whether he has summoned on juries in his court persons connected with certain corporations to which he has shown marked favoritism during his term of office; whether he has abused his power and influence as judge to further the interests of his son, Arthur Dayton; whether he has violated the acts of Congress regulating the selection of jurors; whether he has lent his services as judge to the coal operators of West Virginia by improperly issuing injunctions; whether he has shown hatred and bitterness toward miners on trial in his court; whether he has used his office as judge to discourage and prevent said miners from exercising their lawful right to organize and peaceably assemble under the laws of the United States and the State of West Virginia; whether he has conspired with certain corporations and individuals in the formation of a carbon trust in violation of law; whether he has openly stated that he would not permit the United Mine Workers of America to exist within the jurisdiction of his court; whether he has stated in open court that the United Mine Workers of America are criminal conspirators; and whether he has been guilty of any misbehavior for which he should be impeached."

And in making this investigation the said committee is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, employ a clerk and a stenographer, if necessary, and is also authorized to appoint a subcommittee to act for and on behalf of the whole committee whenever and wherever it may be deemed advisable to take testimony for the use of said committee. The said subcommittee while so employed shall have the same powers in respect to obtaining testimony as are herein given to said Committee on the Judiciary, with a sergeant at arms, by himself or deputy, who shall serve the process of said committee or subcommittee and shall attend the sittings of the same as ordered and directed thereby.

The Speaker shall have authority to sign and the Clerk to attest subpœnas for any witness or witnesses.

The expense of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers approved by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and approved by the Committee on Accounts and evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, on the 12th of last June the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] impeached Judge Dayton on 26 separate and distinct charges. The House referred the resolution and the charges to the Judiciary Committee, and those charges have been investigated carefully by a subcommittee for three or four months. The subcommittee reported, eliminating about 13 or 14 of the charges, but felt that there was enough testimony to authorize an investigation of the charges set forth in the resolution which has been read. We felt that it would be the best thing for the country, for the judge himself, for the House, and for the judiciary that this investigation be had. These charges have been published in the newspapers of the country, and the Judiciary Committee were almost of the unanimous opinion that for the good of all concerned they should be investigated, and that if true the judge should be impeached, but that if not true he should be acquitted and reinstated in the regard and confidence of the country. Therefore I move the passage of the resolution which I have just presented.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. WEBB. With pleasure.

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Did the committee in arriving at its conclusion consider any part of the evidence tendered on behalf of Judge Dayton?

Mr. WEBB. I do not think the committee did officially consider Judge Dayton's defense as presented to the committee in affidavits. I think each one of the subcommittee read Judge Dayton's affidavits, but I do not think they considered them in connection with making their report.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I yield with pleasure to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. DANFORTH. I know the gentleman will not make a misstatement intentionally.

Mr. WEBB. Not for the world.

Mr. DANFORTH. But I think it is not a fact that each member of the subcommittee in charge of this matter did examine the affidavits. I think the assertions are quite to the contrary, and that they have not been considered.

Mr. WEBB. I may be in error as to one of the subcommittee. I am informed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] that he did make an examination of Judge Dayton's affidavits.

Mr. DANFORTH. The gentleman is in error as to two members of the subcommittee.

Mr. WEBB. Did not you yourself read them?

Mr. DANFORTH. No; I carefully abstained from examining them.

Mr. WEBB. Then, of course, I do not make the statement. The affidavits of Judge Dayton were in the committee room, and the subcommittee had access to them.

Mr. DANFORTH. In other words, the entire investigation has been ex parte on papers that were not testimony in any sense of the word—hearsay affidavits.

Mr. WEBB. That is true, Mr. Speaker. In the nature of the case we could not have any trial of it, because the subcommittee had no power to subpœna witnesses, and it was not their province to try the case. The duty of our committee was simply to make a preliminary investigation to ascertain whether we should recommend to the House a full and complete investigation.

Mr. DANFORTH. I am not objecting to the investigation, because I think it will be in the interest of justice and fairness.

Mr. WEBB. I understand; and I am glad to agree to what the gentleman says, for I think the same.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the pending resolution providing for an investigation as to charges of misconduct which have been made against Judge Alston G. Dayton, I desire to state with authority that neither Judge Dayton nor his friends have any desire to impede nor obstruct, even if it were possible, the passage of this resolution, nor the investigation which will be made under its authority. On the contrary, I am advised that Judge Dayton courts the fullest and most complete investigation that can be made of his personal conduct from every standpoint since he has been on the Federal bench. In common with other personal friends of Judge Dayton, and with no knowledge of the specifications under which testimony pro and con will be taken, other than their reading by the Clerk in the presence of the House a few moments ago, I desire to express the hope and belief that his answer to any charges of misconduct of any nature or from any source will be complete and conclusive. I am fully convinced that the Committee on the Judiciary and its able chairman have approached this matter conscientiously and have acted, as the chairman has just stated, with due regard to the serious importance of the issue thus raised, the best interests of the public and of Judge Dayton himself, and the honor and integrity of the high position involved. I am further convinced that the Judiciary Committee of this House will discharge its duties under this resolution with absolute fairness and impartiality, according to accusers and accused the fullest opportunity of presenting the facts, and in the end that it will make a report to this House as to its findings that will be judicial in its fairness.

I therefore will vote for this resolution, and I ask all the friends of Judge Dayton upon this floor, many of whom have served with him here as a Member of Congress for 10 years and personally know the high character of his attainments, to do likewise.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Is martial law still in force up in West Virginia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is it in force out in Ohio?

Mr. GORDON. No, sir; it is not.

The SPEAKER. This is out of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WEBB, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

THE LINCOLN MEMORIAL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces again for the accommodation of Members that the Lincoln Memorial Commission desires that all Members shall write their names on the parchment which is to be deposited in the corner stone of the Lincoln Monument. As it is difficult to write on parchment, they want it written with a special ink and a special pen, which will be found in the Speaker's lobby. The Members from Kentucky are to sign seriatim.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21318, the sundry civil appropriation bill. And pending that motion, before the general exodus occurs, I want to say to Members that I shall ask the House to remain in session for some time to-night.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For wages of plate printers, at piece rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants when employed, $1,561,421, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes or Treasury notes of larger denominations than those that may be canceled or retired, except in so far as such printing may be necessary in executing the requirements of the act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes, approved March 14, 1900.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if he gave any further consideration to the suggestion that I made to him about the paragraph at the bottom of page 33 in regard to printing Federal reserve currency?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee has used the language which is in common use in the department and which has been used here for a good many years. I have not had an opportunity to inquire along the line suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, but I will do so before the bill is completed.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can see that on page 38 they refer to Federal reserve bank currency, and on page 33 to Federal reserve currency. There may be a distinction, although I can not imagine how there would be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a distinction between Federal reserve currency and Federal reserve bank currency, but I wish to make the inquiry so that if any change is to be made we will be sure that there is no error made.

Mr. MANN. If there is a distinction, there is an error in the bill, because one provision authorizes the purchase of 13,500,000 sheets of paper, and the other provision is to print it. If there is a distinction, you buy the paper for one kind of currency and print it for another kind. That is all the paper you can buy for that purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am having an inquiry made so as to get the language that will be correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For engravers' and printers' materials and other materials except distinctive paper, miscellaneous expenses, including paper for internal-revenue stamps, and for purchase, maintenance, and driving of necessary horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, when, in writing, ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury, $615,526, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I offer the following amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 35, line 10, after the word "necessary," insert the words "motor propelled."

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman. I would like to have the Clerk read the paragraph as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

For engravers' and printers' materials and other materials except distinctive paper, miscellaneous expenses, including paper for internal-revenue stamps, and for purchase, maintenance, and driving of necessary motor-propelled horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, when, in writing, ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury, $615,526, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. I wondered how they could have "motor-propelled horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles."

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment should be modified by adding the word "and" to it, so that you insert the words "motor-propelled and."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be modified.

The Clerk read the amendment as modified, as follows:

After the word "necessary," in line 10, page 35, insert the words "motor-propelled and."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I notice this paragraph increases the appropriation from $470,000, as it is now in the current law, to $615,526. Is that for the paper for the internal-revenue stamps or is it for automobiles and passenger-carrying vehicles?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is for the paper for revenue stamps, which was transferred from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing has purchased all of the other paper, and it was thought advisable to allow them to purchase the paper for the internal-revenue stamps.

Mr. MANN. The increase is for paper for internal-revenue stamps made necessary by the war-revenue tax.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is for all internal-revenue stamps.

Mr. MANN. How much is to be used for automobiles?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have an automobile wagonette—I think that is what they term it—two electrical vehicles of 1,000 pounds capacity, on which they carry the mail, samples, stamps, and for general passenger service; also an electrical dump wagon and two electric trucks. They have a wagonette, I understand, in which they transport the persons who witness the destruction of securities from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. I notice in this bill there are twenty-odd places where you provide for passenger-carrying vehicles of some kind, and usually put in a limitation, as I recall, of the amount that can be expended for that purpose. I think it is a proper limitation in view of the fact that it is stated that the Secretary of War has purchased an automobile for private use out of an appropriation for the transportation of the Army, an item carrying a good many million dollars. How can the gentleman tell how much of the $615,000, which is an increase of $145,000 over the existing appropriation, will be used for the purchase of automobiles for the Treasury Department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not expected that any will be used for the purchase of automobiles. The motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles are somewhat different in connection with the bureau than with other services, because in addition to the members of the committee they carry the securities.

Mr. MANN. The committee last year inserted a provision in reference to automobiles and other passenger-carrying vehicles. What good does that do, when you make an appropriation of $615,000, all of it available for the purchase of these vehicles? What is accomplished by the law which was passed? I could not see what was going to be accomplished when it was passed, but what does it accomplish where there is no limitation except to insert the language? They will have the same authority hereafter as they have had heretofore.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In many of the items the word "purchase" has been eliminated. In others a limitation of the amount to be expended has been inserted.

Mr. MANN. That is what I was trying to get at. Why is there no limitation in this item?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Depending very largely upon the information obtained as to the character of the vehicles used and what was contemplated. Under this provision, with the information obtained from year to year, it is possible to keep track of and see whether any attempt is made to utilize moneys for purposes not contemplated or stated when the authorization is made.

Mr. MANN. There is a limitation in some of the items, but there is no limitation in this item.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true; there is not.

Mr. MANN. It would be very convenient for the Secretary of the Treasury, if he should desire an automobile, to say that he had the active consent of Congress and a provision authorizing him to purchase an automobile for his use out of an appropriation which specifically provided for it, with no limitation as to the amount.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the committee has tried to adapt language to the peculiar situation developed by this paragraph. Of course, it is possible for the departments to abuse authority which is reposed in them under the law. The committee has felt that there was no likelihood that the Secretary of the Treasury would attempt to get an automobile for personal use out of an appropriation of this character, where it is clearly intended for the service of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. There are some things that more or less influence members of the committee in these matters, and perhaps one thing is the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury already has an automobile of his own, and there is little likelihood of his being tempted to get one at Government expense.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, certainly all members of the Cabinet are conscientious, and certainly the Secretary of War is quite as conscientious as any of the others, if not more so, and yet it is said that he purchased an automobile out of an appropriation for transportation of the Army. There is no connection in fact between transporting the Secretary of War and his family around the city of Washington with the transportation of the Army. I am not criticizing the action of the Secretary of War, but I think there is no further reach between purchasing an automobile for the Secretary of the Treasury out of an appropriation for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing than there is in purchasing an automobile for the Secretary of War out of an appropriation for the transportation of the Army.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, my recollection is that in the report furnished to Congress pursuant to a resolution asking for the number of automobiles in the various departments, and the appropriations for purchasing the same, it was stated that the automobile purchased out of the appropriation for the transportation of the Army had been obtained for the purpose of transporting the Secretary of War, the Chief of Staff, and other officers of the Army. Whether the Chief of Staff and other officers ever have an opportunity to use the automobile is something that I can not answer. I do not hesitate to say that I believe that the purchase of an automobile for the use of the Secretary of War out of an appropriation for the transportation of the Army can not be justified. Congress never had any such intention, and it took a very extraordinary construction of the appropriation to justify it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is something like the purchase of an oil painting, of which there is, I believe, one instance in the State Department, where they had painted the portrait of the Secretary of State and charged up a part of the price of it to the appropriation for paint and the rest, I believe, to the appropriation for carpenter work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was under another administration.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I do not think there is any distinction between Republican and Democratic administrations in these respects.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not certain whether that portion of the expenditure was charged up to paint or to whitewash.

Mr. MANN. I believe it was charged to oils and paints, and the frame to some other appropriation like carpenter work, or something of that kind. They occasionally do those things where they have a chance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; they all look alike at the Treasury Department, regardless of the politics of the administration.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; these things are not chargeable to one administration as against another. It will always be done unless Congress protects from it by legislation.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The gentleman from Illinois is usually very accurate in his statements, and I think the majority of the Members accept them as facts when made on the floor of the House. I should like to ask him his authority for the statement that the Secretary of War has purchased for his own private use an automobile out of the appropriations made for the transportation of the Army?

Mr. MANN. That is not denied, I believe?

Mr. GOULDEN. I never heard it stated before, and it seems so doubtful that I am inclined to ask the gentleman for his authority.

Mr. MANN. It was stated on the floor of the House the other day publicly by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], and while I do not say that is the fact, it is my understanding it is not disputed. I would not say that it is merely for his private use. You can call it official use if you desire. It is used by himself and his family, and I think properly so. I do not object to giving any of the Cabinet officers an automobile, so far as I am concerned, for social uses. They have certain social obligations, but I think it were better for Congress to know when it makes an appropriation whether it is to be used for the purchase of an automobile or not. I would give each one of the Cabinet officers an automobile and maintain it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. GOULDEN. But the gentleman would have it appear in the bill specifically appropriated for that purpose?

Mr. MANN. I would say so, and not have one of the Cabinet officers charge it up to some appropriation which was never intended to be used for that purpose.

Mr. GOULDEN. Is it not a fact that each Cabinet officer now has or is entitled to an automobile?

Mr. MANN. No; it is not the fact. I think the only Cabinet officers who have automobiles at the expense of the Government are the Secretary of War and the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. GOULDEN. My question was intended to apply to official business.

Mr. MANN. Those are two-horse carriages; they do not have expensive carriages.

Mr. GOULDEN. I know I have seen the Postmaster General riding in a carriage that looked as if it had been imported from his native State of Texas—driver and all.

Mr. MANN. The Postmaster General rides behind a very nice $1,500-team of horses.

Mr. GOULDEN. I have never seen them.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman has not seen him drive it lately.

Mr. GOULDEN. This was six months or a year ago. I imagine that the gentleman is too busy to indulge much in this pleasure.

Mr. MANN. He has a fine span of horses costing $1,500, and he is worthy of it.

Mr. GOULDEN. Surely, and I congratulate him on having them.

Mr. MANN. They are expensive for hard times.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I heartily indorse the statement made by the gentlemen from Illinois with regard to the high character of the Secretary of War and when this statement was made that he had secured an automobile, charged to the Army appropriation, for private or personal uses, I did not credit it, and hence I asked the question of the gentleman from Illinois to know just what his authority was for the statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is considered as withdrawn.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 13, after the word "Treasury," insert:
"Provided, That no part of the appropriation herein made shall be expended for motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles intended for other than official use."

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will allow. There is a general statute to that effect.

Mr. MOORE. I do not know whether the gentleman will accept that amendment. But to me the colloquy which took place between the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Illinois was most interesting. The gentleman from New York explained his own amendment to include motor-propelled vehicles, but established no dividing line between the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase automobiles for official or for personal use. It seems to be an open question still whether the Secretary of the Treasury, under this lump-sum appropriation, would have the right to buy 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, or 10 motor-propelled vehicles if he so desired. Apparently there is no limitation upon him in this respect. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] that the Secretary of the Treasury or any Cabinet officer ought to be provided with a motor-propelled vehicle for his own use. Officials of a great Government like the United States, such as Cabinet officers, ought not to be compelled to make their official or social calls in Washington on trolley cars. These officials have a status that ought to be recognized. It seems to me that one of the most ridiculous things the Democratic Party ever undertook to do in this House was to deny the Speaker of the House an automobile. Why should these great officers of the Government, upon whom we place great responsibility and of whom we expect the best service they can give, be compelled to go about their business, socially or officially, hampered by delays at street corners or made to hang onto car straps? If they are to have automobiles we ought to make specific appropriation therefor.

The committee itself ought to have the courage to say openly and directly that the Secretary or the Speaker should have an automobile, and the phraseology of this bill ought not to be so hedged about as to leave it to the Cabinet officer to buy a machine if he needs one or to buy more than one.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman is in favor of specifically providing for an appropriation for the purchase of an automobile for each Cabinet officer as well as the Speaker of the House for any and all purposes.

Mr. MOORE. I believe there ought to be no subterfuge about it.

Mr. GOULDEN. I indorse the gentleman's statement heartily.

Mr. MOORE. We ought not to make an appropriation in this way and leave a wide discretion to the Cabinet officer. He ought to know exactly what his duties are and what his perquisites are, if you care to put it in that form.

Mr. GOULDEN. Again I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. So that he would know what Congress intends a Cabinet officer should have.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I will.

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman spoke about a Cabinet officer and others being given automobiles for their use in getting about. What reason or claim has a Cabinet officer for a private automobile furnished by the Government beyond that of any Congressman or any Senator who is compelled to dance attendance at the departments, whereas the heads of the departments never visit the Congressmen themselves.

Mr. MOORE. Well, there are only 9 Cabinet officers and there are 435 Members of Congress, and I think the situation is entirely different. These Cabinet officers have tremendous responsibilities. We impose executive and administrative responsibility upon them. I grant you that a Member of Congress has rights, and that those rights ought to be respected even in a Cabinet officer's office. I do not approve the practice which seems to prevail in some offices where a member of another body walks in over the head of a Member of the House.

Mr. SLOAN. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Under our Constitution as established, has any Cabinet officer any greater responsibilities or duties than any Member of this House or the other body?

Mr. MOORE. Well, I think he has. I think a Cabinet officer of the United States has a tremendous responsibility. We impose it upon him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two or three minutes to answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLOAN. A Cabinet officer is a creature of Congress, is he not?

Mr. MOORE. Not necessarily; a Cabinet officer is appointed by the President, and the President has a distinct function from that of Congress. Sometimes he does not recognize the function of Congress.

Mr. SLOAN. I mean were not these positions created by the lawmaking body of this country?

Mr. MOORE. The Constitution of the United States creates the President, and the President has the power to appoint.

Mr. SLOAN. But the positions themselves are created by law, are they not?

Mr. MOORE. The departments are created by Congress, of course, and we provide for the payment of their salaries. But I want to say to the gentleman that, while I do not agree with the Secretary of the Treasury in many of his policies, yet the Secretary of the Treasury is an officer of the Government, upon whom the greatest possible responsibility rests. He is responsible for the collection of the revenues and for their distribution, and that is a tremendous job.

Mr. LEVY. Do you not think it would be a great aid to the legislative business of this House if $2,500 was expended for an electric car to connect the House Office Building with the House?

Mr. MOORE. That is not a bad idea. I would be liberal in helping the gentlemen of the House back and forth from the Office Building if it tires the gentlemen——

Mr. LEVY. It is not a question of tiring Members.

Mr. MOORE. If it tires any gentleman to walk back and forth, I think he ought to have assistance.

Mr. LEVY. It is not a question of tiring any Member. It is a question of expediting legislation and the answering of roll calls.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman is right. It would expedite legislation. But in the case of a member of the Cabinet, considering that the people of the country like to meet him and expect him once in a while to come to them and explain his attitude upon public questions, or considering that committees and others have a right to discuss in a public way the affairs of the Nation as they are affected by the department over which the Secretary has control, I think this expenditure for an automobile is entirely proper; but there should be a specific appropriation.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. How does my friend from Pennsylvania think it would do to establish a jitney service between the Capitol and the departments and the White House, so that we might have cooperative rides; that is to say, so that Members of the House and Senators could have a jitney service going to the White House and the departments, and the officers of the departments could come up here on business?

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman mean to have separate compartments for members of the Cabinet and separate compartments for Members?

Mr. DIES. Oh, no.

Mr. MOORE. I do not think that would be necessary at all. That would be a sort of white jim-crow proposition, and I do not think the country would stand for it.

Mr. DIES. Not necessarily jim-crow, but limited to Members of Congress and heads of departments, and let the Government issue the car tickets to Members of Congress and Cabinet officials, so that they could drop their tickets in the box. The gentleman knows what that service is.

Mr. MOORE. I understand what it is. It is the new nickel service which is proposed for Washington. The gentleman's idea is to have a service by which the members of the Cabinet would pay no more than Members of Congress, and all would get a cheap service. It might be a very excellent thing, but I would ask the gentleman from Texas, with all his fine democratic notions and his antisocialistic ideas, with some of which I am inclined to sympathize, whether he thinks it would be a pleasant thing for his patron saint—Thomas Jefferson—if he were on earth to-day, to have him stand out there in the rain on the corner of the Avenue, and wait for a car to come along, so crowded with people that the steam would pour out of the doors? Would it not be disturbing and discreditable to have the illustrious Jefferson step into that car, the cynosure of all eyes, subject to all kinds of criticism, and hang onto a strap until he got down to the White House. Would the gentleman like to see that?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. It is wholly unnecessary. Under the law every member of the Cabinet is entitled to horses and vehicles for his personal use. Each one of them has at least four vehicles and four horses or more. Now, it developed last year that automobiles were being obtained by different public officials without specific authority of Congress. An investigation was started, and a provision was incorporated in the legislative bill, under which the departments and all other branches of the public service are required to submit such detailed information to Congress as would enable it to keep track of just what is being done. Section 5 of the legislative act for the current year is as follows:

SEC. 5. No appropriation made in this or any other act shall be available for the purchase of any motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle for the service of any of the executive departments or other Government establishments, or any branch of the Government service, unless specific authority is given therefor, and after the close of the fiscal year 1915 there shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law, and in the estimates for the fiscal year 1916 and subsequent fiscal years there shall be submitted in detail estimates for such necessary appropriations as are intended to be used for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of all motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, specifying the sums required, the public purposes for which said vehicles are intended, and the officials or employees by whom the same are to be used.

It so happens that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing has not made a statement showing how much is actually required for passenger-carrying vehicles. That is due somewhat to the fact that the motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, of which there are two, are used not only to carry persons, but to carry certain materials. They are not used in the way in which some of these other vehicles may be used. They are not joy vehicles.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a moment. Understanding thoroughly the purpose of this paragraph and having had it gone into very thoroughly, the committee submitted the bill this year without any limitation upon the amount to be expended, but the law now prohibits the expenditure of any funds for these vehicles unless for official purposes, and it is wholly useless to put such a provision on any particular appropriation bill when the law prohibits the expenditure of any appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman is correct in his interpretation of the law, but as I understood the reading of the law it requires these various departments to make an estimate as to the amount of money they propose to expend for motor-propelled vehicles.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Passenger-carrying.

Mr. COX. Motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. For instance, it is not necessary to specify for motor-propelled trucks to be used in the service.

Mr. COX. Does the proposition before the House in this paragraph authorize the expenditure of any money for motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. COX. Why did not the department make an estimate for it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is a case where they did not, and it was due perhaps to the fact that the vehicle is not used exclusively for a passenger-carrying vehicle. They have two electric vehicles of a 1,000 pounds capacity to carry mail, samples, stamps, and general messenger service. One of these wagons is what they call an electric wagonette and is used to carry the committee to witness the destruction of the securities from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to the Treasury, and with them they take the securities to be destroyed. So that it is not, strictly speaking, a passenger-carrying vehicle in the sense that Congress has in mind in speaking of those vehicles.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I am excessively democratic. I will say further that I am not in favor of giving Members of Congress or Senators of the United States an automobile at the public expense, and I do not see any reason in the world why a member of the Cabinet should be provided with an automobile at the public expense. If we are not paying him enough salary, for one I think I have sufficient courage to vote the increase of salary.

But I think it is unwise to extend that sort of practice. I would not want a member of the Cabinet to stand out in the rain, as suggested by my friend from Pennsylvania; it is bad for anybody to stand out in the rain. However, I have observed one thing, that members of the Cabinet seldom come to the Capitol, and that Members of Congress of both branches are constantly in attendance on members of the Cabinet. If there was really any necessity from a public-service standpoint for public automobiles, they ought to make more frequent trips from here to the departments than from the departments to the Capitol.

Now, I want to say in that connection that the expenditures of our Government under this administration and under past administrations are shameful. No Government in this universe pretending to be a popular Government, a democratic republican Government, can long endure under the class of appropriations that Congress is annually enacting into law; and I would like to see some little democratic spirit in the country. I would like to see Cabinet and other officers of the Government understand that the service to the people is not only lip service but an actual service, and set a wholesome example of encouragement to the people in this country. If there is an example that ought to be set to the American people, beginning with the humblest home up to the most palatial mansion, it is of economy and frugality and simplicity, to the end that we may maintain this democratic Republic.

I think, for one—and I will never think differently, I imagine—that Cabinet officers who buy expensive automobiles under a law that limits their use to public service and then use them for every service except the public service are setting a bad example to the people of this Republic. Of course, you can not defeat any such proposition; no more can you defeat a pension bill; no more can you defeat a public building or a rivers and harbors bill; but I do say this, and it is true, that a Member of Congress needs only to scrutinize appropriation bills to agree with me that we are making a shameful use of the public funds. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the sort of amendment suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, under which Cabinet officers might purchase and keep automobiles, is altogether unnecessary. They are already abundantly provided for in that respect.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield? I would like to have the amendment again read, for I think the gentleman misunderstands it. I propose to limit the use of the automobile to business purposes.

Mr. MONDELL. I should not agree to that. I have no quarrel with the possession by Cabinet officers of carriages or automobiles both for business and social purposes. I believe the dignity of the position rather requires it; I think it is even in keeping with Democratic simplicity. Speaking of Democratic simplicity, it is an interesting fact that under this Democratic administration Cabinet officers have more and better and more expensive vehicles than ever in the history of the Republic. But I do not quarrel with that. The objectionable feature of the matter is the lack of frankness, to use no harsher term, in the dealings between Congress and the Cabinet ministers and in the action of the Cabinet ministers in the purchase and acquiring of these vehicles. Some of them have been acquired under appropriations the language of which would not justify such a purpose. If Cabinet ministers, with their large responsibility, will only remain here in Washington and attend to their duties I think they are entitled to automobiles or carriages which present a goodly appearance.

I can not say so much when the Cabinet officials, in addition to securing all these equipages, fail to perform their important duties. Some suggestion has been made as to the comparative responsibilities of Cabinet ministers and Members of Congress. The Cabinet minister's responsibility is wider but no greater than that of a Member of Congress, and most Members of Congress believe that in order to serve the people it is their duty to be here on the job practically all the time. Some Cabinet ministers with large salaries and fine turnouts do not take that view of their duties and responsibilities, I regret to say. Rumor has it that at one crucial moment in our history, when the whole course and trend of our attitude toward a neighboring Republic might have been changed, and for the better, the action which would have been wise was not taken largely because the minister responsible for advising our attitude was fifteen hundred miles away fulfilling a lucrative lecture engagement.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I have heard a great deal of criticism, I believe unwarranted and unkind, respecting those matters, and as yet I have never heard any gentleman rise on this floor and make a specific statement as respects any harm that comes to this Government from the causes the gentleman has just referred to.

Mr. MONDELL. I am making it now.

Mr. BATHRICK. I do not think the gentleman is specific at all.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think I am justified in criticising a man who is not attending to his public duties. I have been a Member of this House for 18 years, and I have been here every day that Congress has been in session save two. I do not know that I am entitled to any considerable amount of credit for that—that is my notion of my duty. If in addition to my duties and responsibilities, comparatively limited, I had the duties and responsibilities of a Secretary of State in time of war, I would think I was subject to the severest criticism if I left the Capital of the Nation for a single day, particularly for the purpose of increasing my income delivering paid lectures.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have mentioned a specific instance, the psychological moment, when the whole trend of our attitude toward Mexico would probably have been modified except for the fact that the Secretary of State was away yonder beyond the Mississippi delivering lectures for pay, accompanied by yodlers, we are told, and other entertainers.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield.

Mr. BATHRICK. The gentleman speaks in uncertain terms.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming declines to yield.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I speak in no uncertain terms; but to come down a little later and to be quite specific, and satisfy even my genial friend from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK], just a few days ago, within a week, with this great European war going on, with numberless important questions constantly arising with regard to our shipping and our interests near and about the seat of war, the Secretary of State has notoriously been traveling abroad throughout the land delivering political speeches and lectures for pay. He was beyond the Mississippi at the time when the recent declaration relative to the status of large areas of the sea used by our shipping was made by Germany, which may profoundly affect our relations with that great Empire. He has been away notoriously time and again, day after day, and week after week, with war raging all over Europe, with turbulent and troublesome conditions on our southern border, with foreign complications rising thick and fast all around us, including our delectable affair with Santo Domingo, just now being investigated, this official, charged under the law, as the adviser of the President, with responsibility in these vital matters, believes that he is justified in spending a large portion——

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman state what harm has come from it?

Mr. MONDELL. He believes he is justified in spending a large portion of his time delivering lectures for pay and haranguing the people throughout the Nation in the interest of the administration, whose affairs and responsibilities he is neglecting.

Mr. BARTLETT and Mr. BATHRICK rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, having heretofore yielded to the gentleman from Ohio, I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that whenever the distinguished Secretary of State is absent a very able and distinguished and efficient Assistant Secretary of State from the gentleman's own State is there to take his place and represent the Government?

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is very fortunate.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. I will say no more, however, upon that point.

Mr. Chairman, it is all right, in my opinion, to furnish these high officials with the proper vehicles. There is a certain dignity that goes with an office to be maintained, even from the viewpoint of democratic simplicity. I am not complaining because under a Democratic administration there are more and larger and finer automobiles in the possession of certain high officials than any time heretofore, but I am complaining—at least, I am voicing my opinion relative to that view of an official's duty which, in times when the Nation's interests are liable at any moment to be profoundly disturbed by occurrences abroad, seems to justify the man most charged with responsibility in our foreign relations in wandering hither and yon throughout the land, from coast to coast, from the Lakes to the Gulf, delivering Chautauqua lectures and endeavoring to make the people believe that the country is prosperous and doing well under this administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to state that when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offered his amendment there was an amendment pending offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that has not yet been voted upon. The Chair, therefore, will put the question first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, the committee amendment, which, without objection, will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. FITZGERALD.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have really a very warm, personal regard as well as the highest official respect for the Secretary of Labor, who formerly served in this House, receiving a salary of $7,500 a year and no passenger-carrying vehicle at public expense. He was made Secretary of Labor in March, 1913, receiving a salary of $12,000 a year.

On November 5, 1913, there was paid out of the contingent fund of the Department of Labor a sum for the purchase of a brougham, one cabriolet, one opera bus, I suppose for official purposes. That was in November. In January there was purchased for the Secretary of Labor, in addition to the three vehicles already enumerated, one touring car. In February they paid a garage company here $38.29 for oil. In March the same garage company, care and maintenance of Secretary's equipment, $75.62, and in the same month they paid livery for horse hire and board $57, and to another man for repairs to Secretary's automobile, $20.50. In April the first items for repairs only amounted to $3, but they paid to the garage in May, for care and maintenance, $270.93; in June $58.34 for the same purpose, and in August they paid for the month of July, for maintenance of the Secretary's automobile, $93.73. Those are all out of the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914. Now, I do not complain of these purchases. I agree with what the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] said. I think that a Cabinet officer is entitled to have an automobile, entitled to have other conveyances. I think that a Cabinet officer's duties require that he should have proper conveyances. The men who come here as Cabinet officers and who have a family have certain social obligations which it is impossible to avoid and maintain a proper dignity for the country. I do not complain of these purchases, though I think it would have been wiser, probably, if Congress specifically provided for the purchase and maintenance of vehicles for the members of the Cabinet. Just how it is usually done I do not undertake to say. In this case Secretary Wilson has frankly included all of these items in a report which he has made of the contingent fund. I expect in some of the departments, and this is not confined to this administration by any means, it might be very difficult to find just how the money has been provided for the maintenance and purchase of vehicles in the past.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, in line 11, after the word "carrying," strike out the word "vehicle" and insert the word "trucks."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, from what we can gather from this discussion it appears that what the Treasury Department wants in this instance is business motor carrying trucks or horse-drawn vehicles. It does not appear to want automobiles for social purposes. Why not state in this bill exactly what it is intended the money shall be expended for. The difficulty is that when we appropriate for engravers' and printers' materials and other materials and for motor-propelled and horse-drawn vehicles, the money to be expended on the order of the Secretary of the Treasury in writing, amounting to $615,526, we do not tell the Secretary to confine his expenditure with respect to motor-drawn vehicles to business purposes, but we do give the Secretary of the Treasury latitude to buy with that $615,000, if the order is in writing, an automobile for social purposes, a cabriolet, an opera car, or any of the other of those cars to which the gentleman from Illinois has just made reference. Now, if we mean that the Secretary of the Treasury shall buy a car for business or for social purposes, why not say so? The committee has the power to do this, but it prefers rather not to take the responsibility.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman seeks to offer an amendment; will it not be necessary to strike out the last word in line 10, the word "passenger," otherwise the language of the bill would be "and necessary horse-drawn passenger trucks."

Mr. MOORE. No; it would not necessarily, because in carrying material these men ride on trucks. They are cars in the nature of trucks and carry officials of the department on their business.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. What are called passenger-carrying trucks?

Mr. MOORE. I presume so. Now, one gentleman who used to advocate "the rights of the people" on the floor, and who always appealed for the downtrodden, became chairman of a great committee. When you asked him why he was not quite so enthusiastic as theretofore he would say, "Oh, things are different now, we have got the responsibility." Political changes like these induce men to go to dinners and put on dress suits. Sometimes they go to the theaters and ride in automobiles. It is not extraordinary. But even this does not justify the great Committee on Appropriations failing to indicate what its purpose is in introducing a lump-sum appropriation like this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am reluctant to believe that any other Member of the House is as confused as the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the facts about this matter. This paragraph is—

> For engravers' and printers' materials and other materials except distinctive paper, miscellaneous expenses, including paper for internal-revenue stamps, and for purchase, maintenance, and driving of necessary horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, when, in writing, ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury, $615,526, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treausry.

Since I have been chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, investigations conducted by that committee have disclosed what we believed to be abuses in connection with the acquisition of automobiles for passenger-carrying purposes. As a result section 5 of the legislative act for the current fiscal year, which I have heretofore read to-day, was enacted.

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing has not only motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, but it has horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and it is out of this appropriation that both classes are maintained. No money could be expended out of this or any other appropriation for that purpose unless authority was specifically given in the item. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, however, instead of conferring authority to maintain and operate the existing vehicles, proposes that the word "vehicle" be stricken out and the word "truck" inserted, and that authority be given for the maintenance and operation of passenger-carrying trucks. It may be that in the city of Philadelphia there are vehicles properly characterized as passenger-carrying trucks.

Mr. GORDON. It is a slow town.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Having a slight acquaintance with some few residents of the city of Philadelphia I am inclined to believe that that is the only type of vehicle in which they ought properly to be transported [laughter], but we are attempting to provide for the conduct of the service of the Government. I have a list of the horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles and motor-propelled vehicles used for both purposes in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. I wish the law to be so framed as to enable that great establishment to be conducted legitimately and without embarrassment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania insists that trucks shall be used when any of the employees of that establishment are sent to their homes, as they frequently are, as the result of illness. I wish to have them taken in an ordinary vehicle used by ordinary human beings in civilized countries. The gentleman from Pennsylvania insists that they must be carried in a truck.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Are we to understand from the gentleman's criticism that he desires the department to buy automobiles under this papagraph?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, that is so far from what is contemplated that there is no use to discuss it.

Mr. MOORE. It is the point at issue. Does the gentleman wish to have the department buy passenger-carrying automobiles under this paragraph?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania works himself up into a great state of excitement——

Mr. MOORE. Not at all. The gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Over the probability of the Secretary of the Treasury buying a passenger-carrying automobile for his own use.

Mr. MOORE. Not at all. I want him to have one. The gentleman side-steps again.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me finish this statement, because the gentleman is too excited even to describe his own condition. The gentleman is wrought up over the probability of the Secretary of the Treasury buying a passenger-carrying vehicle for himself out of the appropriation which is made for the miscellaneous expenses of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and in which paragraph authority is given to maintain and operate and purchase certain passenger-carrying vehicles required in the proper conduct of that establishment. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MOORE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one minute more, that he may answer the question I put to him a moment ago. Regardless of the stale old Philadelphia joke, I desire to know whether the gentleman from New York desires in this appropriation of $615,000 to give the Secretary of the Treasury the discretion to buy passenger-carrying automobiles for social as well as other purposes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not, because the law specifically prohibits any such purchase, and several times since this discussion began I have stated that there is a law to that effect.

Mr. MOORE. Apparently it is ineffective, for the gentleman from Illinois has just indicated that at least three passenger-carrying cars for social purposes have been purchased in the Department of Labor under a similar lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken, because I stated the law under which horse-drawn vehicles are purchased by the heads of executive departments for their personal use. That was a law enacted during a Republican Congress and during the service of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the chairman of the committee I ask unanimous consent to return to the paragraph relating to the St. Louis subtreasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I call up the motion to strike out the appropriation for the subtreasury at St. Louis, which was passed yesterday in the absence of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

The CHAIRMAN. Yesterday the Committee of the Whole passed over the provision for the subtreasury at St. Louis. There is a motion pending to strike out that provision.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. IGOE. In the RECORD of yesterday I find that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out is printed following the preceding paragraph relating to the St. Louis post office.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the pending amendment is to strike out the provision for the Subtreasury in St. Louis.

Mr. MANN. In lines 14 and 15.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is intended for a new subtreasury building at the city of St. Louis. When the matter came up before the committee it was stated that probably the policy of the Government with respect to the subtreasuries would be changed and these subtreasuries abolished. My answer to that was that if the subtreasuries are ever abolished, there are enough Government offices in St. Louis, for which we are now paying rent, which could be accommodated in this new building. That argument holds good to-day. We are paying in the city of St. Louis between $54,000 and $56,000 for rentals for all kinds of Government offices. In fact, since the Federal Reserve Board has acquired quarters, I believe the amount has been increased to about $75,000, so that there can be no question about the absolute necessity of providing accommodations for the housing of the Government service in the city of St. Louis.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this to be a one-story building?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; the intention was to have offices on the top of the Subtreasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many stories?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. About three stories.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman know; the plans are prepared, are they not?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not think so. I think the $50,000 which we are about to appropriate are partly for the purpose of preparing plans.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What particular services of the Government will be accommodated?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If you will make what is called an office building, we can accommodate all of the Government offices.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What branches of the service was it intended should be housed there?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. All of the branches outside of the Subtreasury that are renting quarters, as far as possible.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But what are they?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I was about to tell the gentleman. We have the meat-inspection office, Lighthouse Service, Mississippi River Commission, the Quartermaster Department of the Army, the Immigration Service, and there are quite a number of other branches of the service which are now housed in offices rented by the Government, and which, as I say, pay an aggregate rent of about $75,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This was to be a building for the Subtreasury, and designed with vaults and arranged for banking purposes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes; but it could be made into an office building with slight changes. Of course I know that to do it would involve a change of existing law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a great change to convert a subtreasury building into an office building and have it worth anything for that purpose.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If you will leave out the word "subtreasury" and say a building for Federal offices——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there a subtreasury in St. Louis?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This was to be a palatial building, costing a million dollars, exclusive of the site.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It was designed to accommodate other branches of the service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Those were only put in to give it momentum.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The initiation of the building for the subtreasury in St. Louis has quite a history. The gentleman will remember that some years ago there was a defalcation in the office of the St. Louis subtreasury, and it was stated at the time that it was impossible for the inspectors to supervise the work there in a proper way, because the subtreasury is located in the present Federal building on the second floor, where it is impossible to have proper Government supervision. For that reason it was suggested that in all cities where a subtreasury might be erected there should be a subtreasury building especially adapted for the purpose. In conformity with that idea the committee at that time authorized the erection of the building, and with the idea also of accommodating a number of other branches of the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I ask that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the House that, in the first place, it is very doubtful whether the subtreasuries will be abolished. And if they should not be abolished, we could perhaps house our subtreasury on the ground floor of the old post-office building which has now been vacated because the post office has been moved to a new building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This building, if constructed, must be constructed in the manner that will make it suitable for a subtreasury, and if made suitable for a subtreasury there will be an expenditure of a considerable sum that will be apparently wasted if it is not to be used for that purpose. For instance, one large item of expense is the vaults for holding coin, bullion, and currency. I think from an investigation that has been made it is very doubtful whether the independent treasury system will be continued. The Federal reserve bank will absorb all of its functions. It seems to me that in the interest of the public service in St. Louis it would be unwise to put a million dollars into a building that will be arranged very largely to accommodate the independent treasury system and then have that portion of the building practically worthless for any other purpose.

They arrange a subtreasury as they arrange a banking office, and you can not use it for meat inspection, for engineers, or for weather bureaus, or for the Mississippi River Commission, or anything like that. My own opinion is that, if the Government service at St. Louis needs additional facilities and accommodations, the interest of the Government would be served by postponement until it could be known just what is to be done about the subtreasury, so that when a building is constructed it will be one that will be suitable to the needs of the Government.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the force of what the gentleman from New York says, but will he accept a suggestion? Of course, I appreciate that it will be a change of existing law and subject to a point of order. But I trust the point of order will not be made, owing to the urgent circumstances under which we are suffering in St. Louis. I suggest that we strike out the word "subtreasury" and insert in lieu thereof the words "United States Government building for Federal offices."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, that would not do any good, because there is no such building authorized. The gentleman has been chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and he knows that it is absolutely inconceivable that I should consent to an amendment on this bill that would completely change the character of the building that is authorized. It may be, if there is to be no subtreasury there, that a building that would be suitable for other purposes would not cost anything like $1,000,000. The site cost $300,000, but that is no reason why we should expend $1,000,000 for a building upon that site, just to make it look as though we had expended a proportionate amount for the building.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, the site for this building was purchased about five years ago, and it has almost become a joke in St. Louis. Everybody is pointing to it, and everybody in the city knows that the site has been purchased for a Federal building, and yet for five long years we have had to wait. If you strike it out now, it will throw us back another year or more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But you might get a building that you really ought to have rather than one that you would not need. They might have to start in and buy another site to put up another building, if we constructed this building at this time.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Perhaps the gentleman has not heard what I said, that the subtreasury, in case it should be decided to continue the subtreasury system, might well be located on the ground floor of the present post office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, why not put it there now?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. They could put it in there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was the chief reason for putting up this building. Why not put it in there and eliminate any necessity for the building?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. But we would not gain any space for the Federal service in St. Louis, which is absolutely necessary now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, the situation in regard to this subtreasury is just simply this: When the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was under consideration during this present session questions were asked as to the future of that system, and an amendment, as I recollect it, was laid aside at that time, because it was thought that in December of this year the Treasury Department would be able to tell us what it intended to do with that system. Subtreasury quarters in St. Louis are in the old Federal building, and they need new quarters. Something should be done to improve present conditions if the subtreasury system is to remain. We would all like to have a fine new Government building in St. Louis, but I do not see how this Government, as a business proposition, can go ahead intelligently with this plan until we know what the building is to be used for. It is true, as the gentleman from Missouri, Dr. BARTHOLDT, says, that we have a great many Government offices scattered all over the city, and an office building would be a saving to the Government, but I do not believe a three-story office building would do at all. If we are to have a subtreasury system, I believe this building should be constructed, and so constructed as to provide quarters for the Subtreasury, and then offices for the accommodation not only of Government offices there in St. Louis now that are in rented quarters, but for additional offices that may be there in the near future. If the subtreasury system is to be abolished, there is no sense in going ahead now and designing a building that would be of no use whatever. Later on, perhaps, the Congress will give us the money to construct an office building on that site. Therefore, in view of the circumstances, I believe we can afford to wait until the next bill comes in, in the hope that we may know something definite about the subtreasury system.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think that they are probably in need of a new Federal building at St. Louis for the Government offices, and I am heartily in favor of giving them such a building as they need there. When the site was purchased for the subtreasury building several years ago at St. Louis no one suspected that the subtreasury was likely to be abolished; and when the authorization was made for the subtreasury building at St. Louis, it was not expected that in the immediate future the subtreasury building might not be needed for subtreasury purposes. We are told that in all probability there will be some arrangement worked out by which the Federal reserve banks will do the work now performed by the sub or independent treasuries. It can not be any possible reflection upon the distinguished Members of this House who represent St. Louis and the rest of Missouri to postpone the commencement of a subtreasury building for a year, at least, in order that we may ascertain whether the new building shall be constructed for subtreasury purposes or shall be of a different type and be constructed for general office purposes for other Federal offices. A subtreasury building, with its vaults, is very different from the character of building required for the other governmental offices. If next winter it has been determined that the subtreasury shall continue, it will be easy enough then to make provision for the construction of that building. If next winter it has been determined that the subtreasury shall be abolished, it will not meet with much opposition, I dare say, if the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds should report a bill providing that this site shall be used for a Federal building for other purposes instead of for a subtreasury building, as heretofore authorized. It seems to me, then, a matter of good, common business sense for us to postpone the commencement of the subtreasury building, and I am sure that no Member here would vote to postpone it if it in any way whatever reflected upon the character or ability or the fidelity of any of the Members from St. Louis, who all stand so well in the House. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that certain great centers, like St. Louis, having departments of the Government, active, administrative branches of the Government located therein for the convenience of the territory that is served by the city and its railroad connection and its trade, will eventually have to have a different type of building from the combined post office and customhouse buildings with which we are familiar, or from the subtreasury style of structure that is contemplated in this bill.

They will eventually need a type of building adapted for offices for the men in the Agricultural Department, the pure-food inspection, the inspection of locomotives and steamboats, the Department of Justice, the Engineering Board of the Army, and the Quartermaster's Department of the Army for the inspection of supplies, purchases, and so forth; and of these various departments that are centralized in certain great cities of the United States. When St. Louis asks for such a building or when the Government determines that one is needed there—and I think that time is practically here—it ought to have a building of that type, adapted to the business needs of the city. But I understand this building, which must have been contemplated more than five years ago, because the site was then purchased, was planned for a subtreasury. In design it is to be a heavy low structure, strongly built, designed for subtreasury purposes. Now, it is apparent that there is considerable doubt as to its ultimate use for subtreasury purposes, and there has grown a doubt in the minds of most Members here of its adaptability to the real purposes that will be demanded in the city of St. Louis. Therefore I intend to sustain and support, when the time comes, a business office building for St. Louis of a type like they have to have in the great centers. It would probably be a waste of Government money at this time, which the St. Louis people would not justify or expect, to go ahead with these plans which have been so materially altered by the creation of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. MARTIN. I would like to ask the gentleman what use, if any, is to be made of the large building, or the lower floor of the large building, originally the post office and court building, at St. Louis?

Mr. BORLAND. I could not answer that question.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can answer the gentleman's question. That is going to be utilized for the post-office inspectors and several of the officials who are now in the office and have insufficient accommodation. In other words, the post office being moved out to the new building, we have not gained any space in the office which we could not put to use.

Mr. BORLAND. I know this to be the fact, if the gentleman will permit, that the ordinary type of post office and customhouse is not adapted for ordinary business office purposes. It has dark hallways and high ceilings. That kind of a building does not combine readily with ordinary business purposes and it is very difficult to adapt the ordinary post-office building for office purposes.

Mr. MARTIN. I have some acquaintance with St. Louis, and my recollection is that it is a large building that covers probably an entire block, and it occurs to me that if by any chance the subtreasury should be continued at St. Louis it would not be at all impracticable that the space on this lower floor could be very well adapted for subtreasury purposes. It is located in the best business portion of the city and it certainly has area enough to be adapted to subtreasury uses if that should be undertaken.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the subtreasury is in that building now and the lower floor of that building is occupied by a subpost office of the downtown district, and money-order department, and other offices of that kind. That building is all filled. We have 21 offices outside the Government building in the city of St. Louis.

Mr. MARTIN. This building covers an entire block, does it not?

Mr. GILL. This building covers an entire block.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the gentleman say the entire quarters have been occupied by the post office at St. Louis?

Mr. GILL. By the internal revenue, money-order department, savings banks, and offices for the post-office business, revenue department, Department of Justice——

Mr. MARTIN. Is the subtreasury now in that building?

Mr. GILL. Yes; it is in that building.

Mr. MARTIN. Could not the first story be adapted to the subtreasury use and give ample room?

Mr. GILL. Why, it could with the expenditure of a little money, and the Federal reserve could have rooms fixed up for them in that building that would be as good as there are in the United States; but we have offices in other buildings besides that of the Government building, but to build a building such as has been stated here, a little, low, massive structure that would not house——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GILL. I ask that I may have another minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILL. I am in favor of striking out the $50,000 until such time as we can get a building that will be suitable for such purposes we want it for, and I believe the Government will save about half a million dollars on the proposition.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I fully recognize the force of what has been said. The bill will fortunately not affect the original authorization, in which naturally I have taken a great deal of personal pride. I initiated this project in the committee, and Congress was kind enough to pass it some years ago, and I believed upon my retirement from Congress I might in the future have an opportunity to point to the subtreasury building as one of the monuments to my services rendered in Congress. I believe that is quite human and natural; but under the circumstances, since there is such a great uncertainty as to whether the subtreasury service will be continued or not, I appreciate that it would be a wise business policy to find out first what the Government is going to do with the subtreasury and then go ahead. The authorization for the building is already the law and will not and can not be affected no matter what we do to-day. In other words, I wish to assure the people of St. Louis with these few words that by this postponement nothing is lost to them except a year's delay. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I yield, though reluctantly, to the sentiment of the committee and to circumstances over which I have no control. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the fiscal year 1916 all proceeds derived from work performed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, not covered and embraced in the appropriation for said bureau for the said fiscal year, instead of being covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, as provided by the act of August 4, 1886 (24 Stats., p. 227), be credited when received to the appropriation for said bureau for the fiscal year 1916.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I confess I do not quite understand just what is intended to be accomplished by this paragraph. Does the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, do a lot of outside work for which it is paid?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does certain work for other governmental departments, and they pay for it. The appropriation for the work is made for the other departments, so that unless some such provision as this were carried the Bureau of Engraving and Printing would be short the amount that it would receive from those sources. It gets, altogether, about $800,000 for work executed for other departments, chiefly for postage stamps. The director of the bureau has bid in competition with outsiders for the postage-stamp contract, and last year he received $742,778.53 from it. He makes a profit on that contract and yet does the work more cheaply for the Post Office Department than anyone else offers to do it.

Mr. MANN. What is the situation now? If the Bureau of Engraving and Printing does $800,000 worth of work for the Post Office Department, and the Post Office Department pays that to the bureau, and then it is turned into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, how does the bureau succeed in paying its expenses?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This authorization has been carried since he commenced to do that work. They asked that it be made permanent law, but we carry it every year in the bill so as to attract the attention of the committee and to inquire regarding the character of the work done and the amount received for such services. If there were a permanent provision it would soon be lost sight of and no one would know just what was being done there.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think there is a slight omission in this paragraph? Should not the word "shall" be inserted before the word "be," in line 22, after the word "twenty-seven," so that it will read:

Shall be credited.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The word "shall" would be proper there, but it has been carried in this way and has done no harm, and we have saved the expense of printing the word "shall."

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order and move to insert in line 22, before the word "be," the word "shall." That makes it grammatically correct. I suppose it would do without it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 22, before the word "be," insert the word "shall."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS OBJECTS, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to refund money covered into Treasury as internal-revenue collections, under the provisions of the act approved May 27, 1908, $50,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 36, line 5, by inserting as a new paragraph:

"For the construction of a permanent wagon-and-foot bridge across the creek at International Avenue, Nogales, Ariz., on land reserved by the United States for customs purposes, $10,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment under the head of "Miscellaneous objects, Treasury Department," at the request of the mayor of Nogales, Ariz. In order to explain the necessity for this appropriation I desire to say that in order to facilitate the collection of customs duties in 1892 the International Boundary Commission made the following recommendation respecting the boundary at Nogales:

That a reservation of not less than 50 feet in width be declared by the United States to extend along the entire length of the boundary on the American side, and that the Republic of Mexico be asked to declare a like reservation on the Mexican side, and that the erection of buildings on either side of the line within these limits be prohibited by law: Provided, however, That such reservation might be used for public streets or highways.

In 1897 the President, by proclamation, reserved a strip of land 60 feet wide by 2 miles long on the American side of the international boundary, a part of which was at that time covered with buildings. The buildings were torn down by direction of the Government in all cases where the occupants of the land did not remove them. I might add in this connection that the citizens of the United States who owned these buildings have never been compensated for the damages they sustained. They were occupying this ground under what everybody considered to be perfect title derived from a grant made by the Mexican Government. However, that has nothing to do with this appropriation, except to show that the United States has not been liberal in its treatment of the people of Nogales.

The mayor of Nogales writes as follows in regard to the necessity for this bridge:

The Government has never spent one solitary dollar for improvements of any kind whatsoever upon said international strip. The town has kept up the streets and bridges of one sort or another upon said strip and the principal use of said bridge is for the benefit of the Customs Service, which is strictly a United States institution.

The necessity for the bridge is very apparent, for the reason that there is a 16-foot wall the entire distance from the international boundary line to the first bridge, which the town erected in 1913, a distance of over 500 feet down the stream. You have proof of this through the recommendation of the collector at this port, showing the advantages of said bridge, who approved our petition.

The international strip was created for the convenience of the Customs Service in order that smuggling might better be prevented. A creek that heads in old Mexico crosses this strip at an angle, and when the creek is in flood it is impossible to pass from one part of the boundary strip to the other. For this reason the people of Nogales believe that there ought to be a bridge not only for their convenience, but in order to properly carry out the duties of the Customs Service at that port of entry. For these reasons I offer this amendment.

An estimate of cost has been prepared by the mayor of Nogales, who is an engineer by profession, for the construction of a bridge about 50 feet wide, including the necessary stone or concrete work to protect the banks of the creek from being washed away. Owing to a curve in the creek the bridge will be at an angle which makes the construction more expensive than it otherwise would be. I am satisfied, however, that everything that is necessary to be done can be accomplished within the sum that I have named in this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. Who would make use of the bridge?

Mr. HAYDEN. Everybody who lives in Nogales—the people and the Government officials. It is as much needed for the Customs Service as for the citizens of that city.

Mr. MANN. Where would they go on the bridge?

Mr. HAYDEN. Along the international boundary line. The towns of Nogales, Sonora, and Nogales, Ariz., are on each side of the boundary. This creek divides each town into two parts.

Mr. MANN. Is this to build a bridge extending from the United States into Mexico?

Mr. HAYDEN. No, sir; parallel with the boundary of the United States; extending from one side of the creek to the other and entirely within the United States. This creek runs from the south, in old Mexico, to the north and crosses the boundary line, which runs east and west at that point.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that the gentleman is perfectly lucid in his statement. Sometimes it is difficult for me to understand a geographical description. The gentleman is always very clear, but I confess I do not quite get it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use for, and in connection with, the enforcement of the laws relating to the Treasury Department and the several branches of the public service under its control, not exceeding at any one time four persons paid from the appropriation for the collection of customs, four persons paid from the appropriation for salaries and expenses of internal-revenue agents or from the appropriation for the foregoing purpose, and four persons paid from the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes, but not exceeding six persons so detailed shall be employed at any one time hereunder: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to deprive the Secretary of the Treasury from making any detail now otherwise authorized by existing law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New York what the purpose is and what the effect is of this language in the paragraph in reference to the employment of persons paid from different appropriations? This provides that four persons may be used by the Secretary of the Treasury and paid from the appropriation for the collection of customs, four persons paid from the appropriation for internal revenue, four persons paid from the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes, and not exceeding six persons shall be employed at any one time under these provisions. Of course these are details, but I would like to ask the gentleman what the detailed employees have to do, if the gentleman happens to remember?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think they do not make any of these details just now. The gentleman from Illinois will recall the circumstances that resulted in this provision. Some years ago it was found that the Secret Service agents were being utilized in ways that it was not believed desirable, or that Congress ever intended that they should be used, and after conference with the department this provision was worked out, so as to permit them to be used only to a limited extent.

The purpose of the provision is to stop a movement which from time to time gets some momentum in this country proposing to build up a great Federal secret police force by the consolidation of all the various services of the Federal Government which are used along lines similar to a secret police service. There are a number of such services in the Federal Government.

There is the Secret Service, so called, the internal-revenue agents, the fiscal agents in the Customs Service, the post-office inspectors, the special agents in the Department of Labor, and many others that I do not now recall. From time to time it is proposed that legislation be enacted to put all of these services under one control. I have omitted two of the more important services, and one is the agents employed in the Department of Justice for the prevention and detection of crime, and the other special agents employed in the Interior Department in connection with the prevention of depredations on the public lands.

Nearly every year the Treasury Department makes a more or less vigorous protest against any restrictions being placed upon the use of the Secret Service agents in any manner. The committee is of the opinion that the experience of the past justifies this limitation, believing that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. It is designed to effect a very beneficial purpose.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman, does anyone know or has anyone ever taken the trouble to make a computation as to how many Secret Service officials the Government has under the various designations in the different departments?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; my recollection as to the fact is that some years ago it was shown that the appropriations aggregated nearly $9,000,000 available for all the various services for what might be characterized as secret agents.

Mr. MANN. It was said at one time in the press, if not elsewhere, that some of this money was being used for the purpose of watching Members of Congress. I suppose none of it is now being used to corral or gather up or hold together Members of the body at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; with the great acquisition of Democrats to Congress, the morale has necessarily improved to such an extent that it is not necessary to keep them under surveillance, as it might have been necessary heretofore. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Either that or they gave it up as a hopeless task. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I read from what the gentleman from Illinois, leader of the minority, said yesterday, that he interpreted what I said as a reflection upon his character. I am sure I never intended anything of the sort. On the contrary, I never have known in all my life a man, in my opinion, who has been as painstaking, as careful, and as conscientious in his public duties as has the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Illinois, notwithstanding that, from a freak of temper, which he displays occasionally, causes him to make an astonishing remark now and then. He did say yesterday:

> The statement the gentleman makes, like most of his statements, is absolutely without any foundation of fact.

Well, technically there might be some ground for that statement. But the pith of my statement was the extravagance of the appropriation for Wilmington, N. C., and it was immaterial or extraneous what I said to him about the committee. It is true, and not original with me, the statement was made on the floor that when the bill was introduced carrying some forty-odd million dollars, knowing the gentleman's tenacity and fighting qualities to pass upon all matters that were extravagant, when that bill came in on the famous 17th of February, 1913, he was present. But he became mute and silent, and the bill was passed with him remaining in that condition of mind. That is a statement of fact. That is true. I should say that his first statement yesterday was out of order without recognition or appeal to the Chair for recognition. His second statement was made a little later on, when he got the floor afterwards. He said:

> Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, with his usual style, is proceeding, notwithstanding that I declined to yield. The gentleman does not know a misstatement from a correct statement.

Just before he said again that "if it hadn't been for the statement of the gentleman in his usual style and rather coarse, it seems to me"—coarse? Mr. Chairman, to tell the truth, is that coarse? That was all that was said, and, my God, if there is anything permissible, it is to tell the truth.

That was all. He was silent when that $41,000,000 appropriation bill went through that day, from beginning to end. The proverbial oyster was never more silent. I believe he did rise from his seat when the gentleman from Malden, Mass., got piqued because the appropriation was not large enough, and he was going to sulk, but the gentleman from Illinois suggested that he better let it pass. That is the only explanation. The point is this, that the appropriation was extravagant, was extraordinary and wasteful, and lacked all business common sense. Since that time, to show you that it was considered in that respect, I asked the chairman of the committee a question, and while he said he could answer in a public statement 66⅔ per cent of my question, yet it was argued in favor of the proposition that it was needed for customs purposes, and so forth. Inquiry in this connection would have shown there was no customs business, practically nothing.

The real customs business amounted to about $5,000, and the total amount of business was about $28,000. Tonnage and navigation there can not put the town into the $600,000-building class. They have four officials, a deputy collector, a clerk, an inspector, and a man that receives his pay by the day. Three hundred thousand dollars they added to that bill to house that crew of four people. It costs the Government 25 cents for every dollar it collects there. If the bill had been properly considered, with the usual vigilance on the part of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], it might not have happened. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations was present and took part, and the bill went through. Not once during that day did they object to that $600,000 appropriation for Wilmington, N. C.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, the point of the whole talk was that it was an extravagant appropriation, and the reference to the committee was immaterial and was of no concern. The great chairman of the Committee on Appropriations one day in making a motion here just quietly told me that I was not running this House, that he was running the House, and therefore he is responsible for the bad business that was done in that particular transaction.

Now, in regard to the charge of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that I spoke out of order, I admit that, and I apologize to the House, and I am extremely sorry to think that it had been necessary for me to speak out of order; but I have gotten into that habit from being a constant Member here and from hearing and seeing the gentleman from Illinois carry on parliamentary procedure.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Recoinage of minor coins: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to continue the recoinage of worn and uncurrent minor coin of the United States now in the Treasury or hereafter received, and to reimburse the Treasurer of the United States for the difference between the nominal or face value of such coin and the amount the same will produce in new coin, $10,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does the gentleman from New York know how much of these short-weight coins are recoined in a year? The recoinage of gold coins carries an appropriation of $5,000, which for the current year is $3,000, and the recoinage of the minor coins carries an appropriation of $10,000. Is there any report in the hands of the committee as to the number of gold coins recoined during the last fiscal year, or the number of minor coins that are recoined, that are of short weight?

Mr. FITZGERALD. On minor coins at the mint the amount is $72,174.31, and in the subtreasury $93,560. On current gold in the several subtreasuries on February 1, 1915, $983,812.50.

Mr. MANN. That is the amount of money involved?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not show the number of coins. They are in varying denominations, and I think they do not keep track of them by numbers. They do by weight and value.

Mr. MANN. What short-weight coins do they recoin? Of course the Government does not undertake to take every short-weight coin that is presented, as I understand it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that section 3512 of the Revised Statutes fixes a tolerance and prohibits the reissue whenever the coin falls below a certain weight.

Mr. MANN. I supposed the practice was for the Government to refuse to take the coins which are light weight.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, they do take them.

Mr. MANN. I think if the gentleman were to collect a lot of light-weight coins and go to the subtreasury with them, he would find that they would not take them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They either take them or make an allowance on the gold coins; I am not sure which.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Money laundry machines: For all miscellaneous expenses in connection with the installation and maintenance of money laundry machines, including repairs and purchase of supplies, for machines at Washington, D. C., and in the various subtreasury offices, $9,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. For several years we have had some statements on the floor of this House with reference to these money laundry machines. Has the gentleman any new information on the subject? That is one of the interesting experiments which the Government has made. Is it perfectly successful?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is no new information. They are being used, though not used to their capacity. A great many notes, however, are washed annually and returned to circulation. When the machines were first used there was very considerable opposition, either real or stimulated, to the washed notes. I always believed that it was a stimulated opposition. It was believed if these machines would perhaps make reissuable so many notes, it might affect the work of printing the notes. This year there did not seem to be any evidence that banks or business houses were objecting to these washed notes. During the last fiscal year 35,438,713 notes of various denominations were laundered. The cost of printing new notes and putting them in circulation is $13.12½ a thousand. The cost of laundering and returning to circulation is approximately $3.19 per thousand, or a saving of $9.93 per thousand. So that the saving is very considerable. We launder some notes which, after being laundered, are not issued because the effect of the laundering on them indicates that they are too much worn; but undoubtedly a very considerable number of notes have been made serviceable which before the introduction of the laundry machines were discarded because of the manner in which they had been soiled. I think it is not only useful in that it cleans the notes and extends the life, but it enables the currency to be kept in much better condition for general purposes.

Mr. MANN. How many notes did the gentleman say had been laundered?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Thirty-five million four hundred and thirty-eight thousand seven hundred and thirteen.

Mr. MANN. In one fiscal year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And it costs in the neighborhood of $3 a thousand?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It costs to launder $3.19 a thousand.

Mr. MANN. Three dollars a thousand with $9,000 appropriated would launder less than 3,000,000 notes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nine thousand dollars is for two purposes. When the machines were first obtained there was a very considerable stock of supplies for them, and those supplies have been exhausted. My recollection is that this provides only for supplies. The operators are carried in the legislative bill.

Mr. MANN. And repairs, and so forth?

Mr. FITZGERALD. And is not for personal services at all.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, occasionally we adopt a new policy in the Government service that works well and is really in the interest of economy. The policy of laundering notes seems to be such a policy. During the hearings I asked Mr. Thompson, who appeared before the committee:

Mr. MONDELL. What was the estimated saving by the use of the laundry machines?

Mr. THOMPSON. If the life of a laundered note is the same as the life of a new note it would be about $9 a thousand, and on the 35,000,000 notes washed last year it would be about $350,000; but the actuary has been unable to determine up to this time whether the life of a laundered note is equal to the life of a new note or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you find the same objection now as formerly to these washed notes?

Mr. THOMPSON. We now receive no complaints at all, to my knowledge.

The CHAIRMAN. That has all died out?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MALBURN. I do not think the average man would know the difference.

Mr. MONDELL. Do you ever wash a note the second time?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes; in fact, we do not know.

Mr. MONDELL. You do not know when a note comes back whether it has been laundered or not?

Mr. THOMPSON. Sometimes we find notes that we can tell have been laundered. The employees who are familiar with the laundry work can tell better than others. They find sometimes that laundered notes come back, and they run them through again and put then out, and I imagine there are a good many notes that have been laundered and come in and gone out a second time.

The plan of washing notes seems to be successful and satisfactory, and does apparently save quite a considerable sum of money in the course of a year.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York in reference to this laundering of money, What has been the report from the banks and institutions that handle a large number of notes after it has been laundered?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Last year there was evidence that an attempt had been made to create considerable objection to the use of the laundered notes. The committee thought then that it was a stimulated opposition. This year there is no evidence of it, but it is very difficult to tell the laundered note from one that was not laundered unless it is compared with a note that is so soiled that it is apparent.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that there was a great deal of complaint about these notes for a time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it was stimulated.

Mr. FOSTER. Last year there were complaints from the State of New York, the State of Illinois, a lot of bankers, and so forth.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It died out.

Mr. FOSTER. And there is no more complaint?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; not at this session.

Mr. FOSTER. I had not heard any; I did not know what the gentleman might know on the subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was due, I think, to the belief that the laundered notes would be of quite so extensive a character that it might very materially reduce the output of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and there was a natural desire on the part of some persons that that should not be effected. The increased demands of commerce and the growth of the country, I think, will maintain the demand for notes and will not materially affect the output of the bureau, but the laundering will make available an additional supply of a not very great amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. A moment ago the gentleman from Illinois inquired with reference to the recoining of light-weight gold coins. It is a matter that may be of some interest to Members. Section 3505 of the Revised Statutes provides:

SEC. 3505. Any gold coins of the United States, if reduced in weight by natural abrasion not more than one-half of 1 per cent below the standard weight prescribed by law, after a circulation of 20 years, as shown by the date of coinage, and at a ratable proportion for any period less than 20 years, shall be received at their nominal value by the United States Treasury and its offices, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe for the protection of the Government against fraudulent abrasion or other practices.

Section 3512 of the Revised Statutes provides:

SEC. 3512. Any gold coins in the Treasury of the United States when reduced in weight by natural abrasion more than one-half of 1 per cent below the standard weight prescribed by law shall be recoined.

These two provisions of the Revised Statutes cover the subject about which the gentleman inquires. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Distinctive paper for United States securities: For distinctive paper for United States securities, not less than 73,500,000 sheets, and for national-bank currency and Federal reserve bank currency, not less than 13,500,000 sheets, including transportation, traveling, mill, and other necessary expenses, salaries of not exceeding 1 register, 2 assistant registers, 5 counters, 5 watchmen, and 1 skilled laborer, and expenses of officer detailed from the Treasury, $415,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask about several of the items in this section which have been omitted from the bill and to know where the amounts are now carried. For the current year we made an appropriation of $70,000 for distinctive paper under the head of "Expenses of national currency, etc." Is that carried now in some other place? We also made appropriation of $1,565 for pay of the committee that witnesses the destruction of Government securities. Where is that carried? And then we made an appropriation of $8,400 for the custody of dies, rolls, and plates. May I ask where those items are carried?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The provision for the custody of dies, rolls, and plates was transferred to the item of salaries of employees, Bureau of Engraving and Printing. That puts the employees directly under the Bureau of Engraving and Printing rather than under the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. That is, on the legislative bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; that is in this bill. The gentleman will find, on page 34, for "salaries of all necessary employees," in line 8, "including $8,400 for the custody of dies, rolls, and plates." That is transferred from the Treasury Department to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Formerly there were items for "distinctive paper for United States securities" and "distinctive paper for national currency," and the two have been combined in a single paragraph, with a limitation upon the number of sheets for each class of paper. Part of the expense of these persons employed in the mills is paid from one appropriation and part from the other. But as this is for securing the same kind of paper it seemed proper that the provision for this distinctive paper should be in one item, and then the number of sheets being stated for both classes of currency makes effective the purposes in view.

Mr. MANN. Well, we appropriated for the current law $400,000 for distinctive paper for United States and $70,000 for the national-bank currency. I can see why those two items might probably be combined as has been done in the bill, but it attracted my attention, because I had supposed that likely that would be an extra expense this year for the issuance of Federal bank reserve notes. That was a reduction of $55,000 in the appropriation. The appropriation in the current law may have been larger than heretofore to cover Federal reserve notes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A great many were printed during the current year, I think. The committee recommended this method of designating the number of sheets for what it was believed the ordinary normal business conditions of the country would require. Of course, if an extraordinary situation should arise, Congress would provide for it.

Mr. MANN. I understand that, there being less money in circulation now than usual, you thought it was not necessary to print so much new money. I can understand that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have enough for normal conditions. If any unusual condition should arise, Congress will be expected to meet it by providing for the unusual condition.

Mr. MANN. May I ask, then, about the destruction of Government securities? Is the public no longer to be represented on that committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That has not been provided for. The Treasury Department requested that that be made an annual position and carried in the legislative bill. The legislative bill passed the House without any provision being made for the position. That bill has not been reported to the Senate yet, but it is expected that the provision will be made, either in this bill or in the legislative bill.

Mr. MANN. At the next session of Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; at this session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Vain hope!

Mr. FITZGERALD. Provided these bills become laws at this session, and if I can have my way I will do everything in my power to have these appropriation bills become laws at this session.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent for another minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, the gentleman is still having looked up the question of the language to be used?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have to inquire of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. I will do that before the bill is completed. I have no doubt there will be no objection to returning to it to make any correction necessary.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in order to make it clear just what the situation is with regard to this representative of the public to witness the destruction by maceration of Government securities, let me say, as the chairman has stated, the Secretary of the Treasury recommended that this be made an annual position and be placed in the legislative bill. It was not placed in the legislative bill. As a matter of fact, I doubt the wisdom of so doing. If the public is to be represented, I think the provision we have made heretofore is a very excellent provision. Heretofore we have paid $5 a day for the days that the representative was actually employed in this work. My understanding is that a young lady employed in the Treasury Department has been detailed to do this work and to be the witness for the people of this work of maceration. I do not know whether it is necessary or not. I do not know just how much more certain we are that these notes are all macerated because this representative is there. My idea is that the Treasury Department does not consider it a very important matter. My personal opinion is that the item ought to be in the bill, but as the committee struck it out I shall not offer an amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in regard to the item for distinctive paper for United States securities, it developed in the hearings that there was quite an accumulation of this paper, and that the total of the estimate for the two combined items might very properly be considered reduced. There was some discussion of the matter that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has referred to, as to the proper phraseology to be used in describing the paper for the printing of the issues under the Federal reserve law. There will be two classes of issues under the new Federal reserve law. One is the Federal reserve bank notes issued by the Federal reserve banks. The other is the Federal reserve currrency issued instead of the national-bank currency by or on behalf of the member banks. It would seem very proper to refer to one as Federal reserve notes and the other as Federal reserve currency. Those terms would distinguish the two classes of issues and describe them with reasonable accuracy, and it is very evident that we should consider that matter, as has been suggested, and arrange the language of the paragraph with a view of having the classes of this paper provided for in the item now under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States and of foreign Governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign Governments, and other felonies committed against the laws of the United States relating to the pay and bounty laws, hire and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary, per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for no other purpose whatever, except in the protection of the person of the President and of the person chosen to be President of the United States, $145,000: Provided, That no part of this amount be used in defraying the expenses of any person subpœnaed by the United States courts to attend any trial before a United States court or preliminary examination before any United States commissioner, which expenses shall be paid from the appropriation for "Fees of witnesses, United States courts."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When the Agricultural appropriation bill was under consideration some question arose as to certain printing presses used in the Forest Service. The question was raised by my friend from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], and I promised at that time to get the information.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman will yield, I did not hear what he said this was about.

Mr. LEVER. About the printing-press matter to which the gentleman called my attention. I desire to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD certain statements furnished by the Forest Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks leave to extend his remarks by printing in the RECORD certain documents. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The documents referred to are as follows:

To handle small jobs of field printing needed quickly, the Ogden supply depot of the Forest Service is equipped with a small job-printing press, operated by motor but fed by hand. One member of the office force, who is an experienced printer, handles the composition and press-work, incidental to other duties. A large part of the work done is the printing of letterheads for the individual forests. To lessen the time consumed in feeding the letter sheets individually to the machine it was desired, if possible, to secure an automatic feeder. Self-feeders are not in common use on presses as small as that at Ogden, but it was learned after careful inquiry that four feeders, which gave promise of answering the requirements, were being operated in Richmond. An employee of the Washington office, C. M. Ballard, was sent to Richmond to see whether the machine would do the work required satisfactorily. It was found that the feeder would not answer the need, and the contemplated purchase was therefore not considered further.

[Memorandum for Mr. LEVER.]

FEBRUARY 4, 1915.

Referring to the question raised in Congress regarding the authority of the Forest Service to own and operate a printing press at Ogden, I am glad to give you the following additional information.

The small printing press operated at Ogden was purchased in 1909 and the voucher duly passed by the Treasury. The Comptroller of the Treasury has ruled that the Forest Service "is a field service under the control of the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, with its headquarters located at Washington, as distinguished from a part of the Department of Agriculture proper, and printing for such service is not 'printing' for an 'executive department' within the meaning of section 87 of the act of January 12, 1895, and is not required thereby to be done at the Government Printing Office." A copy of this ruling of the comptroller is inclosed.

A. F. POTTER, Associate Forester.

DECISION OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY, JULY, 1907–JUNE, 1908.

[Vol. XIV, pp. 723–724.]

PRINTING FOR FOREST SERVICE.

The Forest Service is a field service under the control of the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, with its headquarters located at Washington, as distinguished from a part of the Department of Agriculture proper, and printing for such service is not "printing" for an "executive department" within the meaning of section 87 of the act of January 12, 1895, and is not required thereby to be done at the Government Printing Office; neither is it "printing" for an executive department, or bureau or office thereof, or other Government establishment at Washington, within the meaning of section 2 of sundry civil act of June 30, 1906, and is not required thereby to be included in the annual estimates for printing and binding.

The appropriation "General expenses, Forest Service, 1908," is applicable to the payment of expenses incurred during fiscal year 1908 for printing in the field under duly authorized contract with private firms of official forms necessary for conduct of business in administration, protection, and improvement of the national forests.

I am in receipt of a communication from you, dated April 31, 1908, as follows:

"I have the honor to request your decision whether the appropriation for 'General expenses, Forest Service,' made by the act of March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., 1269), is available for expenses incurred for the printing in the field under duly authorized contract with private firms of official forms necessary for the conduct of business in the administration, protection, and improvement of national forests. I respectfully call attention to your decision of January 29, 1908, that the Forest Service of this department is a field service and is not bound by section 8 of the act of January 12, 1895, to have its printing and binding done at the Government Printing Office."

The Forest Service, extending throughout the States and Territories of the United States, is, in my opinion, a field service under the control of the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture (act of Feb. 1, 1905, 33 Stat., 628), with its headquarters located at Washington, as distinguished from a part of the Department of Agriculture proper, and therefore printing for the use of such service is not "printing" for an "executive department" within the meaning of section 87 of the act of January 12, 1895 (28 Stat., 622), and is not required by such section to be done at the Government Printing Office; neither is it "printing" for an executive department, or bureau or office thereof, or other Government establishment at Washington, within the meaning of section 2 of the sundry civil act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stat., 697), and is not required by the provisions of such act to be submitted to Congress in the annual estimates of the expenses of printing and binding.

The appropriation "General expenses, Forest Service, 1908," in the act of March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., 1270), is, in my opinion, applicable to the payment of expenses incurred during the fiscal year 1908 for printing in the field under duly authorized contract with private firms of official forms necessary for the conduct of business in the administration, protection, and improvement of the national forests. (44 MS. Comp. Dec., 551, Jan. 29, 1908; id., 493, Jan. 27, 1908, 13 Comp. Dec., 639, 733.)

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Can the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] state how many motors the Secret Service now has, and does the Secret Service maintain out of this appropriation the motor or motors which it uses in connection with guarding the President?

Mr. SHERLEY. The Secret Service has been renting an automobile at an annual rental of $500 for use in connection with the protection of the President here in the District of Columbia. There was some question as to whether the law as it read authorized that proper expenditure in view of the hire and operation of the automobile, and this language was inserted in order to take care of the situation.

Mr. MANN. I asked because I did not know but that the one they used was one of the President's.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; there has been an arrangement by which a company has rented to the Secret Service men at a rental of $500 a year an automobile for their use.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky in relation to the language in lines 24 and 25, "hire and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary," if that is considered all that is required in connection with the law that was passed in the last session of Congress that prohibited money being used for this purpose unless specifically authorized.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is sufficient to authorize the expenditure of this money.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My recollection is that when the Indian bill and later the Agriculture bill and the military appropriation bill were up it was contended that the amount must be specifically authorized, and that was the form in which the limitation was placed in these bills. If I understand this language, $145,000 might be expended for this purpose—there is no limitation.

Mr. SHERLEY. My remembrance of the provision of the law to which the gentleman refers was that it required that an estimate should be submitted. But there is nothing that would require, in a provision such as this, a limitation on the amount of money that should be expended.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman, but my recollection is that in the other bills I have mentioned there was an express limitation as to how much could be expended for this purpose, namely, "hire and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles."

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman that in some of the bills there was an express limitation of the amount and in some cases in this bill there is a limitation, but it did not seem wise to the committee in this particular matter to fix a limitation on the Secret Service men in the use of an automobile necessary for the protection of the President.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. At the same time, the gentleman will acknowledge that if some Secretary of the Treasury wished to do so he could spend the whole amount carried in this paragraph for that purpose.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course it is conceivable, but hardly within the realms of probability, and this provides for the hire and operation, and not for the purchase.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I realize that. Now, I want to ask the gentleman a further question. The language in line 1 on the next page is "per diem in lieu of subsistence." Will the gentleman tell us what that per diem is?

Mr. SHERLEY. In the sundry civil bill enacted at the last session there was the following provision:

SEC. 13. That the heads of executive departments and other Government establishments are authorized to prescribe per diem rates of allowance not exceeding $4 in lieu of subsistence to persons engaged in field work or traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts of duty when not otherwise fixed by law. For the fiscal year 1916 and annually thereafter estimates of appropriations from which per diem allowances are to be paid shall specifically state the rates of such allowances.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It might be $4. Will the gentleman tell us whether or not there is a uniform per diem in the different departments in lieu of subsistence?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is a maximum not to exceed $4.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does that pertain to all departments of the Government?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think so; yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think the gentleman is mistaken. My recollection is that it is $5 in some departments and $3 in some others, and $4 in others. I have always thought that the amount ought to be uniform. It is $4 in the Treasury Department. It ought not to be more in other departments.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman is confusing cases in which they are allowed a certain sum in lieu of actual expenses, and these cases where they are paid an actual expense which shall not exceed $5 a day.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Do I understand that where it provides it shall not exceed $5 a day that if the expenses are only $3 a day that is all they are allowed?

Mr. SHERLEY. If they are allowed the actual expenses.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My understanding is that where the language authorizes the allowance to be not in excess of so much per day that that amount is arbitrarily given to them whether they expend it or not.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is in lieu of actual expenses.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the provision to which reference has been made with regard to the hiring and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn vehicles in this item is different from that carried in most items in the bill, and, of course, there is a reason for it. This service was not estimated for, as they should have estimated the expected cost of the motor-propelled vehicle which they hire and use for the protection of the President, but in the hearing they informed us how much it cost them annually. But, in addition to that, this service needs authority to hire vehicles whenever they need them. I think it will appeal to every member of the committee that the Secret Service is likely to need the use of a vehicle at almost any time.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think the language in the legislative bill for the current year in reference to automobiles covers the hiring of an automobile? The language reads:

Purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation.

Does that cover the hiring of an automobile or buggy?

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman from Illinois can answer that question as well as anyone.

Mr. MANN. I asked because I thought perhaps that question had been raised in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MONDELL. It was discussed.

Mr. MANN. This service has hired an automobile, and the law provided that as to the purchase, maintenance and repair, and operation of automobiles they should make an estimate.

Mr. MONDELL. As some of the other bureaus did not.

Mr. MANN. I do not say that they did not make an estimate because they neglected it or because they thought it was not required. The committee ignores specifically this proposition in the bill. May I ask whether, in the opinion of the committee, the language used in the legislative act in reference to automobiles or horse-drawn vehicles covers the question of hiring one for a day or for a year?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not recall that the question in just that form was before the committee, but possibly the presence of the language in this paragraph will answer that. The committee felt that without this language in the paragraph it was doubtful if they had authority to hire automobiles. Of course, all through the public service there are appropriations under which automobiles may be hired as a part of traveling expense, either on allotments made or on certification of actual traveling expenses. But the Secret Service sometimes needs a vehicle not in connection with travel of one of its members, and this language clearly gives them authority to hire a vehicle under those circumstances and conditions, and I should say that without a provision of this kind in the bill they would not be authorized to hire automobiles or carriages except as they might hire them as a part of traveling expenses. The only vehicle that they use regularly is one they hire for the protection of the President.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to ask some one in reference to the matter of hiring passenger-carrying vehicles. In a number of the appropriation bills there is authority to purchase, maintain, and operate automobiles and passenger-carrying vehicles in considerable number in the field, and I have been wondering at odd times whether if those appropriations were stricken out it would make any difference to the service; in other words, whether they could use the same money for the hiring of these methods of transportation that they could for the maintenance of Government-owned ones if the Government did not appropriate for the maintenance. The language of the law which is new is:

There shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for the purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of a motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law.

There is no specific authorization by law for the maintenance or the hiring or the use of these automobiles and other passenger-carrying vehicles, except as is carried in the appropriation bills. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] suggests that they might hire an automobile as a part of their traveling expenses. They can not do that, if hiring is covered by this language, because the language of the law is that they shall not maintain, operate, or repair an automobile or other passenger-carrying vehicle unless it is specifically authorized by law. The allowance for traveling expenses would not be a specific authorization. I am inclined to think, myself, that the language in the law does not cover hiring an automobile or a buggy or other passenger-carrying vehicles at all, whether it should be hired for a day or a year. Of course, if it should be hired for a year, and get to be an abuse, undoubtedly the Committee on Appropriations or some other committee would try to take care of it. I do not think the law contemplates forbidding one of the departments, when it sends a man out, from hiring an automobile or a buggy in the transaction of his business. It is possible that it may lead to an abuse. Of course, the committee in this case now pending did not want to leave any question of doubt about it, but I suspect that what the Secret Service will do is to buy an automobile, and perhaps that is a thing they ought to do. I do not say that it is not.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But this does not authorize them to buy it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appropriations in this act shall not be used in payment of compensation or expenses of any person detailed or transferred from the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, or who may at any time during the fiscal year 1916 have been employed by or under said Secret Service Division.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If I understand this paragraph, a person in the Secret Service, or who may have been in the Secret Service at any time during the fiscal year 1916, if he should be transferred to any other department, could not be paid from any appropriation carried in this bill. I notice on page 36, lines 11 to 24, there is a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use for and in connection with the enforcement of the laws relating to the Treasury Department and the several branches of the public service under his control not exceeding a certain number of persons that are named, and in line 18 there is to be found "and four persons paid from the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes." It would seem to me that the paragraph on page 39 just read by the Clerk is inconsistent with the provision that I have read on page 36.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the provision authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use in the enforcement of the laws relating to the Treasury Department a certain number of Secret Service employees was designed to enable them to detail a certain number of men in some special case, like that of investigating a matter growing out of the mint or any of the Subtreasuries or the customhouses. The provision which has just been read limiting the power of detail of men from the Secret Service was enacted by Congress some years ago in order to break up an abuse.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I know about that; but what I do not understand, I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky, is that here on page 36 is to be found an express authorization that the Secretary of the Treasury may employ or detail four persons paid from the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes and use them, as I understand it, in some other work, while on page 39 is to be found a provision that any person who may be transferred from the Secret Service shall not be paid from any appropriation carried in this bill; and it seems to me the limitation on page 39 is inconsistent with the authorization on page 36, and, in fact, prohibits what is authorized in the other paragraph. The same language, I think, was in the last bill, but it seems to me it is not clear.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am endeavoring to ascertain just the point the gentleman is trying to inquire about.

Mr. MONDELL. What is it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It seems to me, I will say to the gentleman from Wyoming, that what is authorized on page 36, line 18, by the paragraph beginning on line 11, which specifically authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to use four persons who are paid from an appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes, is prohibited by the paragraph on page 39, lines 13 to 18, inclusive.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I suspect the distinction is found in this, that the provisions on page 39, lines 13 to 18, apply in cases where men are taken off the rolls of the Secret Service Division. A practice had come up of having these men transferred to other work altogether apart from the Secret Service work, while still being paid out of the appropriations for Secret Service purposes. Now, we prohibit that in the language contained between lines 13 and 18, page 39, and the other language to which the gentleman refers is not the case of having men taken off the rolls of the Secret Service, but is an express authorization for a detail of men in that service for special work in the Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In any branch of the Treasury service?

Mr. SHERLEY. There was no trouble, apparently, in accounting under those two items.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to the language of this item. Gentlemen will recall that there has been some change made in the language of the item and that certain words which occurred on page 69, at the bottom of the page, relative to the person of the President were stricken out. My notion is that in striking out certain words the paragraph has been left so that it is ambiguous or misleading. It starts out by providing:

For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States and of foreign Governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign Governments, and other felonies committed against the laws of the United States relating to the pay and bounty laws, hire and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary, per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for no other purpose whatever, except in the protection of the person of the President and of the person chosen to be President of the United States.

It seems to me that that is somewhat ambiguous. We have not made it entirely clear what it is that is proposed. It is possible in a hurried reading of the language that it is not clear to me when it is, in fact, clear.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, well, the distinction between the bill as it is reported and the language submitted to the committee is that the language submitted to the committee undertook to make permanent law the provision authorizing the protection of the President and of the person chosen to be President of the United States, and the committee did not consider it advisable to do that. The gentleman will recall that some years ago there was considerable discussion as to just what language should be used in order to properly embrace the case of the President elect, there being no law by which such a person was recognized as such until he is actually elected by the presidential electors President of the United States; and after considerable discussion it was thought that the language which we then adopted, and which we are now carrying, was sufficient for the practical results desired.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I am not so sure after having read the paragraph again myself but what it is clear. I recall that discussion in the committee, and it agreed upon what is in the bill, but from a hurried reading I thought that it was somewhat ambiguous, but now I think it is all right. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I ask unanimous consent to go back to page 36, line 6,

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to recur to page 36 for the purpose of offering an amendment to line 6.

Mr. SHERLEY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the gentleman's amendment is.

Mr. GILL. I do not want to offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman, but just want to speak to the paragraph.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that he can speak under the pro forma amendment without referring back.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, there is $175,000 appropriated in this bill for the purpose stated in this paragraph, and it brings to my mind the question as to whether it is advisable or not to appropriate that large sum of money for the cause specified. In our city this week the officials of the United States Government are taking over 20 men to the penitentiary. Those men have been convicted in the Federal courts of a violation of the oleomargine law. Those indictments have been on the books for about five years under Republican rule and under Republican officials, and it occurs to me to ask at this time, when the Government needs money as badly as it does, how comes it that such companies manufacturing butter or oleomargine, such as the Capital City Creamery, of Ohio, that has only been paying about a quarter of a cent a pound, has not been molested. Also the large company in Providence, R. I., that has not been molested.

In this court in St. Louis where these men were convicted the Federal judge exchanged positions with the judge in Kansas City. His son practiced in that court. His son accepts fees from men who are manufacturing oleomargarine. Another relative helped to put the prosecuting attorney in office, and not until the Democratic officials were put into those offices has there been any convictions—that is, to speak of; there were two, I believe, out of about 50 or 100 indictments. Now, does this thing exist all over this country? Oleomargarine is the poor man's food. He can not afford to buy the genuine butter. You pick up these little fellows and pull them before the bar of justice and send them to the penitentiary. In order to avoid a scene in our city at the Union Station the prisoners were taken around the city, so their fathers, mothers, wives, daughters, and children would not meet their relatives who were being taken to the Federal prison. Now, I ask, how is it that such things can happen in this country? I ask you how is it that large concerns, that would possibly bring a revenue to this Government of five or ten million dollars, are let go free?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILL. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Did I understand that under this Democratic administration small offenders, poor men who offend, are convicted, and rich men and corporations are not convicted, but allowed to flagrantly and notoriously violate the law and get off scot free? Is that the statement of the gentleman?

Mr. GILL. My point is this, that for 10 years the large creameries in Ohio and Providence, R. I., have only been paying a quarter of a cent a pound on tinted oleomargarine when, in justice, they should pay 10 cents per pound, and they have been let go free.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask unanimous consent that the time of my colleague be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague [Mr. GILL] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Chairman, these things are heart-rending. They appeal to me. I can not understand them. That is the reason why I am actuated to rise and ask these questions.

In reply to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], I will say yes, that Democratic attorneys who have lately been put into office have had charge of these cases in St. Louis, and about 20 people in that neighborhood have gone to the penitentiary. Personally I believe it is wrong. I do not uphold violators of the law, but I can not see the crime.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, Congress has passed a law making it a crime to sell oleomargarine as butter, and there has been a great deal of such fraud uncovered. Some $16,000,000 of frauds in connection with the oleomargarine business have been uncovered. Now, we have passed the law. The wisdom of the law is one thing, but its enforcement is another. We have a law which makes it a crime to undertake to sell oleomargarine of a certain character without paying a prescribed tax, and there have been repeated violations of that law, just as there are violations of the internal-revenue law in relation to distilled spirtts. There has been commendable activity on the part of the Internal Revenue Department recently in unearthing these frauds, which activity has resulted not only in stopping a great many of them but in recovering considerable sums of money to the Treasury and in putting some gentlemen in the penitentiary who ought to be there.

Mr. GILL. And letting others go who deserve a great deal more to be there.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am sure if the gentleman has any information, or if any of his constituents have any information, of the violation of the oleomargarine laws anywhere the Department of Justice will be more than glad to obtain that information, and will immediately undertake an investigation and prosecution if the facts show that it is warranted.

Mr. GILL. I am only bringing out the fact that this thing exists all over the country. These indictments have been pending in our courts for the last five or six years.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will tell him that to my knowledge there have been a number of indictments found in various parts of the country, in Illinois as well as Missouri. In the East quite a number of men have been indicted for violation of the internal-revenue laws touching oleomargarine. There are now out at work in various parts of the country a number of special agents of the Government who are giving their time to the investigation of these matters.

Mr. GILL. If we spend the sum of money mentioned in this bill, $175,000, I believe the revenue officials ought to get mighty busy and bring to justice the large dealers.

Mr. SHERLEY. They have, and $300,000 has been recovered for the benefit of the Treasury recently.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I can not believe that the Attorney General's office as now constituted, or as heretofore constituted, are to be criticized in connection with the prosecutions for the manufacture of oleomargarine contrary to law. I have no doubt whatever that they are doing the best they can, and it is quite likely that at St. Louis, where, as is suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GILL], they have prosecuted some of the smaller people, it has been with a view of getting some confessions from those who have been convicted, so that it will be easy to obtain the information against those higher up. They followed a somewhat similar proceeding at Chicago and they have convicted some very big men and concerns.

I think the oleomargarine law would not be favored by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who is now in charge of this bill, or the gentleman from St. Louis [Mr. GILL], who just spoke, or myself. I think we are all opposed to legislation of that character. Probably the oleomargarine law is violated more often to-day, and has been for some years, than any other law on the statute books. It is harder to obtain the information. When you consider, however, the proposition that was voted for in this House a few days ago for prohibition, in the form presented, where it was made legal to manufacture liquor, but illegal to manufacture it for sale, and then when you contemplate the inability to enforce a law which forbids the coloring of oleomargarine without the payment of a tax, anybody with common sense ought to know that it would be impossible for the Government to enforce that constitutional amendment against the sale of liquor; and that instead of bringing about prohibition, it would bring about free liquor everywhere.

A few years ago, since I became a Member of this House, a man who had worked for me came to me one day and said that he had bought out an oleomargarine route, and he was going to sell butter. Well, the man was really an honest fellow. He did not mean to do wrong. I made some inquiries from him, and learned that his intention was to buy uncolored oleomargarine, to get the coloring matter either by purchase or gift from the same people who sold him the uncolored oleomargarine, to take the two products into his barn and make colored oleomargarine, and sell it as fresh dairy butter. Well, having some sense himself, he took good advice and did not continue the business. I said to him, "You will be caught just as sure as you are alive." He said, "Oh, no. There is no danger at all. It is being done all over Chicago and elsewhere. There are a great number of routes here now. Nobody is bothering them." I guess that was true at that time, but they were collecting the information. I do not know how many men were sent to the penitentiary for doing this sort of thing, but it was a very large number. Yet I do not suppose they got one-tenth of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You mean in Chicago?

Mr. MANN. That is the only place where they have had the nerve to go ahead and convict them. In New York they do it openly, and everybody winks at it. Nobody has had the nerve really to try to enforce the law there. In fact, all laws in New York are doubtful of enforcement, but in Chicago they are attempting to enforce the law. It is not an easy thing. A man buys uncolored oleomargarine and pays 9½ cents a pound, or such a matter; and then colors it and sells it as colored oleomargarine or colored butter. As long as that temptation exists, there will be lots of violations of law. And if, in addition to that, a man could make whisky in his basement or cellar, at a cost of not over 20 cents a gallon, and could sell it for $1.50 or $2 a gallon illicitly, how could you enforce the law?

The Clerk read as follows:

CUSTOMS SERVICE.

For collecting the revenue from customs, $10,150,000. The provisions of the act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stats., p. 386), as amended by the act of April 27, 1904 (33 Stats., p. 396), authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to expend out of the appropriation for defraying the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs such amount as he may deem necessary, not exceeding $150,000 per annum, for the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenue, are further amended so as to increase the amount to $200,000, to be so expended for the fiscal year 1916.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I had intended to look up these sections of the Revised Statutes, but neglected to. The paragraph has been carried in the appropriation bills heretofore, but this is the first time that the limitation has been inserted of expenses relating to the collection of revenue. What are sections 3749 and 3750 of the Revised Statutes?

Mr. SHERLEY. Section 3749 reads as follows:

The Solicitor of the Treasury is authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to rent, for a period not exceeding three years, or to sell, at public sale, any unproductive lands, or other property of the United States acquired under judicial process or otherwise in the collection of debts, after advertising the time, place, and conditions of such sale for three months preceding the same in some newspaper published in the vicinity thereof, in such manner and upon such terms as may, in his judgment, be most advantageous to the public interest.

Mr. MANN. This is where we acquire land on a judgment sale.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. Section 3750 is as follows:

The Solicitor of the Treasury shall have charge of all lands and other property which have been or may be assigned, set off, or conveyed to the United States in payment of debts, and of all trusts created for the use of the United States in payment of debts due them; and of the sale and disposal of lands assigned or set off to the United States in payment of debts, or vested in them by mortgage or other security for the payment of debts: Provided, That this section shall not apply to real estate which has been or shall be assigned, set off, or conveyed to the United States, in payment of debts arising under the internal-revenue laws, nor to trusts created for the use of the United States, in payment of such debts due them.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to tell us how many pieces of land we have of that character which requires custody, care, protection, and so forth? Of course the appropriation is a very small one and has been carried from year to year.

Mr. SHERLEY. That was not brought out at the hearings, and I have not the information. This is simply the annual appropriation to take care of these cases as they may arise.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I remember that we have heard something about insidious lobbies, also that we have heard something from some in high places about the pressure that is being exerted to prevent the passage of the pending shipping legislation. Of course we did not expect any effort from those in high authority to influence anyone to support that legislation. So I want to read a letter that I understand has been sent to all Democratic Members, and I think has been received this morning:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: May I ask you to read the first 20 pages, at least, of a report recently made to the Senate in response to a resolution of that body by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce on the shipping situation? If you have time to read the entire report, I think you will find it highly illuminating.

With warm regards, I am,
Faithfully, yours, W. G. MCADOO.

As far as I know, that letter has not been received by any Republican. I have been wondering why, and I have come to the conclusion that it is because we do not need the information; in other words, we do not belong to the blind, misinformed, or ignorant described by the President in his Indianapolis speech.

As we have here a large expenditure given to the Secretary of the Treasury—some $10,150,000—I was wondering whether the money expended for the purpose of sending out this letter could be said to be used in the collection of revenue.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Here is a very large lump-sum appropriation, and I note that my genial friend from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] is present now as he usually is. It is an appropriation of $10,150,000—not statutory compensation in a good many places at least——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is, practically, because under the reorganization it was provided for a few years ago, and the President issued an order fixing the organization and compensation of certain officials under the act, which applies to every other department except the Department of Agriculture, due to the activity of the gentleman from Illinois, among others, so that none of these salaries could be increased.

Mr. MANN. They may be; but they could be reduced.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The details of all the positions and the services and compensation to be expended out of this appropriation are stated.

Mr. MANN. Here is $10,150,000 in a lump sum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It used to be over $11,000,000 in Republican administrations.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but there was then some revenue collected, and there would be if the Republicans were in office, which is more than can be stated now. Here we have the revenues falling off, partly because of the war but principally because of Democratic bad legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You do not blame the Democratic Party for the war in Europe? The Republicans used to take credit for large fine crops, the sunshine, and the rain.

Mr. MANN. It is true that the Republicans took credit for the resources and fertility of the soil and for the sun that shone upon it and the rains that wet the soil, but we brought something out of it worth while. You can not take credit for these things because with all these things still remaining, you have brought the country to a condition of hard times which it never witnessed before. We took credit because we made use of God's benefactions; but you could not take credit, because you have not got sense enough to make use of them. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] However, that has nothing to do with this question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The mere ukase of the gentleman from Illinois is not yet all persuasive in this country. I do not believe that he even persuades himself.

Mr. MANN. I do not have to persuade myself; I know it. The gentleman from New York tries to persuade himself, but he can not because he knows the same thing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What I know I know; and the gentleman does not know he knows, but he imagines he knows. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. No; I do not know what I imagine I know. I know that under the Republican administrations we had prosperity in the land, and it is not necessary for me to say what the conditions are now under a Democratic administration, or what they were 20 years ago under a Democratic administration, except that some people know a great deal better than those Members who are here now drawing fat salaries.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, I thought the gentleman from Illinois had concluded.

Mr. MANN. I really wanted to get some information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If that is all the gentleman desires, we can supply that.

Mr. MANN. Everybody knows these other things that I have said. I would like to know why it is that we can not have some kind of segregation of the $10,000,000 for the collection of customs revenues.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We can.

Mr. MANN. Why should not we have it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Every detail of that appropriation is at hand, what was expended in 1914 and what is proposed to be expended in 1916. Of course, the number of persons employed under this appropriation depends to some extent upon the volume of business to be done, and, with the European war, the imports to this country are not as great as they were before it commenced. Some of these persons, therefore, are not employed, but under the reorganization of the customs department the compensation of the great bulk of employees is fixed and permanent. It is merely a question of whether they shall be employed.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am aware of the fact that this used to be a permanent appropriation, but then we appropriated an additional sum from the continuing appropriation. That is true enough; but that does not dispose of this matter. The gentleman says that we can go to the Book of Estimates and find out. That is true of all this bill. I wonder the gentleman did not bring in a bill providing that there is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the various departments of the Government by direction of the President, $125,927,538.29, and then say if we wanted to know what this is for that we could go to the Book of Estimates.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Or ask me.

Mr. MANN. Or asked the gentleman from New York, but not successfully.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes, as I desire to ask a few questions of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZ-

GERALD] to the fact that only a few years ago, when I had something to do with the Indian appropriation bill, I remember he had a great deal to say about lump-sum appropriations. My recollection is that in that bill there was a lump-sum appropriation of something like $150,000 or $200,000, and the gentleman criticized it at great length, lectured the committee, and denounced generally the subject of lump-sum appropriations. I notice now, as he has advanced in the councils of this body, he brings in a bill that contains one lump-sum appropriation that is larger than the total amount carried in the Indian appropriation bill, amounting to over $10,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman must admit that some progress has been made in this matter since I have been chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Under the Revised Statutes, $2,750,000 were appropriated every six months to defray the cost of collection of customs. That amounted to $5,500,000 a year in a permanent appropriation. In addition, it was necessary for Congress to appropriate $5,000,000 or $5,500,000 additional to the permanent appropriation. After a number of years of effort, with the cooperation of other gentlemen, the permanent appropriation was repealed. The Customs Service was reorganized, a number of places was eliminated, and a provision enacted, under the leadership of the Committee on Appropriations, prohibiting the increasing of any of the compensations fixed in the order of reorganization. The entire Customs Service was placed on an entirely different basis.

The result of that legislation has been that for the next fiscal year and for the current fiscal year the customs service will cost $850,000 less than it cost a year ago. That is a saving of about 8 per cent, and it is a very considerable item. It may be that by degrees the committee will segregate this item in a different manner. Thus far, however, we have made considerable progress in effecting a reform in this particular service, and if the gentleman can judge from the experience of the past, from what the committee has done in this respect, he may rest content in the assurance that as time goes on we will so arrange these appropriations as to make them perfectly satisfactory. This appropriation, however, is different from some that have been criticized. The great bulk of the payments out of this appropriation is for services, the compensation for which is fixed and can not be changed. The number of persons to be employed will depend very largely upon the volume of imports and whether the imports are at certain points or at other points. So with the information which is now obtained in connection with this appropriation in the estimates and from the information obtained since the enactment of the law requiring information of this character there has been made possible a control and scrutiny of these appropriations that heretofore have not existed.

Mr. Chairman, this appropriation could be segregated so as to provide for the payment of salaries of customs employees. They receive the great bulk of this appropriation. In 1914 $9,255,868 were expended for that purpose. Special agents and employees of a similar character received $261,000. The rents could be segregated, $132,000 being expended for rent, contingent expenses about half a million dollars, and certain other miscellaneous items. The tentative pay roll of the customs service for 1916 is $10,386,521.50, and yet it is expected by reason of vacancies that will not be filled, by suspension of people employed, by the nonnecessity to do certain services, to save approximately $225,000, which will bring the expenditures within the limit of $10,150,000.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There have been many of these little submarine attacks from the Republican side of the House, as if this country were on the toboggan toward destruction, the gentleman in charge of them usually being the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], whom I do not now see in the Chamber. He bobs in here every little while and reads some irrelevant matter into the RECORD, or makes an irrelevant speech, and immediately disappears from our legislative duties. Because of these attacks I want to call his attention to some facts he seems to have overlooked. A very recent issue of a metropolitan paper gives this synopsis of the statement of foreign trade balances of the United States, and I desire to call the attention of our Republican friends particularly to this, because they fear that we are not doing any business in this country:

HUGE TRADE BALANCES.

The world is buying from us at a rate and on terms to make us at the same time its merchant and its banker.

For last week the Government's foreign trade figures at 13 test ports showed a balance in favor of this country of more than $26,000,000. From those test districts the Department of Commerce estimates the week's balance for the whole country at more than $32,000,000.

For the first 19 business days of the new year the foreign trade balance shatters all previous records. The average daily balance has been not less than $6,500,000. This would give, up to last Saturday night, some $120,000,000. For the whole month the balance may run nearer an average of $7,000,000 a day.

Five Sundays and New Year's Day will leave for the whole month when it is closed 25 business days. The daily average of $6,500,000 would give more than $162,000,000 for all January; the average of $7,000,000 would give some $175,000,000!

In December there was a balance in our favor of nearly $132,000,000. From the two months together we are assured of a trade balance—in scarcely more than fifty business days—well over $300,000,000.

Only a few weeks ago, following the outbreak of the war, it was exactly $300,000,000 against us on current balance, which made our position in the international credit market seem desperate. The supreme questions were whether there were any possible way to cancel that foreign balance against us with anything but gold, and whether, under the circumstances of fiscal demoralization the world over we could possibly spare that much gold to achieve the imperative liquidation.

We did begin to send gold. Our bankers did prepare to protect our international credit with a gold pool. But the foreign balance demanding settlement, we never canceled with gold; we never had to. We wiped it out with our exports of the farm and of the factory. We cleared it all up before the end of the old year.

And now we are beginning the new year with trade credits abroad for January between $150,000,000 and $175,000,000. We are lending credits everywhere. We are refusing to ask gold which we could demand. We don't want more gold; we do want business.

We are no longer concerning ourselves about—we are not even remembering—our debits of only the other day. We are marveling at the way in which the whole world is owing us at the rate of five, six, seven million dollars a day more, while we become the creditor nation of the world.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri has called our attention to what a godsend the awful devastation in Europe has been to the Democratic Party.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, as usual the gentleman is unfortunately wrong.

Mr. MONDELL. We are selling cannon and cannon balls——

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is mistaken. We are sending over food products.

Mr. MONDELL. Armor and submarines and armored automobiles and all sorts of things to spread that devastation abroad, and that fact has changed the disastrous trade balance that the legislation of the gentleman's party has brought upon us.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. BORLAND. That is a familiar answer, but does not the gentleman realize the fact that if large contracts had been placed in this country for munitions of war they could not have been finished possibly in December, and that this balance in January and December is not from that class of shipments at all?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the exports that are not munitions of war are largely clothing and foodstuffs and those things that are required of us by reason of the war, and would not be required in such large quantities except for the war. Why, the gentleman himself admitted the situation. He called attention to the fact that before the war began our trade balances were shifting tremendously against us, the inevitable effect of the Underwood tariff law, large imports coming from abroad and little market abroad for our goods.

The war came on and changed the scene. One very curious fact of this situation is that, with these enormous exportations of goods of all classes and kinds, the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury are trying to make the American people believe that we must spend thirty, forty, or fifty million dollars of the Government's money to buy ships to export goods in, right now when the balance of trade is running in our favor by the exportation of foodstuffs to an extent that is alarming the people of the country, raising the price of bread and wheat.

At a time when bills are before the committees of Congress proposing to prevent the export of numerous articles, when export is great on account of the foreign demand, the President is trying to make the people believe—aided and abetted by the Secretary of the Treasury and various other gentlemen—that we have not ships enough to carry our exports to foreign shores. If the balance of trade is so tremendously in our favor, as the gentleman has suggested, surely we are not needing more ships to carry our goods to foreign lands.

Mr. Chairman, I did not rise for the purpose of answering the gentleman's statement in regard to our foreign trade, but to make this observation in regard to this item. There is an old saying to the effect that there is no great loss without some small gain. Well, that is true in all times except under a Democratic administration. [Applause on the Republican side.] We have had an enormous loss in revenue through the customhouses. We ought to have some small gain in the cost of collecting revenues; and yet it develops in the hearings that it costs about as much to collect the little dribblings of revenues that we secure under Democratic tariff legislation——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that I may have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. As it does to collect the plentiful revenues that flow in through the customhouses under a Republican administration. It costs just as much to collect a small duty as it does to collect a large duty. There is a little saving when we place an article on the free list, but comparatively little. There has been a great reduction in the amount collected and the cost of collection in comparison with the revenue received is, of course, considerably increased. And so here is a great loss without any small gain. We not only lose in revenue, but we are compelled to pay practically the same amount for the collection of these diminished, uncertain, and unsatisfactory sums.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, going back to the opening of this discussion, which has wandered far afield, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] alluded to my statement a few days ago, when the Agricultural bill was under consideration, in reference to making lump-sum appropriations for compensation of personal services. I merely want to say to the gentleman from Illinois and to the committee that I do not sanction the lump-sum appropriation in this bill any more than I did in the Agricultural bill or any other appropriation that is made for the payment of personal services, but the statement made by me at that time, and made by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee a few minutes ago, does make a difference between lump-sum appropriations in any other appropriation bill than the Agricultural bill, for the reason that under a provision of law the salaries paid from these lump sums can not be increased. I think, as I said in the beginning, that this amount for the payment of the administration of the Customs Service should be segregated, and I hope that the time will very soon come when in the preparation of these bills they will be brought into the House, not only this item but all other items that are providing for the compensation of personal services, segregated so that not only the committee making up the appropriation bill but that the membership of the Congress may have information not only as to the amount that is paid for personal services, but the individual salaries and who receive them, and I will always lend my assistance to the gentleman from Illinois or any other gentleman looking toward that end.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I did not have the pleasure of hearing what the gentleman from Illinois nor the gentleman from New York, the chairman of this committee, had to say in reference to this lump-sum appropriation, and therefore I can not reply as did the gentleman from North Carolina who has just taken his seat. I surmise, however, that they criticized those of us who, when the Agricultural appropriation bill was up, took occasion to criticize a lump-sum appropriation and have failed to make a similar criticism of this paragraph of the pending measure.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Please do not accuse me of that.

Mr. COOPER. I did not make any accusation; it is nothing but a surmise.

Mr. MANN. I was criticizing this lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. COOPER. I should suppose that the gentleman would himself criticize it and probably criticize us for not criticizing it. The other day when the Agricultural bill was up I suggested that all of these lump-sum appropriations were based on detailed estimates sent in by the respective departments, and that there was not any valid reason then, nor is there any such reason now, why 98 per cent of appropriations in the bill can not cover specifically the detailed estimates sent up by the departments, excepting, of course, such estimates as the committee may decide to reject. Lump-sum appropriations prevent the man who pays the taxes from knowing how the public moneys are to be expended. When a $50,000 lump-sum appropriation is made to cover a great number of estimates the official who expends that sum is not bound to spend it in accordance with the detailed estimates, but he spends it in his discretion.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. So far as the amount of compensation paid from the lump sums in any other of these appropriation bills and the Agricultural bill is concerned, he can not do what the gentleman has said. He can not pay a compensation this year greater than the compensation paid for the same service last year by the same provision of law that applies to every appropriation bill except the Agricultural appropriation.

Mr. COOPER. There is not any reason why the law itself should not set forth specifically the purposes for which an appropriation is made and the amount that can be expended in the accomplishment of those purposes. Such provisions ought to have been in the Agricultural bill, as they ought to be in every other bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin long enough to make a suggestion. I do not think that the gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from New York are correct when they assume that this lump-sum appropriation is proper because it can not advance salaries. The latter assumption is incorrect. It is true that under the law where you have a place under a designated title, which is peculiar, you can not advance the salary of that place. It is equally true that you can abolish a place and create another office with a different title and advance that salary, and that has not been infrequently done both by this administration and prior administrations. It is also true that under this arrangement now no one can tell how much money is being expended for different classes of work or how many people are being kept in office who ought not to be kept there because they have nothing to do. Now, I am not disposed to criticize the Committee on Appropriations for bringing in this lump-sum appropriation. It is true that only recently we repealed the law. There was a law that made an appropriation of—what was it, $5,000,000 or $5,500,000 permanent appropriation?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Five million dollars.

Mr. MANN. And that appropriation of $5,500,000 was in the sundry civil bill. And where we did that it was not very easy to segregate the items, because one was a permanent appropriation and one was an annual appropriation, and it was not very practicable to tell out of which appropriations salaries, and so forth, were to be paid.

Now, I was a party to the conspiracy to repeal that permanent appropriation law. And one of the reasons it was repealed was that with the permanent appropriation law standing it was not practicable to segregate the item in the annual bill, and it was expected that when the permanent law was repealed and we would make an annual appropriation for the entire services of collecting the customs, we would segregate the items. I have no doubt the Committee on Appropriations, as soon as they could get the information from an unwilling Treasury Department—and whoever has control of it will always be unwilling—and can get the time to put it in shape, the committee will bring in items segregated at least to some degree, and know how many people are being paid as customs agents, how many are being paid for clerical work, in various other branches of the service. It is nonsense to say that we can segregate all the items in the District of Columbia in the departments down to charwomen and up to secretaries and the Cabinet and then can not make any segregation at all in the Customs Service, because we can.

Now, there is one other question I would like to ask the gentleman from New York apart from that. What is the name of the customs district that Washington is in?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is numbered.

Mr. MANN. I know that; but what is it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is numbered now.

Mr. MANN. I know that; but what is it? What is the number of New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. I have no interest in it.

Mr. MANN. Now, this shows how absolutely silly we sometimes act on advice from some one. Last year we included in this law, the sundry civil bill:

> Hereafter the collector of customs of each customs district shall be officially designated by the number of the district for which he is appointed and not by the name of the port where the headquarters are situated.

Now, I did know where the New York district was and where the Boston district and where the Georgetown district—which is this—was and where the Chicago district was, but there is nobody in the House that knows the name of the district that he lives in now, and even the gentleman from New York, living in the greatest collection district in the United States, if not in the world, does not happen to know and can not tell without reference to the books the number of the district in which he lives.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have lost my number. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The other day I was trying to make out an income-tax return, and among other things asked was, "In what district did you make a return last year?" Now, I know I made a return in the Chicago district, but I do not know what the number is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was the internal-revenue district.

Mr. MANN. I understand. They thought they would clarify the situation by putting in numbers as the names of districts, and nobody can carry the numbers in his head. One knows where New York City is and one knows where New Orleans is, and one knows where all the large cities in the country are, or something about it, but there is nobody on earth who can carry the numbers of the different collection districts in his head. That is one silly, silly thing we did at the suggestion of the department last year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, the gentleman is mistaken when he thinks that it is not believed by members of the Committee on Appropriations desirable to segregate this item.

Mr. MANN. I do not say that the members of the Committee on Appropriations did not think it desirable to segregate the item.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I thought the gentleman said he did.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. I said, on the contrary, I had no doubt that the committee would segregate the items as soon as they could reach them and get the information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would have been done in this bill were it not for the fact that at a short session like this there is not time to work out such changes. The committee were, I think, 42 days in taking the testimony on this bill.

Now, as to this question of the change from names to numbers of customs districts, it had a very good purpose, which has been served. I do not believe there is a Member of this House, except myself, who, even if he knew the number of his district, could tell its boundaries.

Mr. MANN. He would know where it was, anyhow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I doubt whether the gentleman from Illinois could define the boundaries of the Chicago customs district.

Mr. MANN. But what difference does it make about the boundaries?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If you did not know the boundaries, how could you tell whether you were in the district or not?

Mr. MANN. You could tell whether you did business through the customhouse, even if you lost your number. I think the gentleman has lost his reason just now. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I knew that the gentleman from Illinois would fall into that trap. How could he tell whether he was in a certain congressional district or not unless he knew the boundaries of the district? He might be elected from it, but that would not make much difference, except to be more or less a criterion of the intelligence of the people in the district.

But, as I say, the names of these districts were changed and numbers substituted for a very good reason. After the reorganization of the Customs Service some districts were abolished, the headquarters were located in certain cities, and the district took the name of the city in which the office of the collector was located. That aroused considerable jealousy and ill feeling in certain localities, where the people of a city of as much importance in population, resources, and commerce as the city in which the headquarters were located felt that their city was being discriminated against because it was not a port of entry, while people would imagine that the other city was a port of entry. When the reorganization took place it appeared that the headquarters had been located at certain places, but upon reconsideration it was found desirable to change the headquarters from one city to another. If a district had received the name of the city in which the headquarters of the district were, and then if the headquarters were changed to another city, to be compelled to change the name of the district to that of the new headquarters would start another riot among the people from whom the headquarters had been taken. So last year a provision was inserted conferring on the Treasury Department the power to transfer the headquarters from one place within the district to another and to eliminate this question of local jealousy and local pride and bombastic boasting because of the fact that the district was named after a particular community, by providing that the district should be numbered and known by number thereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, of course, I appreciate the grievance of the gentleman from Chicago. One of the things that made Chicago famous was the fact that it was known as the port of Chicago. Well, when that designation was abolished, and instead of being the port of Chicago it was collection district 23, the gentlemen can understand the indignation and vehement protests of the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why, yes.

Mr. MANN. Is that the number of the Chicago district?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have a list of the numbers here.

Mr. MANN. I never heard it before.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was coming to that and was about to explain.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not understand, but I am not surprised at the asininity of any Democratic legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The collection district having its headquarters at the city of New York is collection district No. 10. Now, I can imagine the sentiments of the gentleman from Illinois, in collection district No. 11, when he hears some of his constituents saying, "Come 'leven." That does not add to the fame and greatness and distinction of the city, but detracts from its glory, although it is characteristic of the prevalent form of amusement in that community. [Laughter.]

Now, of course, Mr. Chairman, all that would be very interesting if true, but the House understands that I have been speaking in a thoroughly facetious manner. Now, for the enlightenment of the gentleman from Illinois, so that there will be no misunderstanding, I shall place in the RECORD a list of the districts, with their numbers, notifying the gentleman from Illinois that the collection district with headquarters at Chicago is No. 39.

Mr. MANN. I am glad that the gentleman has finally discovered the number. He had two guesses before and missed it each time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I said I was speaking in a thoroughly facetious manner.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said that after he discovered that he was mistaken the two previous times.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I had been serious, the remarks I made would have been directed to my genial friend from Philadelphia [Mr. MOORE], whose collection district bears the cabalistic number 11.

Mr. MOORE. I know the gentleman will yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the statement I made would apply with equal propriety to either community. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE. I hesitate to break in as between the two great cities of New York and Chicago, but has it not been a real pleasure to the gentleman from New York to know that the Federal Reserve Board has dovetailed the best part of New York with the Philadelphia district and thus added very much to the harmony of the occasion?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I notice that every time it has been desired to put some life into Philadelphia it has been done by amputating a portion of New York and attaching it to that slumbering town. [Laughter.] The same process was necessary in connection with the Federal reserve system.

Mr. MOORE. Has it not been a joy and a pleasure to the people of New York to know that they have made this pleasant attachment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I realize that it has not harmed New York any.

Mr. MOORE. It has done it a great deal of good.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope it will have the beneficial effect on Philadelphia that was intended.

With the consent of the House, I will put in the RECORD a copy of the Executive order which gives the numbers of the existing customs districts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Without objection, that privilege will be granted.

There was no objection.

The document referred to is as follows:

DESIGNATION OF PRESENT CUSTOMS COLLECTION DISTRICTS BY NUMBERS.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, September 4, 1914.

To collectors of customs and others concerned:

The following Executive order, dated the 27th of August, 1914, officially designating the present customs collection districts by numbers, is published for your information:

"Hereafter, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 1, 1914, making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, the present customs collection districts are officially designated by numbers and will be known as follows:

"The district of Maine and New Hampshire to be district No. 1.
"The district of eastern Vermont to be district No. 2.
"The district of western Vermont to be district No. 3.
"The district of Massachusetts to be district No. 4.
"The district of Rhode Island to be district No. 5.
"The district of Connecticut to be district No. 6.
"The district of St. Lawrence to be district No. 7.
"The district of Rochester to be district No. 8.
"The district of Buffalo to be district No. 9.
"The district of New York to be district No. 10.
"The district of Philadelphia to be district No. 11.
"The district of Pittsburgh to be district No. 12.

"The district of Maryland to be district No. 13.
"The district of Virginia to be district No. 14.
"The district of North Carolina to be district No. 15.
"The district of South Carolina to be district No. 16.
"The district of Georgia to be district No. 17.
"The district of Florida to be district No. 18.
"The district of Mobile to be district No. 19.
"The district of New Orleans to be district No. 20.
"The district of Sabine to be district No. 21.
"The district of Galveston to be district No. 22.
"The district of Laredo to be district No. 23.
"The district of El Paso to be district No. 24.
"The district of Eagle Pass to be district No. 25.
"The district of Arizona to be district No. 26.
"The district of southern California to be district No. 27.
"The district of San Francisco to be district No. 28.
"The district of Oregon to be district No. 29.
"The district of Washington to be district No. 30.
"The district of Alaska to be district No. 31.
"The district of Hawaii to be district No. 32.
"The district of Montana and Idaho to be district No. 33.
"The district of Dakota to be district No. 34.
"The district of Minnesota to be district No. 35.
"The district of Duluth and Superior to be district No. 36.
"The district of Wisconsin to be district No. 37.

WM. P. MALBURN, Acting Secretary.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Before we leave the Secretary of the Treasury, who is one of the most powerful of the Cabinet officers and who has to do with the collection of our revenues and who has recently manifested a great interest in the passage of the shipping bill, in which the President is also interested, I desire to say that during the last two days announcements have been coming from the Treasury Department in respect to an alleged congestion of commerce at various ports, the intimation being that there is so much commerce seeking export that the shipping bill desired by the administration should be speedily passed on pain that an extra session may be called.

Yesterday the announcement was made that the Secretary of the Treasury, who usually attends to his business and who does not go out on lecture tours, undertook to collect from the various collectors of the ports, reports of the congestion in the various districts.

And with remarkable spontaneity a number of the more loyal of the collectors indicated that there was very great congestion at their ports; that there was much commerce awaiting ships; that there was much grain awaiting vessels to carry it abroad; that there was much cotton on the wharves seeking an outlet to foreign countries.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Was the gentleman present a few moments ago when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] informed us about the enormous and unprecedented shipments of cotton abroad of late?

Mr. MOORE. I did not happen to be present.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman enlightened us as to the most unprecedented movement of cotton abroad.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman has probably been reading the reports that come from the administration.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman was telling us of the enormous shipments of cotton abroad.

Mr. BORLAND. I was reading from the report of a Cabinet officer.

Mr. MOORE. Then, the gentleman was giving the information that he got from the administration, and he is to be commended for his fairness in stating that fact openly and broadly to the House.

This morning the Secretary of the Treasury renews his crusade in favor of the shipping bill, and continues to get reports from his subordinates at various ports. Here is a report from the Philadelphia Record, a good Democratic newspaper, this morning:

FREIGHT CONGESTED HERE—OTHER PORTS TO SOUTH TAXED TO LIMIT BECAUSE OF LACK OF SHIPS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 8.

Supplemental reports on the shipping situation announced to-night by Secretary McAdoo showed serious freight congestion at Philadelphia, Mobile, and New Orleans, but practically normal conditions at Savannah, Charleston, Jacksonville, Key West, and Tampa.

Collector Berry's telegram was as follows:

"Investigation shows congestion in merchandise intended for export to foreign ports. Grain elevators all full. Unusual amount of export merchandise on piers. Exporters claim shortage in tonnage. Can not secure space for English ports until latter part February or first of March. Later for large lots. Space for Glasgow can be had this month; Netherlands ports, no space until May; Scandinavian and Mediterranean ports, no space until March or April. No congestion in coastwise merchandise."

The collector at Galveston reported that, without docks at Bolivar and Texas City, his port "would be congested to the limit." The Tampa collector stated that exports at Pensacola would be doubled if neutral ships were available.

In order to find out what the situation really is I wired several friends in Philadelphia who have a fund of information, and from one of them, the secretary of the commissioners of navigation, I have received this telegram, which would not seem to confirm the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury that there is such congestion as would now warrant the passage of the shipping bill, or that in these times of business depression and deficit in the Treasury we should spend $30,000,000 to buy foreign ships made by foreign labor to carry cotton and grain to foreign countries.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Suppose they should pass the shipping bill of which we hear so much talk, has the gentleman any assurance that one of these lines would run out of Philadelphia?

Mr. MOORE. Not at all; we have the opinion, as it came to us through the agricultural bill, that the administration would like to limit all commerce to three ports, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, so often and so ably defended by my friend from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] and my other friend from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. MADDEN. What ports were they?

Mr. MOORE. One, if I recollect right, was San Francisco, one was New York, and the other Boston. The Gulf ports were entirely cut out, and all other Atlantic ports except Boston and New York. Only these ports, which can take the deep-draft vessels of the great Shipping Trust that is so talked about in this House, were considered.

[The time of Mr. MOORE having expired, by unanimous consent he was given five minutes more.]

Mr. MOORE. In view of the agitation of this question by the Secretary of the Treasury hastening the passage of the shipping bill, which will necessitate our putting our hands in the people's pockets and taking $30,000,000 more of their money to enter into a scheme of Government ownership, I have this telegram by way of reply:

PHILADELPHIA, February 9, 1915.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Philadelphia shipping men deny any unusual congestion in merchandise for foreign export. Only temporary trouble here, due to upsetting of regular sailing schedules by reason of congested situation in European ports, which has handicapped rapid discharging and loading there, and delay of ships by bad weather. Admit regular line services to foreign ports practically filled for February, but open for bookings for March and later sailings. Plenty of full cargo tramp steamships offering for business. There is free movement of full cargo grain steamships under past contracts, with no congestion of berths. The excess grain on track beyond elevator capacities will soon be relieved by boats here and due. Great improvement reported in condition of congestion at London and Liverpool, which in turn will clarify situation here.

GEO. F. SPROULE,
Secretary Commissioners of Navigation.

That statement alone would seem to indicate that the Secretary of the Treasury is gathering information which is misleading, and he is putting out statements which are not borne out by the facts. There is a temporary congestion at some of the ports, but it is not such a congestion as will warrant this Congress in following the administration in its desire, at this time of all times, to take $30,000,000 out of the Public Treasury, with which to buy foreign ships made by foreign labor and manned by low-priced seamen, to compete with American vessels and to break up the shipyards in the United States, which thus far have been able to give decent and respectable employment to American labor.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it not also stated in the morning paper that, on an average, grain ships are required to wait in European ports for 30 days before they can be assured of unloading their cargo?

Mr. MOORE. I have not seen that particular statement, but it is true that the ships are held up on the other side owing to conditions which I hope to describe in a moment.

Mr. TOWNER. Then, it would be useless for us to send more ships from this side at the present time, would it not?

Mr. MOORE. It would simply be clogging the conditions over there and making them worse than ever.

Mr. MADDEN. But nobody thinks that we are going to send them, surely.

Mr. MOORE. If it was not for the speculation in grain, cotton, and war munitions, I question whether there would be any talk about additional ships at all. But the men who are making money by reason of the distress of European nations are the men who in this emergency desire ships built and provided for them at the expense of the Government. They want to make money at the expense of the poor devils whose blood and lives are being wasted on the other side, and at the expense of the American taxpayer who will have to pay the bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Another gentleman who is very well posted on this question, one of the very best maritime men I know, has sent me this statement:

Secretary McAdoo's reports of New York, Baltimore, and Norfolk collectors as to cause of congestion of ocean traffic inaccurate and misleading. Baltimore and New York are shipping grain to capacity of their terminal facilities. Unprecedented and unnatural accumulation of cotton at Norfolk is consequent upon conditions not associated with scarcity of vessels. They report 85,500 bales of cotton; total exports from Norfolk for fiscal year 1913 was 72,500 bales and for 1912, 21,300 bales.

FRANK L. NEALL.

So that those who are complaining about the lack of ability to get cotton out of the country ought to look at these figures. All they sent out in 1912 from Norfolk was 21,300 bales. All they sent out in 1913 was 72,500 bales, and thus far in this year they have sent out 85,500 bales.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I hope the committee will not start to participate in this perpetual performance at the other end of the Capitol on this shipping bill.

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman will not object this time, I shall not raise any question hereafter as to the 15 minutes that the gentleman took a moment ago in which to explain a lump-sum item about automobiles for Cabinet officers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman if he noticed the figures for the shipment of cotton for January? For each week during the month of January the figures show that the shipment of cotton was above normal.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman has that in mind, because I am going to put something in the RECORD as to that. My correspondent, Mr. Frank L. Neall, from whom I had the wire which I just read, gives me this additional information:

PHILADELPHIA, February 8, 1915.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MOORE: * * * New York: Exports of grain from New York in January, 1915, were 8,500,000 bushels, which is at the rate of 102,000,000 bushels per annum. At no date since 1898 has New York exported 100,000,000 bushels or over in a single year. In 1912 New York exported 49,000,000 bushels; 1913, 60,000,000 bushels; 1914, 57,000,000 bushels.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I am trying to give some New York statistics, but I yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where did the gentleman get these statistics?

Mr. MOORE. From Mr. Frank L. Neall, a statistician, and one of the best-posted maritime experts in this country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What does he do for a living?

Mr. MOORE. He is a shipping man.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Belonging in New York?

Mr. MOORE. No; to Philadelphia, which is far superior to New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And he is furnishing this information about New York conditions?

Mr. MOORE. He is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Good night!

Mr. MOORE. It is necessary for us to go out of New York once in a while to find out what they are doing in New York.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to add this, that I know Mr. Neall, and he is a shipping expert known throughout the country. He was sent to Europe for the purpose of investigating the shipping question.

Mr. MOORE. He is one of the best-posted men in the shipping business in the United States. He has the figures and the statistics. He states that in January last, while this alleged congestion was on, they shipped from New York 18,500,000 bushels of wheat, which is at the rate of 102,000,000 bushels of wheat per annum. Then he continues:

Large amounts of grain are held in New York on speculation and also for foreign account, later to be shipped out periodically, as may be directed by foreign Governments and owners.

You see, it is a mere matter of business, even with the speculators. Yet the Secretary of the Treasury is collecting these port statistics to show that because a lot of grain is waiting to be shipped in a normal way from New York that therefore we ought to buy $30,000,000 worth of foreign ships. That is the reason this information is important and ought to be instructive to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Neall adds:

The congestion at New York is largely owing to overtaxing of the trunk-line grain elevators, the intermediary between the railroads and the ocean craft. As a consequence, the trunk-line railroad grain elevators are unable to handle the traffic tendered them.

Baltimore: During month of January, 1915, Baltimore exported 9,160,000 bushels of grain, and the newspapers list vessels coming for cargoes that were so numerous that the supply of pilots was exhausted, and as many as three vessels were brought up tandem by one pilot. Baltimore for months has been, and is at the moment, what is called "a capacity port." In other words, she has shipped to the full ability of her trunk-line grain elevators to handle the grain from elevators into ocean-going craft, of which there has been uninterruptedly a large surplus of tonnage waiting to load their cargoes of grain.

Baltimore has done everything—has furnished all of the ships that the railroads could fill.

As to the Norfolk situation, Mr. Neall is also well informed. He concludes his letter as to Norfolk as follows:

Norfolk: Collector reports in warehouses, under sheds, etc., at Norfolk, 85,586 bales of cotton, valued in Germany at $5,476,000. The exports of cotton from Norfolk for fiscals years as stated are as follows:

	Bales.
1912	21,309

The one cry from the South for months past has been to get cotton to the seaboard, either for export or coastwise movement. In like manner, foreign buyers have invested in cotton so as to control and eventually ship out to provide for their monthly requirements. Norfolk is not now recognized as a port of grain export, and only exported 600,000 bushels in 1914, the last of which was shipped in March. Newport News exported in 1914, 3,297,000 bushels of grain, and during January, 1915, 800,000 bushels of grain.

Yours, truly,

FRANK L. NEALL.

It will be seen that this Norfolk cotton is valued in Germany at $5,476,000. Somebody is interested in getting it over there. It is all for the purpose of getting the money. The grain is waiting to go in the usual way, but somebody wants to sell it quickly; they want to get the money and they can not get the money without the ships. It is money, money, money. They want ships paid for by the United States Government to get the money, and for whom? For the people in the United States who are speculators in grain and speculators in cotton. Is it for the cotton planter of the South or for the man who sows the wheat out yonder on the plains of Nebraska and Kansas? It does not seem so.

I have not time to give all of the statistics I have here, but I repeat that we are confronted with an abnormal pressure to pass a shipping bill because of the people who have grain and cotton stored up and who want to get the money for it by making the people buy the ships to secure it for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE. And I will ask leave to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE. Referring further to the propaganda of the Secretary of the Treasury and in further explanation of my rising to criticize the reports that are being sent out as to the congestion of commerce to induce Members to vote for the administration bill to buy foreign ships, made by foreign labor and to be manned by foreign seamen, I quote from this report given out from Washington yesterday and published in the New York Sun. It refers to the actual conditions in London and Liverpool at this time:

CONGESTION RELIEVED—CONDITIONS AT PORT OF LONDON GREATLY IMPROVED.

WASHINGTON, February 6.

The British ambassador received to-day the following notice from the London Government:

"You may make public the fact that congestion at and in port of London has now greatly abated; only a very few ships are now at Gravesend awaiting berth, and delays to which vessels have formerly been subjected need no longer be expected. Labor is sufficient for necessities of the port.

"At Liverpool delays are less than they were, and they will be further reduced owing to arrangements being made by a committee representing the principal port authorities of Great Britain."

There is an answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. There has been congestion at London and Liverpool, but it is clearing up. The Secretary of the Treasury is urging the purchase of foreign ships, in spite of a temporary congestion that will soon be over. The people will have to pay the piper.

Go on gathering your information if you want to do so, Mr. Secretary of the Treasury; go on and pick it up from political sources everywhere along the coast line; go on pretending you are doing it in the interest of the grower of grain and the planter of cotton; but bear in mind that when you spend $30,000,000 to buy foreign ships and displace American labor in American shipyards you are running up against a condition of congestion that does not warrant so serious a departure.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I will.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the growers of grain are not complaining. According to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, December, 1914, they sent abroad corn, wheat, and barley to the extent of 40,900,000 bushels.

Mr. MOORE. And it was not being held up.

Mr. GOOD. Whereas for the same month 1913 we only sent abroad 5,900,000 bushels.

Mr. MOORE. Was there any difficulty in sending it?

Mr. GOOD. Not at all.

Mr. MOORE. I am thankful the gentleman interrupted me. It is good to be confirmed by so eminent an authority. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation made by the sundry civil act for the fiscal year 1915 for the necessary expenses and salaries of the customs service at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, is continued and made available for the fiscal year 1916.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is to reappropriate money appropriated last year for the customhouse at the Panama-Pacific Exposition to be held at San Francisco. That exposition, I believe, opens the last day of this month or the 1st day of next month.

Mr. KETTNER and Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. The 20th of February.

Mr. MANN. Then I am a little slow, as usual. It is a great exposition. I would like to inquire whether anybody on this side of the House or the other side knows what, if anything, is necessary to be done or is thought of being done in reference to official representation of the United States or Congress at that exposition or at the opening of the Panama Canal this year, if we reach it this year. The Panama Canal was to have been opened, I believe, formally on the 12th or the 13th of March. There was a discussion some time ago in reference to what would be done. I was called to the White House, I think early in January, and I heard some little discussion of the subject from the President, but I have not heard of anything since being done in the House or the Senate on the subject. Is it the intention to have the opening of the Panama Canal formally this summer? If so, is it the intention of having any representation of the executive departments or the legislative branch of the Government? Is it the intention to invite to that formal opening ex-President Roosevelt and ex-President Taft, who had so much to do with the provisions that resulted in the Panama Canal being constructed? Is it the intention to have any representation of the executive branch of the Government or the legislative branch of the Government at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco? I think at all the other expositions—that is my recollection—of any size there have been some committees appointed to go there. That was the case, I believe, at Portland; that was the case at St. Louis; and it was the case at Jamestown. I do not remember whether it was at Buffalo; I believe it was in the case of Chicago, and it was at Omaha and Seattle. Now, is it the desire for economy or a proof of incompetency that nothing yet has been done in reference to either one of those propositions?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman ask that question of me?

Mr. MANN. No; I was trying to get a rise out of somebody who had information. [Laughter.] I knew if the gentleman from New York had information he would freely give it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I really did not know whether the gentleman was asking me or asking himself. He put the questions and turned to take his seat, and I thought perhaps he was talking to himself.

Mr. MADDEN. What did the gentleman finally conclude?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I have not reached that point yet. I thought the gentleman was talking to himself. My recollection is that a short time ago the gentleman from Illinois, a few others, and myself were honored with an invitation to participate at a conference at which the plans were to be discussed as to what was to be done in connection with the opening of the Panama Canal. Unfortunately I had to leave the city. I supposed the gentleman from Illinois was in a position to furnish that information as to the result of that conference. I understand that a proposition was made tentatively to appropriate $250,000 to defray the expenses of the ceremonies connected with the opening of the Panama Canal. In a more or less indirect and circuitous manner the information reached me that the program contemplated a charter of two or three or more vessels upon which to embark, like the animals in Noah's Ark, all the Members of Congress and take them down to the canal for the ceremonies. I could not think of anything in sacred or profane history that would picture the procession more than that old song of—

The animals went in one by one.
One more river to cross.
Says the ant to the elephant—

The gentleman from Illinois to the gentleman from Kansas—

Who are you pushing?
One more river to cross.

[Laughter.]

And I venture to suggest that I would just as soon be incarcerated in St. Elizabeth's as to be a member of any such procession or party. I think that 430 Members of the House and 96 Senators, however much they might add to the dignity and glory of any occasion, would not be such an attractive sight, after having been carried from the United States to Panama and lined up for the edification of such members of foreign Governments as might be there present, as would the men who built the canal.

What a spectacle for the gods! And so I ventured the suggestion that the canal could be very properly and appropriately opened, and the opening perpetuated and sent down the avenues of fame, with at least a less numerical representation from Congress. That impression grew on me when I found out it was estimated to spend about $100,000 to take the really valuable part of the Government of the United States on this extra hazardous trip on the high seas to the vicinity of the Spanish Main. If the Panama Canal is to be opened in a formal manner with representatives of the Government, I am of the opinion that a suitable representation from the two Houses of Congress would be appropriate in connection with those exercises. But if they took over 500 Members of Congress down there and landed them on the Isthmus, and kept them aboard of the boats—because there would be no place to put them on the Isthmus—some genius in the future, writing about that trip, would be tempted to recall the description given of Congressmen in Washington by one of my late colleagues. He had been in politics for a great many years, and was finally elected to the House of Representatives. After being here a short time he returned, and some one asked him what he thought of Congress and Washington. He said, "Well, when I was an alderman I would visit the city departments in New York and be received with respectful consideration. Later in life I was elected a member of the assembly in the State of New York and found a little keener regard for my official position in the city, while it was possible for me to enter some of the State departments. Later than that I was elected to the State senate, and I found out that the fact that I was a State senator was an open sesame in every department in Albany and the city of New York. Then I was elected to the House of Representatives. Why, they tie horses to Congressmen in Washington on Pennsylvania Avenue." [Laughter.]

Any historian describing this horde of Members of the House and Senate landed on the Isthmus of Panama for the formal opening, with the President and the Cabinet, and the other distinguished officials of the Government, and the representatives of foreign Governments, and the Army officers and the Navy officers, would tell of their hanging their clothes on the Members of Congress. [Laughter.] That is about all the use they would be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I saw a statement the other day that the formal opening of the canal was likely to be postponed until July. It has been contemplated to hold it in March. I saw a statement that Col. Goethals was somewhat fearful that because of the Gold Hill slide it might be difficult to take the war vessels through the canal to the Pacific. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and myself, on our visit to the canal in November, saw the condition of the Culebra cut. I do not believe there is any occasion for serious worry; but I can understand the conviction of the men in charge of the work that it would be much better that they be permitted to concentrate their efforts uninterruptedly on removing material from the cut coming in as the result of these slides rather than be put to the necessity of passing a large number of war vessels through under existing conditions. As to whether Congress intends to have official representation at the opening of the canal or at the exposition, I do not know.

In the sundry civil appropriation act of the current year, believing that perhaps Congress might be overlooked in the hurry of making the arrangements, the Committee on Appropriations made provision in one of the items of appropriation for the expenses of any representation from the two Houses on that occasion. Somebody has told me, in an informal manner, that they have spent all of that appropriation, and that that probably would not be available. What is proposed to be done at the opening of the exposition or as to the representation at the exposition, I do not know. This appropriation, however, is to provide for certain customs services. We have there now on the exposition grounds a force charged with the customs work. Exhibits are arriving continually. The customs officials at San Francisco originally estimated that $500,000 would be required to pay for all the services in connection with that office. The Treasury Department recommended that $250,000 be appropriated and the Committee on Appropriations came to the conclusion that $200,000 would be ample. The information furnished to the committee this year is to the effect that it is expected that the entire cost of that service will be $165,000, again vindicating the discriminating care with which the Committee on Appropriations lowers the amounts requested by the various departments of the Government. I have always been convinced that, while the committee has been charged with being niggardly and curtailing the expenditures in an unjustifiable manner, that to those who know the facts and truth of the circumstances, the committee is unjustifiably generous in ninety-nine times out of one hundred. It is also a pleasure to revert to incidents such as this to demonstrate my own opinion. The original estimate was $500,000; the appropriation was $200,000, and now the statement is made that the work will be done for $165,000, and it only makes me regret that when we had the opportunity we did not give an appropriation of $150,000. I am convinced it would have been just as easy to have this work done for $150,000 or a little more than for $165,000.

Now, having answered fully, completely, and categorically every question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], there is nothing more to be said.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a little more left to be said. I might ask a new question. Having failed to obtain any information from the gentleman from New York in reply to my question——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois should pay attention to the remarks of others than himself.

Mr. MANN. Well, in that respect I am different from the gentleman from New York. I do. The gentleman from New York always wants to be making remarks himself, as has been evidenced now. I sat quietly while the gentleman talked about 15 minutes. The gentleman interrupted me before I had had the floor for a quarter of a minute in order to make my speech for me. That is characteristic of my friend.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That shows the keen appreciation I have of the fact that my speech is so much better than the gentleman's.

Mr. MANN. There is something in that. I admit it. The gentleman from New York failed to give us any information upon this subject because he did not have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. On which subject?

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, I will yield again if the gentleman wants to make another speech.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman asked a number of questions. Which one did I not answer?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants to make another speech, I will yield. In other words, I want to make my own speech—without meaning any discourtesy, of course.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I thought the gentleman wanted to ask me a question. Otherwise I would not have bothered.

Mr. MANN. I suspected that the gentleman himself did not have the information, therefore I did not direct my first inquiry to him.

It was suggested some time ago, as stated by the gentleman from New York, that the President have a conference with a few Members of the House. I was one of those invited, although the people who ought to have been invited were not. The people who had jurisdiction of the subject were not asked, though, of course, that was purely an inadvertence on the part of the President, or whoever got up the interview. At that time there were some suggestions made, on a report from the Secretary of War, as to attendance upon the opening of the Panama Canal. I supposed that had all been abandoned. It was suggested by some one—these suggestions were not made by the President himself—and the suggestion was laid before this little conference, that about 250 people be taken down on account of Congress at the expense of the Government. I very naturally, and I think correctly, said that that number was either too many or too few. Assuming that there are 500 Members of the two Houses of Congress, and that each one has some one to accompany him on a trip of this sort, 250 out of 1,000 are either too few or too many for anything but a junketing trip. I said to the President that I did not think there was any possibility of the House voting a junketing trip for itself at the same time that it was trying to reduce its allowance for mileage.

It did not seem quite possible to me that the House would vote to cut off the compensation now allotted for mileage and then double the amount and take it out in a trip to Panama. And the trip, so far as the Members of Congress were concerned, was to end at Panama. While this suggestion contemplated that the Cabinet be taken to Panama at Government expense, and then taken around to San Francisco and brought home, the representation from the legislative branch of the Government was to sail down to Panama, and then in two or three days start back. As far as I am concerned, I have made that trip several times, and am not anxious to make it again. But I wondered what had become of the proposition. Only a week or so ago, or perhaps a little longer than that, I received a hurry-up letter from the Secretary of State, urging that something be done, and inclosing a copy of a letter which he had written to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House—which committee, by the way, has nothing to do with the subject—and I replied to the Secretary of State, expressing the desire of this side of the House to cooperate in making any proper provision for the opening of the canal. Now, my understanding is that a suggestion was gotten up by a clerk somewhere and submitted to the President, and that when the President very properly asked some one in the House to introduce it he has been unable so far to find anybody in the House who would father the proposition.

But something ought to be done if it is ever to be done. The President ought to be present at the formal opening of the canal. Some of the executive departments ought to be represented there. I think it quite fitting that the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy be there. It would be quite fitting that there be a small committee from the House and the Senate to go there. It is certainly fitting that the two ex-Presidents be invited and possibly some others. The matter really ought to have been taken care of last summer, but it has not been taken care of yet, and I suppose that the canal will open up and pass vessels through it if we postpone the formal opening until they cut away Gold Hill and Contractors Hill, on the other side of the canal, and Culebra Hill, all of which have a tendency to slide into the canal. But what is going to be done? Does anybody know? Within the last four weeks of the end of this session, with the constant talk that there has been about the opening of the canal and representation at the exposition, does anyone know? Is it possible that in the House and the Senate they are again waiting for the orders of the captain of the team? Is there no originality on the part of Members of the House or the Senate? Can you not do anything until you get your orders? [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman need not be worried. He may yet go on this trip. The urgent deficiency bill only has become a law. There is ample time to make provision.

In all seriousness, I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that Congress ought to provide the means to enable the Government to be represented in a fitting manner at the formal opening of the canal, if there is to be such a formal opening; and that not only should this Government be represented, but foreign Governments should be represented as the guests of the Government of the United States. I think that before the session ends, or, if its work is not completed when it does end, then before the next session ends ample provision will be made for the legitimate expenses connected with the formal opening of the canal. It is undoubtedly one of the most remarkable achievements to the credit of any civilized nation, and it should be appropriately commemorated. But in arranging for its commemoration the plans should be along such lines as will commend them to the common sense and patriotism of the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman said a moment ago that he thought this would be attended to at this session or the next session. Does the "next session" mean the session which ordinarily would begin on the first Monday in December?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I said in the event that Congress does not complete its work at this session, if for any untoward circumstances it should be necessary to convene in extra session in order to enact the appropriation bills, why, under those circumstances—let no one think that I would hanker after an extra session.

Mr. COOPER. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have enough trouble and hard work in the regular session to satisfy even an unreasonable man, without looking for a repetition of the same conditions unnecessarily.

Mr. COOPER. Of course, the gentleman does not hanker, nor does anyone else hanker, for an extra session; but the gentleman said it would be attended to at this session or the next. Now, regularly the next session would not begin until the first Monday of next December.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But irregularly it may.

Mr. COOPER. So that if the gentleman means an extra session he ought to let us have warning now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not in a position to speak about the prospects for an extra session. I do not try to anticipate the future. I am perfectly content if I can do those things that I am expected to do as a Member of this House, with the hope and the implicit confidence that things will always be for the best and for the speedy termination of our labors otherwise than by retirement. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Scales for customs service: The unexpended balances of the appropriations heretofore made for construction and installation of special automatic and recording scales for weighing merchandise, etc., in connection with imports at the various ports of entry under direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, are continued and made available for expenditure during the fiscal year 1916.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] during the afternoon has announced a great increase in export trade for December and January, and this has been heralded as an indication of a general revival of business in the United States. No one has been discovered sufficiently optimistic to prophesy anything other than a deficit in the national finances during the coming fiscal year. The gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is probably as well informed as anybody on this subject, very frankly stated during the debate on this bill that in his judgment there would be an inevitable deficit during the coming fiscal year variously estimated from $20,000,000 to $100,000,000.

The prevalence of the horrible war in Europe is proving a great political asset for the Democratic Party. The exports which are abnormal by reason of the large demands for American munitions of war and American foodstuffs give an opportunity to claim a great revival of trade. The war in Europe has been capitalized as an excuse for giving us a war tax in time of peace, and I have wondered if the present war in Europe should suddenly terminate whether the perpetual conflict which can always be depended upon over the Mexican border would be a sufficient political asset to justify the continuation of the war tax in the United States indefinitely.

But before we leave this part of the bill which has to do with the collection of the customs revenue I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether the requirements of what is known as the Smith amendment have been observed by the administration—which requires the Executive and Secretary of the Treasury, when estimates are sent to Congress and it is discovered that the anticipated expenditures are in excess of the anticipated revenues, to make recommendations as to how the estimates may be reduced?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not quite catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. MARTIN. Whether the requirements of the Smith amendment as to an agreement between the anticipated expenses of the Government and the anticipated revenues are being observed by the Executive and the Secretary of the Treasury in their information to Congress upon financial legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I imagine so. The Smith amendment provided that whenever the estimates for expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year were in excess of the estimated revenues the Secretary of the Treasury should transmit a statement of the estimated receipts or revenues and the estimated expenditures to the President, and the President should transmit them to Congress, informing them or advising them as to how the estimates could be best reduced without impairing the public service, or, in the event in his opinion that they could not be reduced, of methods to be resorted to in order to obtain additional revenue necessary to meet the proposed expenditures.

Mr. MARTIN. Has any information of that sort been supplied to Congress during the present administration?

Mr. FITZGERALD. When the estimates of expenditures were transmitted to Congress at the beginning of the session my recollection is, from an examination of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, that it showed an apparent surplus in the next fiscal year.

I might suggest to the gentleman that a very bad example was set by the Taft administration during which the law was enacted. One year the estimated expenditures, as transmitted to Congress, would have been far in excess of the estimated revenues, and so the estimated expenditures were ruthlessly cut down to bring them within the estimated revenues. That was discovered in a peculiar way. The law requires that the estimates be transmitted in the regular Book of Estimates and prohibits the transmittal of supplemental estimates except for service or services that have been authorized by legislation subsequent to the transmission of the estimates, or because of the happening of some extraordinary event that could not have been anticipated when the estimates were transmitted. Whenever supplemental estimates are transmitted the law requires these estimates to be accompanied by a detailed statement of the reasons why they were not transmitted in the regular Book of Estimates.

Secretary of the Navy Meyer, in a supplemental estimate to the Congress, estimated $1,000,000 for the building of high-power radio stations, and then, in compliance with the law, requiring him to state why it had not been put in the regular Book of Estimates, giving the reasons embodied within the provision controlling the supplemental estimate, was this statement, and this statement only:

This amount was not included in the regular Book of Estimates because of the desire to keep the estimates as low as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, my question to the gentleman from New York is a simple one, and that is whether the administration has made any suggestion to Congress as to meeting the discrepancy between the anticipated revenues and the anticipated expenditures, as required by the Smith amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law requires the President to do certain things——

Mr. MARTIN. I know what the law requires. I am asking for the facts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Secretary of the Treasury transmitted the estimates in December, and by eliminating the supposed expenditure to meet the sinking-fund requirements the surplus was about $15,000,000, and under those circumstances no obligation rested upon him to transmit the estimates for expenditures or receipts to the President.

Mr. MARTIN. I am bound to say that I think the gentleman from New York is lacking in his usual frankness and his usual freedom in imparting information to this committee. The question I asked was a simple one, and it has not been answered. I understand from other sources that during the Taft administration and after the passage of the Smith amendment an effort was made to comply with the provisions of the amendment. Whenever in any particular year the anticipated expenditures exceeded the anticipated revenues the various departments were required by the President to revise their estimates and to conform to the requirements of the law, so that there would be no need of any estimates in excess of the anticipated revenues.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law did not require what the gentleman says was done, and it was drafted to prevent that being done.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, the law is very plain.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It placed the reduction of expenditures in the departments so as to place the responsibility for expenditures in excess upon the Congress. What the law contemplated was this: That after the administration had determined how much it was believed was required for the conduct of the public service, if those estimates exceeded the estimated receipts or revenues, they should be transmitted without being cut, with the President's opinion as to how they could be cut without impairing the public service or, if in his opinion that amount of money was required, what additional revenue should be raised.

What was done in the Taft administration was this: It was found that the sums believed to be essential for the conduct of the public service were in excess of the public revenues. Instead of complying with the law they eliminated items from the estimated expenditures and transmitted to the Congress estimates that they knew were insufficient and inadequate for the conduct of the public service, in order to avoid appearing before the country as asking for money for expenditures in excess of the anticipated revenues of the Government.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, the provisions of the law, I think, are quite plain, and I shall print the Smith amendment in connection with my remarks. What I desire to say is that while under the Taft administration some executive effort was made each year to compel the different departments to keep their estimates within the anticipated revenues that were to come during the fiscal year, apparently no effort is being made on the part of the present administration to furnish any information to the Congress as to the anticipated revenues or to make any comparison between the anticipated revenues and the anticipated expenses, and as a result we have been furnished during no year of the present administration with any information on the subject. I see the Chairman of the committee is raising his gavel, and inasmuch as I have been very liberal in yielding to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN. I have made this reference to be considered in connection with the recommendation of the gentleman from New York, the chairman of this committee, which he made in the House in his opening speech under the general debate on this bill, when he stated that in his opinion the way to produce harmony between the receipts and expenditures, and to hold unnecessary expenditures down, was to place greater power in the hands of the executive departments of the Government and remove from individual Members of this House the power of individual initiative regarding appropriations. I think these instances I have cited very clearly illustrate that that is not the way to curtail expenditures in the administration of the Government. Invariably we obtain in the recommendations of the Executive and the executive departments requests for much larger appropriations than the anticipated revenues, unless they are admonished to keep the estimates down. The chairman of this committee, in his opening statement to the Committee of the Whole at the beginning of the consideration of this bill, stated that in four years the estimates of the Treasury officials sent to the Committee on Appropriations for the purpose of the sundry civil appropriation bill were in the aggregate $97,000,000 more than the amounts actually recommended by the committee. It is not to the executive departments, nor to the recommendation of the executive departments, that we can look with any hope of curtailments or economy of appropriations.

The Constitution has placed responsibility for appropriations and of initiating revenue measures upon the House of Representatives, and the experience and the history of all Governments has been that the further you get away from the power that spends the money in determining what the expenditures are to be, and the closer you get to the people through their short-term representatives, the nearer you get to economy in the financial administration of the Government. I am one of those who believe that the Congress of the United States, and particularly the House of Representatives, must face responsibility for appropriations and responsibility of making the two ends meet between the revenues that are to be provided and the ways and means and the expenditures that are to be made by the various appropriation committees. The firmer we lay that responsibility upon the combined membership of the House, and the sooner we cease to shift the responsibility upon any other branch of the Government, the sooner we will arrive at an economic administration of our affairs. I think that the practice of the present administration is absolutely making no effort to consider the relation between expenditures and receipts for any given year, asking for large expenditures without any suggestion of where the money is going to come from to meet them, is a practice that if followed by a private individual or a corporation would lead to inevitable bankruptcy, and we ought to insist upon the enforcement of this amendment in the estimates that come from the administrative departments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the Smith amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

ESTIMATED EXPENDITURES, PRESIDENT TO CONSIDER RELATION OF, TO REVENUES.

Immediately upon the receipt of the regular annual estimates of appropriations needed for the various branches of the Government it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to estimate as nearly as may be the revenues of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year, and if the estimates for appropriations, including the estimated amount necessary to meet all continuing and permanent appropriations, shall exceed the estimated revenues, the Secretary of the Treasury shall transmit the estimates to Congress as heretofore required by law and at once transmit a detailed statement of all of said estimates to the President, to the end that he may, in giving Congress information of the state of the Union and in recommending to their consideration such measures as he may judge necessary, advise the Congress how in his judgment the estimated appropriations could with least injury to the public service be reduced so as to bring the appropriations within the estimated revenues, or, if such reduction be not in his judgment practicable without undue injury to the public service, that he may recommend to Congress such loans or new taxes as may be necessary to cover the deficiency. (Mar. 4, 1909, Stat. L., vol. 35, p. 1027, sec. 7.)

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with the history of the so-called Smith amendment. It was designed to accomplish a beneficial purpose. In 1906 Congress enacted section 4 of the sundry civil act, which required that all estimates for annual services should be furnished to the Secretary of the Treasury for inclusion in the Book of Estimates, and prohibiting special additional estimates except to carry out laws subsequently enacted or when deemed imperatively necessary for the public service by the department in which they shall originate, in which case such special or additional estimate was to be accompanied by a full statement of its imperative necessity, and so forth. Estimates had been juggled and shifted and sent in such a haphazard manner to Congress that there was no system or logic in the manner in which the public business was transacted. After the enactment of this law it was believed to be desirable to try and fix some greater responsibility upon the executive for the submission of estimates. Estimates were being sent to Congress for the appropriation of public funds without any regard whatever to the anticipated revenues of the Government during the fiscal year for which these expenditures were to be made, and it was then that the so-called Smith amendment was adopted. I shall not repeat it, as the gentleman from South Dakota will have it printed in his remarks. The purpose of that amendment was to have the executive departments of the Government prepare the estimates of the public moneys believed to be essential for the proper conduct of the public service. It would make little difference whether the revenues were to be in excess of the proposed expenditures or to be less than the proposed expenditures. What Congress was entitled to know was what the executive departments believed was necessary from the standpoint of the executive to conduct the public service.

It provided that if the estimated expenditures were in excess of the estimated revenues that the President should transmit both to Congress and inform Congress where the expenditures could be reduced "with the least injury to the public service," and if in his opinion they could not be reduced so as to bring them within the estimated revenues, that he should recommend to Congress such measures as in his judgment were necessary to cover the deficiency. That was to obtain, first, the estimates of the department as to how much was necessary to conduct the Government, and, secondly, the opinion of the President as to any manner in which those estimates could be reduced without impairing the public service; or if he did not believe they could be reduced, what measures should be adopted to obtain the revenue. Now, the whole purpose of that law was frustrated by the policy which was adopted. Immediately after its enactment the estimates of expenditures were prepared by the departments, and when it was ascertained they were likely to be in excess of the anticipated revenues, directions were issued to make cuts of certain amounts, and the estimates were submitted within the anticipated revenues. Thereafter, in the investigations which were conducted by Congress, it developed that a number of officials called upon to explain their estimates would make statements of this tenor; that in their opinion the amount requested would not be sufficient to properly maintain the public service; that they had prepared the estimates in a larger sum; that they had been directed to reduce it; that they had protested that it was impossible to conduct the public service within that sum, but still had to submit such an estimate. That happened, for instance, in connection with items for pay of the Army where, regardless of the amount of money reported by Congress, a deficiency which is recognized within the law can be incurred for the pay of the Army up to authorized enlistment——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for a minute or two more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is true in connection with the estimates for the transportation of the Army where the War Department is authorized to incur obligations for the transportation of troops regardless of the appropriation that is made. It was true in regard to a number of other services where the law authorizes the services to be conducted regardless of whether the appropriation is sufficient—obligations that are binding upon the Government and which are allowed to be incurred. Then, there were these additional instances to which I have already referred, one where the Secretary of the Navy submitted a supplemental estimate of $1,000,000 for a high-power radio station and gave as his explanation, within the law requiring that an additional estimate be accompanied by a full statement of its imperative necessity and reasons for its omission in the annual estimates, that this estimate was not included in the regular Navy estimates because it was desired to keep the estimates as low as possible, which was a gross and flagrant violation of the law. What was done about it? I took the item out of the naval appropriation bill on a point of order, because of its being a gross violation of the law. The appropriation recommended was, I think, $400,000 of the million dollars, but it was put back in another body in a Republican House which tumbled over itself in ratifying such a flagrant violation of the law. Now, that has not been done by this administration. Whether there will be a deficit or a surplus, this administration has submitted the estimates believed to be required to conduct the public service. The Secretary of the Treasury at the opening of Congress, in his report to Congress, shows an apparent surplus of $15,000,000, so the Smith amendment did not operate as to requiring the President to make recommendations such as otherwise would have been required.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman says this administration was not affected by the Smith amendment. Does the gentleman think that it is fair to make up estimates as this administration did? In the Post Office estimates, where there was estimated a reduction of $20,000,000 in the hope that they will adopt a recommendation contrary to existing law, which anyone who has been in Congress would know there is no chance of being adopted. Does the gentleman think that is a fair way to make up estimates?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know that I should characterize recommendations of the departments as fair or unfair. The Postmaster General's estimates for the Postal Service for the next fiscal year aggregate, I think, $297,000,000, conditioned upon the enactment of certain legislation. His estimated revenues, if I recall them correctly, were $327,000,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report, in reviewing the estimates of expenditures and anticipated revenues, called attention to the fact that the estimates of the Postmaster General are contingent upon certain legislation being enacted by Congress, and if it were not enacted that the service would absorb all the anticipated revenues, so that this apparent surplus in the postal receipts was not used to avoid the operation of the Smith amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Well, in the Book of Estimates the estimate for the Post Office appropriation bill was $297,000,000, whereas in compliance with the existing law it ought to have been $320,000,000, or a difference of $23,000,000. That is the way of making an apparent surplus in a case where there is really a deficit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He did not do that because the postal estimates in certain respects are eliminated, while if Congress had complied with the recommendation of the Postmaster General and the legislation had been enacted and there had been no falling off of postal revenues, there would have been a surplus of over $20,000,000, while, as pointed out by the Secretary of the Treasury, if this legislation was not enacted the conduct of the department would absorb this revenue and no advantage was taken of that in compiling the fiscal statement.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The gentleman from New York is a very adroit debater and a very faithful apologist for this administration. The gentleman from New York says the last Republican administration did not comply with the provisions of the Smith amendment. He criticizes that administration because there was some supplemental estimates made, he says, without the proper legal explanation. As a matter of fact, all of these original and supplemental estimates were not only within the estimated revenues but within what developed to be the actual revenues. The real important and outstanding fact with regard to these matters of comparison between the then Republican administration and this Democratic administration is this: That the Taft administration, both in its estimates and in its expenditures, kept within the public revenues, and this administration, whatever may be said of its original estimates, both of expenditures and of receipts, clearly as to its actual expenditures, will far exceed the actual receipts all the way from $30,000,000 to $100,000,000, as our friend from New York has informed us. Now, that is the real important, outstanding fact, that the Taft administration in estimates and expenditures kept within the revenues and left a balance in the Treasury; that this administration, whatever may have been the fact as to its first estimates, will in its expenditures compel the American people to go down in their pockets for an additional sum over the ordinary revenues of anywhere from $30,000,000 to $100,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That administration issued about $30,000,000 of Panama Canal bonds. This administration has not issued any bonds whatever.

Mr. MONDELL. The Taft administration expended, as I recall it, in the neighborhood of $150,000,000 for the building of the Panama Canal for which no bonds were issued.

Mr. GILLETT. It was more than that. It was over $200,000,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Over $200,000,000, the gentleman from Massachusetts says, for which no bonds were issued. This administration will issue more bonds based on the Panama Canal than it has spent on the Panama Canal. That is the difference. That administration took $200,000,000 out of the current revenues for the canal; the present administration not only will issue bonds enough to pay all that has been expended on the canal during the administration, but probably a sum greatly in excess of that, and I am sure that my friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will not disagree with me in regard to that. In fact, I think he realizes that the bond issue will come quite soon. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] said the other day it would come in July.

Mr. GILLETT. The 1st of June.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Massachusetts says the 1st of June. I agree with him. I had understood him to say about July. Before the 1st of June the administration will proceed to issue Panama Canal bonds probably far in excess in the amount of all the moneys that have been expended under this administration for the construction of the canal, while the last Republican administration spent something like $200,000,000 out of current funds which were never reimbursed by the sale of bonds.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] suggests that the administration did keep within the provisions of the Smith amendment in its original estimates. Well, that is a question. It depends upon how accurate their estimates of revenue were. Time is developing the fact that those estimates of revenue were too high. But almost immediately after the presentation of the regular estimates supplemental estimates began to pour into Congress for millions; and I hope the gentleman from New York will correct me if I am in error in saying that supplemental estimates up to this time have amounted to over $20,000,000. My recollection is that they were nearer $22,000,000 than $20,000,000. Now, that is in addition to what is in effect a supplemental estimate on the Post Office bill of over $22,000,000. Although it was not made as a supplemental estimate, it was added by the committee, so that the administration, in order to seem to keep within the provisions of the Smith amendment requiring that estimates shall be kept within the anticipated revenues, failed to estimate for the needs of the Government, as they must have been understood by the administration at the time, by over $42,000,000. And had the administration made the estimates in the amount that the members of the administration must have known were necessary, the total of estimates would have been far in excess—millions in excess—of the wildest guesses of anticipated revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, on reflection I think the gentleman from Wyoming was nearer right than I was when he said that it was $150,000,000 that was spent out of current revenues in the Taft administration in constructing the Panama Canal. As I remember, up to date $214,000,000 has been spent out of the current revenues for building the canal and about $150,000,000 has been spent from the proceeds of bonds, but I forgot for a moment that the $214,000,000 was not all spent during the Taft administration. Some of it was spent during the Roosevelt administration. So I think the gentleman was about right in his original statement. It occurs to me, however, in that connection to say a word in regard to the statement of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] about the relative economy of Congress and the executive. I am inclined to disagree with the gentleman and to think that the executive, despite the fact that that is the department of the Government that spends the money, is apt to be more economical than the department that appropriates the money, because that is the single head. The executive has responsibility, whereas we here, four hundred and thirty-odd men, have, no one of us, any great sense of responsibility. It is divided up into 430 parts, and therefore whatever anyone wants he is apt to think will be divided among all and he will get what he can and trust that the others will bear the responsibility.

Mr. MARTIN. The comparison, of course, is not between the Congress and the President, the single Executive, but between the Congress and the executive departments of the Government. My suggestion was that Congress has held down the estimates made by the executive departments, and our appropriations are always under those estimated by the departments.

Mr. GILLETT. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I think the appropriations generally run higher than the estimates. For instance, in the appropriation bills that have passed the House so far, the original estimates which were sent in by the departments were $20,000,000 less than the appropriations that passed the House, and at the same time I recognize that supplemental estimates were sent in by the administration, which I presume would just about even up.

Mr. MARTIN. You have already reminded the committee that those original estimates for the Post Office Department were some $23,000,000. Does not the experience of the gentleman, taking one year with another, show that the appropriations for the running of the Government fall considerably below the estimates requested by the executive departments?

Mr. GILLETT. I have not looked it up, but my offhand guess would be that it is the other way, because the gentleman must recollect there is another body to be reckoned with besides this body.

Mr. FOSTER. The appropriations reported in this bill are $9,000,000 less than the estimates.

Mr. GILLETT. But the Appropriations Committee always report less than the estimates. There is no doubt that the Appropriations Committee are more economical than the executive, invariably; but the bill is always swollen after it leaves the Appropriations Committee. It is increased first always in the House, and then it is always increased again in the Senate. We do not know what this bill will be when it is passed.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not usually the case that the estimates are more than the appropriations as finally made.

Mr. GILLETT. I am not sure. As I say, my recollection would be the other way.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman is in error about that.

Mr. GILLETT. Very likely. I have never looked it up.

Mr. MONDELL. Is not this the fact, that the appropriations for running the departments of the Government are ordinarily considerably lower than the estimates?

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman mean the departments here in Washington?

Mr. MONDELL. The departments generally; that is, the regularly established operations of the Government. For those purposes the appropriations are always less than the estimates; but if the appropriations are higher than the estimates, it is because we have added a lot of construction items, a lot of new activities, as we have added in one place in this bill a provision for increased activities of the Coast Guard, and as we will add in certain bills large sums for the acquirement of a park here in Washington, for the erection of a building somewhere, and for purposes of that kind.

Mr. GILLETT. I think that is very apt to be true. We are looking out for our different districts.

Mr. MONDELL. But I think the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] is still correct in his statement that with regard to those matters on which the departments estimate the appropriations are generally lower than the estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. On this bill which is now under consideration, and the three previous ones that have been passed for the previous three years, the appropriations are $60,000,000 less than the estimates.

Mr. GILLETT. As the bills finally became laws?

Mr. FOSTER. As the bills finally became laws. That is, counting this one, which has not yet become a law.

Mr. GILLETT. It is not fair to consider this with the others, because we do not know what the total of this one will be.

Mr. FOSTER. I realize that.

Mr. GILLETT. How much were the others?

Mr. FOSTER. I think something like $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 less than the estimates.

Mr. GILLETT. It is quite possible that I may be mistaken in my judgment. I have never looked it up, but I had the impression, which I have stated, from the general course of business.

Mr. MARTIN. Does not the gentleman recall that in the opening statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in general debate he called our attention to the fact that during the last four years the estimates from the department for the running expenses of the Government for this sundry civil bill were some $97,000,000 more than was actually appropriated.

Mr. GILLETT. I questioned whether he was not mistaken in that statement; but I will agree to what the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] says, that it is largely in the additional items that are put on that we make the increases. In other words, it is on the matters that affect us personally and politically in our districts that we keep adding; and that is the reason, of course, as I intimated originally, that I think Congress is not to be trusted in the matter of economy, because we can not resist the pressure that is brought upon us individually to vote for something which our constituents at home desire.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

For pay, allowance, and commutation of quarters for commissioned medical officers and pharmacists, $695,000.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I regret very much that the distinguished clerk of the Committee on Appropriations is not permitted to speak on the floor, because I feel sure that I could get from him the information that I am seeking, and at this moment I do not see the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am right on the job.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman will doubtless confer with the clerk of the committee, and therefore will be able to give me the information. I should like to know how far short is this appropriation of $695,000 as compared with existing law? My understanding is that for the current year there was $679,000 appropriated and then $50,000 additional, which would make $729,000 as against $695,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. Last year the appropriation was $679,858.

Mr. DUPRÉ. In addition to that there was $50,000, was there not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. This is $15,142 more than was appropriated for the current year.

Mr. DUPRÉ. This appropriation does not cover a recommendation of $50,000 for additional assistant surgeons in the Public Health Service?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it does not. It does not cover $50,000 for additional employees.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Those additional employees were covered by the present law, were they not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This appropriation covers the employees provided at present. The Public Health Service asked $50,000 to increase over the existing force the force of commissioned and medical officers and pharmacists.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Why did not the committee see fit to grant this request?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because of the extraordinary growth of this service within the past few years.

Mr. DUPRÉ. All the more reason why the appropriation should be granted, apparently, if there has been such an extraordinary growth.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In 1912 the total appropriation for the Public Health Service was $1,589,100. In this bill the total carried for the Public Health Service is $2,868,106, or $1,300,000 more than the service had three years ago. That is nearly 100 per cent increase, and the committee thought that this service had been growing about as rapidly as could be justified; and, as increases were made in other respects for the service, we thought we could not very well justify the increase of $50,000 which was asked for this purpose.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Was not a request made for 20 additional surgeons?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think there was something like that. The request was made to appropriate under this item $50,000 more than is carried here.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I would like to be sure on this point. Did not the bill last year provide $50,000 for additional surgeons, and is it not refused in this bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In 1914 the appropriation under this item was $547,640. There was an additional $50,000 for some employees not then added. In the bill for the current year these two items were consolidated, which made that item $597,000, and, in addition, $82,000 more was appropriated. Now, in the pending bill $15,000 is added to the amount carried in the current law, so that this appropriation is about $100,000 in excess of the appropriation two years ago, when the $50,000 increase was first granted.

Mr. DUPRÉ. How much is the appropriation in excess of the current year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Fifteen thousand dollars. It carries additional employees that the $50,000 enabled the service to obtain, and provided an additional amount required because of the increase of compensation from longevity and the pay of some officers absent on leave on certain service, and who returned to the pay roll of the Public Health Service.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I represent a city which has been greatly helped and benefited in several great crises by this governmental agency, and I think it is a poor place to economize in the Public Health Service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is not economizing; it is increasing the appropriations. The appropriations in which the services were carried are very materially increased.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman has denied the request of the Surgeon General.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If we granted all the requests of the Surgeon General, the service would grow at such leaps and bounds that Congress would repudiate the Committee on Appropriations. We have been more than liberal to the Public Health Service.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to bring about a repetition of the unfortunate discussion that occurred on the floor some weeks ago in regard to the Public Health Service. For my part, I think it covers some of the unworthiest pages of the RECORD. I do not care to go into that again, but I want to find out why the gentleman was denying a reasonable request that additional surgeons be given to this department to do its work effectively.

Mr. FITZGERALD. For the current year the total appropriations for this service are $2,779,000, and that includes $220,000 in the deficiency. The Surgeon General asked for $2,999,000, an increase of $220,000, and the bill carries $2,868,000. The committee has done very fairly by the service, and in the last three years, to my knowledge, more has been done for that service with my aid and cooperation than any other governmental service we have had. We have enlarged the force, given money for special work, given money to enable them to do things that were beneficial and to advance the public health of the country, and we have been publicly thanked by the Surgeon General of the service for our generous cooperation.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman will never aid a better cause, but I wanted to know if there was anything in here to justify the employment of 20 additional surgeons.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; there is not.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Did the committee think it was unnecessary, notwithstanding the statement of the Surgeon General?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; the committee thought he was making a request that could not be complied with under existing conditions.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purveying depot, purchase of medical, surgical, and hospital supplies, $45,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] complains because the committee did not allow the entire estimates made for the Public Health Service. The gentleman is a member of the majority party. The gentleman, in the main, is in harmony with the policy of his party. The gentleman, except for the item of sugar, believes in the principles of the Underwood tariff bill. I think, except for the item of sugar, he has supported his party in the policy that is so reducing the revenues of the Government that we can not increase or enlarge these various public services under this administration.

Now, I believe that the committee has fairly well taken care of the Public Health Service. I do not believe that the public health will particularly suffer under these appropriations. I think that the present activities of the service as they have been going on in the past will be reasonably cared for under the appropriations that have been made.

But the gentleman from Louisiana must understand that we can not enlarge, increase, extend, amplify, or improve the public service under Democratic administration. It can not be done. We have not the money. Even with war revenue taxes in time of profound unruffled peace, with income taxes, with the coming bond issue, with all these extraordinary methods of raising revenue, you can not do anything more than in a niggardly way take care of the service as we find it. That is all you can even hope to do under this Democratic administration. That is what we have tried to do. We have tried to avoid the actual starving of any service, but some of them will look a little thin and emaciated at the end of the year. How much better does the gentleman think we can do under the policy of this party that produces the situation in the Treasury now presented to us? [Applause on the Republican side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance of marine hospitals, including subsistence and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under special heads, $250,000: Provided, That there may be admitted into said hospitals for study persons with infectious or other diseases affecting the public health, and not to exceed 10 cases in any one hospital at one time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Under this authorization to admit into the marine hospitals for study persons infected with disease, does the gentleman know how many people have been admitted for study in any fiscal year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that there were as many as 80 persons in one year. This is practically permanent law, but it has been carried from year to year so as to obtain a statement relative to it.

Mr. MANN. We allow persons not connected with the marine service to be admitted into the marine hospitals, I suppose, for the study of disease. I thought possibly the gentleman might have the information of the number that had been admitted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think the statement was made either this year or last year that they had in the neighborhood of eighty-odd; that they were taking these persons in the various stations. I can not now put my hand upon the number.

Mr. MANN. Very well. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $1,958,106, which shall include the amount necessary for the medical inspection of aliens, as required by section 17 of the act approved February 20, 1907.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does the gentleman know from the hearings how much of this $1,948,106 is necessary for the medical inspection of aliens?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They formerly had an appropriation of about $100,000 for the inspection of aliens, and it is now done by the officers of the Public Health Service.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but I think the requirements have been considerably increased.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no separate appropriation. They are paid out of the appropriations for commissioned officers and the like.

Mr. MANN. It would be interesting to know how much is expended for the inspection of aliens coming into the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We had statements showing the number of surgeons on duty in connection with the immigration work. Several years ago when the force was increased it was provided that certain of the assistants should be specially qualified for the work of examining the mental defectives. It was claimed then that the ordinary surgeon did not have that special training and qualification that would enable him to detect the mentally defective, and for several years new employees were required to be specially qualified for the work. In one of these hearings the committee had a statement of the number of surgeons that were employed on the immigration work exclusively, but I do not have it at hand. However, my recollection is that, outside of a place like New York and other ports where immigrants come in in very large numbers, the surgeon who is doing other work also makes the necessary medical examination of the immigrants, so that in some places they are not detailed exclusively for immigration work.

Mr. MANN. Does the estimate this year show the number of acting commissioned surgeons and other employees of the service?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. I think I have all of that information. The number of acting assistant surgeons is 230. The acting assistant surgeons are the men who were taken over at the time the work of certain States was transferred to the Federal Government. In a great many instances we took over the physicians who were employed in that work.

Mr. MANN. But there certainly can not be over 200 acting assistant surgeons, surely, who are giving all of their time to the work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some of them are paid very small sums. For instance, we have one who is paid $3,000. He is a very distinguished surgeon in the South, and has charge of the quarantine station at one port. There are 7 at $2,400, 13 at $900, 1 at $1,780, 54 at $300, 1 at $270, a number at $240, $200, $180, $120, and $100. Some of them received a nominal compensation because their services are not required for any great period of time. The $3,000 man is a leprosy expert. The services of some of them are not very extensive, and they run down to $100 a year. Some of them are on a very low per diem, and are simply called upon as their services are required.

Mr. MANN. How many commissioned medical officers outside of the acting assistant surgeons are there now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In 1914 there were 161 surgeons, senior surgeons, passed assistants, and the like; and of pharmacists there were 45. The estimates for 1916 were for 202 commissioned officers and 47 pharmacists.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Quarantine service: For maintenance and ordinary expenses, exclusive of pay of officers and employees, of quarantine stations at Eastport and Portland, Me.; Providence, R. I.; Perth Amboy, N. J.; Delaware Breakwater, Reedy Island, and the Delaware Bay and River; Alexandria, Va.; Cape Charles and supplemental station thereto; Cape Fear, Newbern, and Washington, N. C.; Georgetown, Charleston, Beaufort, and Port Royal, S. C.; Savannah; South Atlantic; Brunswick; Cumberland Sound; St. Johns River; Biscayne Bay; Key West; Boca Grande; Tampa Bay; Port Inglis; Cedar Key; Puntarasa; St. Georges Sound (East and West Pass); St. Joseph; St. Andrews and Pensacola, Fla.; Mobile; New Orleans and supplemental stations thereto; Pascagoula; Gulf; Gulfport, Galveston, Laredo, Eagle Pass, and El Paso, Tex.; San Diego, San Pedro and adjoining ports, Santa Barbara, San Francisco, Monterey, and Port Harford, Cal.; Fort Bragg, Eureka, Columbia River, Florence, Newport, Coos Bay, and Gardner, Oreg.; Port Townsend and supplemental stations thereto; quarantine systems of Alaska, the Hawaiian Islands including the leprosy hospital, and Porto Rico; and including and not exceeding $500 for printing on account of the quarantine service at times when the exigencies of that service require immediate action, $155,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire, if the gentleman happens to have the information, what is the necessity of maintaining a quarantine station at Alexandria, Va.? Is that quarantine against Members of Congress going South? Of course no vessel can go up there from the sea without passing quarantine somewhere else, I assume?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, it is very necessary. It is established by law. I am not familiar with Alexandria, but from what I hear about it I have no doubt that it is necessary.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] suggests that it is a port and that boats come in there. That is true of a great many places; but I should assume that a vessel with yellow fever on board could not get up to Alexandria.

Mr. MONDELL. Why not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They quarantine against a lot of things.

Mr. MANN. If they are permitted to go by the Capes without inspection, it would be very strange. These quarantine stations are not scattered all over the United States where boats come in or where there are ports.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Vessels come and go from Alexandria.

Mr. MANN. Certainly they come and go from Alexandria. They come and go from Chicago and South Chicago also, but we do not have quarantine stations there, and they come and go directly to and from foreign ports, too.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How long has that been a quarantine station?

Mr. MANN. That probably was created a quarantine station about a hundred years ago, and they have not had time to cut it out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the quarantine service was established in 1888.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Prevention of epidemics: To enable the President, in case only of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, typhus fever, yellow fever, smallpox, bubonic plague, Chinese plague or black death, or trachoma, to aid State and local boards, or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same, and in such emergency in the execution of any quarantine laws which may be then in force, $500,000: Provided, That a detailed report of the expenditures hereunder shall annually hereafter be submitted to Congress.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This appropriation is a very valuable one——

Mr. FITZGERALD. A very big one, the gentleman means.

Mr. KAHN. It is a big one, and properly so. Heretofore when this item has been reached in this bill some captious critic has generally risen on this floor and pointed out the fact that the State of California, which had a few cases of the bubonic plague nearly seven years ago, has benefited by the expenditure within its borders of a large percentage of this money. That was very true. The Federal Government between 1908 and 1914 expended about a million and a quarter dollars in the State of California in exterminating rats and squirrels to prevent the spread of this plague. The citizens of San Francisco expended out of moneys which they themselves contributed about $150,000. The State of California, I find, contributed something like $85,000. The city and county of San Francisco from its treasury contributed something like $60,000. The counties outside of San Francisco contributed something like $60,000, and the citizens of the State generally, especially those of the city and county of San Francisco, in making their habitations ratproof and in killing off the squirrels, expended several million dollars, according to the figures given me to-day by the officials of the Public Health Service.

I merely cite these figures, and they were given me this very afternoon by the officer of that service, are approximate and show that California has done its share. Recently the plague broke out in New Orleans. The Public Health Service did a very valuable work in properly making a vigorous effort to stamp it out. The citizens of New Orleans and the State of Louisiana have come to the assistance of the Public Health Service and have contributed considerable money to stamp out this terrible disease. There is no doubt that the citizens of that State and that city were stimulated in their endeavors by the efforts that had been made by the citizens of California and of San Francisco in their efforts to save the rest of the Union from this dreaded disease.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Have the cities of Los Angeles and San Diego been troubled with this disease?

Mr. KAHN. Not within my knowledge. Of course, San Francisco and Seattle, of all the ports on the Pacific coast, are peculiarly open to possible attacks of this disease, because vessels come from the Orient to those ports, and the disease is one that thrives and flourishes in the ports of the Orient. But, of course, the number of cases reported have been few and the occasions when they have occurred exceedingly rare.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has it appeared in any of the Puget Sound cities.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; the city of Seattle is contributing its share toward stamping it out, and the Federal Government is doing some work there. I understand that out of this appropriation of $500,000 about $310,000 are to be expended by the United States for the extermination and eradication of this plague in the State of Louisiana. It is money well expended. It protects the other States of the Union from a possible invasion of that dread disease, and I sincerely hope that the critics of the State of California and the city of San Francisco will realize the fact that no section of the Union is immune; that the plague is apt to appear anywhere, and that the Government is justified in appropriating the necessary sums to stamp it out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect anybody from San Francisco would think my memory was so short that that statement could be made here on the floor in a sort of boastful way that San Francisco and California were entitled to any particular credit for what it had done in the cooperation with the Public Health Service to eliminate bubonic plague. I had a very vivid recollection that the threat to stop all the work of the public service and quarantine the State of California about the time the World's Fair would open, finally had the effect of making the people of that State wake up to a realization that some responsibility evolved upon them to help eliminate that plague. I recall that the governor of the State of California vetoed a bill passed by the legislature that was designed to enable the State to do some little part in the work of eradicating the bubonic plague. However much I was surprised to hear the gentleman speak in a congratulatory tone about the work of California, I must confess it was with the utmost amazement I heard him, without the shadow of a smile, express the opinion that it was owing to the good example of the city of San Francisco and the State of California that induced the people of New Orleans to do anything in cooperation with the Public Health Service to eliminate the bubonic plague from that city.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the people of New Orleans had followed the example of the people of San Francisco and California, they would not have expended a single dollar until the United States Government had, in effect, threatened to leave them to their fate. I yield at this point because I am going to show what New Orleans did with the horrible example of San Francisco before it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. KAHN. The health officer or the officer of the Public Health Service told me this afternoon that when the matter was put up to the people of New Orleans they rather demurred at putting up any money until they were told what had been done by the people from San Francisco, and thereupon they did do a share of the work just as the people of San Francisco had done from the very beginning of the work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No, Mr. Chairman; again I repeat that if New Orleans had followed the horrible example of San Francisco it would have done nothing. I do not know of anything in my experience in public life that so shocked me as the absolute disregard of the interest of their own people exhibited by the people of California and the city of San Francisco. They just declined to take any action or to assume any part of the burden until by a very vigorous protest upon this floor notice was served upon that city and that State that Congress would quit doing the work that should have been paid for by them unless they showed more interest. It figured out about $10,000 a rat or squirrel in California that the people of the city asked that the Federal Government pay. New Orleans from the outset started in to cooperate, and up to the 1st of December, I will state, from the date of the discovery of the first case, they spent $83,000 over the check of the Public Health Service officials.

That was from the 8th of July, 1914, to the 1st day of September. That is as much, as I recall, as San Francisco expended all told.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, pretty nearly. The Federal Government spent $122,179.48 during the same period. The city spent in addition $40,000 in the improvement of its garbage-collection service, upon the recommendation of the Public Health Service. The city has engaged to erect a new garbage incinerator at the cost of about $1,000,000, also upon the recommendation of the Public-Health Service. The city will spend about $37,000 in the rat-proofing of its public buildings. They also have erected a laboratory for the use of the department of public health, to cost $6,000. For the department of police, or public protection, they have spent about $11,000. These things are in addition to the $83,000 expended by the Public Health Service. Then the city has erected a special plague hospital at a total cost of $70,000, and the maintenance of the hospital in July, August, September, October, and November cost $13,222. Then it adopted certain ordinances requiring the rat-proofing of property, and one railroad had already expended $121,000 in complying with these ordinances, which were enacted at the direction of the Public Health Service. The estimate, as nearly as could be made by Dr. Rucker, was that New Orleans had expended or had obligated itself to expend approximately $5,000,000 in this work.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In just a minute. In addition to that, it proposes to rat proof the docks there in cooperation with the State, and that will take a very, very large sum of money. If the city of San Francisco and the State of California had in the faintest manner possible emulated the example of New Orleans, there would not have been the slightest criticism, and I think it takes considerable effrontery, even from so genial a Member as the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to make the suggestion here, without the shadow of a smile, that the example of California and San Francisco, which was condemned so vigorously and universally here and elsewhere, could have been considered in any way a stimulus to the people of New Orleans.

Now, I am accustomed, of course, to accept with a great deal of graciousness statements made by gentlemen about the activities and valuable services of the people of their communities, but this was a little too much for me, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOORE. I wanted to know if the gentleman could tell whether the prohibition vote has increased in California by reason of all these rats the gentleman has been telling us about?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. I am discussing a serious question.

Mr. MOORE. I observed that the gentleman was discussing rats, and that is a very serious question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I hope the spirit of levity will be kept out of the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has referred to the statement of Dr. Rucker and has quoted him as his authority. I simply desire to call to the attention of the committee the fact that Dr. Rucker is my authority for the statement that he impressed upon the people of New Orleans the necessity for coming to the aid of the Federal Government by reason of the splendid work that had been done in San Francisco in this matter. I understand that at the present time the State of California is doing the bulk of the work and that the work of the Federal authorities out there now is cut down to something like $3,000 a month. There is still very much work to be done in eradicating the squirrels. Bubonic plague is a menace to the life and well-being of the inhabitants of any State or community that may be stricken by it. The people of San Francisco from the very beginning, as citizens and residents of that community, gave liberal assistance to the Public Health Service and put up their money freely in helping to stamp out the plague.

Mr. BARTLETT. When did your legislature first appropriate money for this purpose?

Mr. KAHN. Of course I was in Washington at the time, but, as I understand it, the governor did veto such a bill on the ground that the counties in which the squirrels and the rats were found were putting up money out of their funds, and also that the individual citizens were contributing toward the expense.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This was a bill that was prepared by the public-health officials in the State of California to enable the State public-health officials to do work that is believed to be absolutely essential. The legislature passed the bill and the governor found some excuse, whatever it may have been, to veto it.

Mr. KAHN. I think that was his excuse.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was to make it impossible for the State to do anything; and if it had not been for the threat that was made that we would quarantine your State and shut your exposition up, it never would have spent it.

Mr. KAHN. I do not think the gentleman wants to go so far as to say that the people of San Francisco have been derelict.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You have not anything to boast of.

Mr. KAHN. We have done as much as any community in this country has ever done.

Mr. SHERLEY. My impression was that the country tried to put it on the city, and the city tried to put it on the county, and the county tried to put it on the State, and the State tried to put it on the Nation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They all joined in that raid.

Mr. KAHN. The city and county of San Francisco always did "come across." It has always done its share.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It made a lot of noise but really did not do anything.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from New York comes from a city where they always make a great deal of noise and do mighty little. The State of California always meets the Government halfway.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Most of the time it stands right at the very door of the Treasury; not only halfway, but right at the very door.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will kindly break away from the rat discussion which he is continuing privately with the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], I should like to ask him a serious question about the mosquito.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Anything I have said about the California situation is very important.

Mr. MOORE. I understand that. I gathered from what the gentleman said that his heart is wrapped up in the subject of rats, and I had no desire to break in upon him until that discussion was concluded. What I do want to know is whether the gentleman has considered the mosquito question with reference to the spread of yellow fever, as provided for in this paragraph? In the following paragraph an appropriation of $200,000 is made to investigate the diseases of man. For a long time past I have been investigating this mosquito question myself, and I have been told by experts in animal culture in the House that the proper place to investigate the mosquito is in the medical department. I know the gentleman from New York is tired, but I will make this speech, whether he answers or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not have to stand up while the gentleman is talking.

Mr. MOORE. It would be polite if the gentleman would do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know; but if I had to stand up while everybody talked I would never sit down. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. It would be in accordance with that parliamentary practice in which the gentleman is an expert. What I wanted to find out was not what the gentleman knows about rats, but what he knows about mosquitoes. Is there anything in the testimony before the committee that shows whether the medical service will take up the investigation of the mosquito under either of these two appropriations—one for the prevention of epidemics and the other for field investigations?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have thoroughly thrashed out the mosquito theory in connection with these various things. They know that a certain species of mosquito transmits yellow fever, that a certain other species transmits malaria, and certain other species transmit something else. They have fully investigated that subject.

Mr. MURRAY. Is it the male or the female mosquito that does this?

Mr. MOORE. I can answer that question myself. It is the female. Will any of this nearly $700,000 be spent in cooperation with States that have made appropriations for the extermination of the mosquito or its larvæ?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; none of this money is for that purpose.

Mr. MOORE. Is there no way by which we can secure the cooperation of the Federal Government with those States that do appropriate money for drainage purposes or for sanitation, with a view of destroying the larvæ of the mosquito?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope not. A way may be found, but I hope not.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that perhaps the Federal Government might consider it after the city of Philadelphia had concluded to clean up that stream that it has been trying to get the Federal Government to clean up for so many years.

Mr. MOORE. That is altogether beside the question. The gentleman from Kentucky is altogether mistaken as to his facts. The city of Philadelphia has cleaned up that stream—the Frankford Creek—that the Government failed to appropriate money for, although in like cases in Kentucky and elsewhere the Government has often made such appropriations.

Mr. MURRAY. Why not pour a little coal oil on the water?

Mr. MOORE. If New York would establish a mosquito quarantine, or barrier of some kind, and prevent the New York mosquitoes flying over into Pennsylvania and New Jersey, we would not need it. But evidently we are to have no relief, so far as the Federal Government is concerned. We are to spend $500,000 for the prevention of epidemics, including the prevention of yellow fever, which is spread by the female mosquito, of which Gen. Gorgas tells us there are about 200 varieties. We are to spend $200,000 on field investigation of the diseases of man, of one kind and another, but the greatest pest of them all and the one that carries the most disease, the one that spreads malaria and yellow fever perhaps more than any other, the mosquito, is to be overlooked. I want to find a way, either through the Agricultural Department or through the Medical Bureau, by which we can deal with this worst of all the pests that afflict the human species.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This money is expended only in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, typhus fever, yellow fever, smallpox, bubonic plague, Chinese plague, black death, or trachoma. Those are certain well-defined contagious diseases that become epidemic. In case of threatened or actual epidemic of such diseases this money will be expended in cooperation with the States or local authorities, or in any other way to be effective. Now, that is as far as the Federal Government can legitimately be expected to go. To undertake the other work of exterminating mosquitoes regardless of their propagating diseases is unnecessary.

Mr. MOORE. The greater the annoyance the less assistance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This appropriation is not to remove annoyances or nuisances. It is to enable the Federal Government to cooperate in cases of threatened epidemic and certain well-known disastrous or devastating contagious diseases. That is all; and it is limited to that. The gentleman has in mind a matter that is in an entirely different category, and that would be the cooperation of the Federal Government in States or localities eliminating the mosquito, which is a source of certain inconveniences and certain diseases to man, by drainage methods, and the like.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired, and the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry in relation to this. Am I in error that when we made the appropriation the first time, it was one to remain available until expended? Was not an appropriation at the beginning made of half a million dollars, or some such sum, as an emergency fund to remain available until expended?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The first appropriation was made by joint resolution in 1899, of $200,000, and another of $100,000. Then there was, in 1890, an appropriation of $100,000; one in 1893 of $100,000; one of 1894 of $900,000. Then there was none until 1899, and then appropriations have been made from time to time. None was made in 1911 or 1912, but it is a continuing appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I was not here when the first appropriation was made, according to that. I remember one that was made some years ago which was an appropriation for an emergency and remained available until expended, with the idea that if there arose an emergency—some real epidemic—the executive department would have money for expenditure even though Congress was not in session, and money which could be used instantly without waiting for Congress, if it was in session, to make an appropriation. Last year this was $200,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and two hundred and twenty thousand in a deficiency bill this year.

Mr. MANN. That was apparently available only for the year. I am not criticizing what is being done here; but what I would like to know is, how far the making of appropriations for emergencies is now being made use of in the Public Health Service in aiding the States to take care of ordinary contagious diseases which are not epidemics in any sense of the word, and which are not brought into the country from the outside, as was contemplated in the original provision, but going out and spending the money in taking care of ordinary contagious diseases?

Mr. FITZGERALD. A few years ago it was found that a permanent force had been built up under this appropriation, and the committee made provision for transferring the entire force to another service.

Mr. MANN. And now they have built up another force.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; said to be due to this recent situation in New Orleans, where they discovered that bubonic plague had broken out.

The committee tries to keep the Public Health Service in sufficient funds to carry on the anticipated work resulting from existing conditions, and to give them such a sum for that work as will enable them in a case of emergency between sessions of Congress to have a considerable sum of money at its disposal for such purpose. There is at present sufficient funds to carry the service up to the 30th of July in the work that it is now doing, spending about $37,000 a month in New Orleans, and an appropriation of half a million dollars from July on would give them a considerable sum in case any emergency which occurred between then and the meeting of Congress in December.

But, remembering what the gentleman from Illinois has in mind, we have tried repeatedly to keep the fund segregated to be used only in case of an emergency and to be at the disposal of the President in case of a threatened actual epidemic. Our efforts apparently have not had much effect on the service, for it has established what appears to be a permanent service under this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I understand the committee has done everything it could. This is not the only case. Take the Forestry Service in the Agricultural Department. We made an appropriation for an emergency when there were great forest fires. We make an annual appropriation for taking care of forest fires. Then we endeavor to appropriate an emergency fund, but they go ahead and spend the emergency fund for ordinary fires without any hesitation at all. Now, when we try to establish an emergency fund for the Public Health Service to meet an emergency, they build up a permanent force and go ahead and spend the money. Every other service has practically the same tendency to do the same thing. It is human nature. I do not know as there is any way to correct it. Now, we are engaged in stamping out disease in New Orleans and San Francisco and a few other places; they might bring it to Chicago and probably the people of Chicago would not kick. It may be that I would be defending it if I were there, but it would not make it any more proper. I have no objection—quite the contrary; I am in favor of the emergency fund to meet emergencies that arise from the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases from abroad and stamping it out before it spreads through the country. I do not know whether the fund has been improperly used. I do not say that it has; but apparently they find an emergency existing all the time, where before we commenced making these appropriations in this way they got along without it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Field investigations: For investigations of diseases of man and conditions influencing the propagation and spread thereof, including sanitation and sewage, and the pollution of navigable streams and lakes of the United States, including personal service, $200,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 5, strike out "$200,000" and insert "$300,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is the only time for a long time that I have offered any amendment to increase any appropriation, owing to the present condition of the Treasury. We provided a year or so ago for the Public Health Service to carry on an investigation of diseases of man and conditions influencing the spread and propagation thereof, including sanitation, sewage, and the pollution of navigable streams and lakes of the United States. The Committee on Appropriations, I think, has been quite liberal. They made an appropriation of $200,000 for the current law, and they carried in this bill an item of $200,000 for the next fiscal year, but that is a service where there ought to be some growth. It can do more good probably to the people of the United States than any other expenditure of money which can be made, and in view of the fact that the other side of the House has so frequently added unnecessary appropriations, I thought I would suggest a proper increase in a very essential appropriation at this time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. The committee has treated the Public Health Service very liberally, and it has responded to what is believed to be a demand on the part of the public that this service should engage in certain work along certain lines that would be advisable and beneficial. These investigations were only authorized in 1914. The committee at that time recommended an appropriation of $200,000, which was made. The committee also recommended an appropriation of $47,000 for equipping a special hospital to do certain work in connection with pellagra investigations. For the current year it reported $200,000, the amount requested by the service. This increase would be of no particular benefit to the service unless the number of commissioned officers of the service were increased. The committee has not done that. This money could not be expended unless the number of officers was increased. In view of the fact that the committee has been very liberal with this service, I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. How much of this money is expended for the investigation of the pollution of navigable streams and lakes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know that I can state in figures the amount that is expended in that particular work. Certain lines of investigation were laid out two years ago for this fieldwork. One was the investigation of the Potomac River and one an investigation, I think, of the Ohio River, and unless I am mistaken some investigation of the Great Lakes. I do not recall positively.

Mr. SMITH of New York. What I want to get at is this: After the public-health authorities have established that these lakes and rivers are polluted, what do they do about it, and what can they do about it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The object of obtaining information is to furnish it to those divisions of government, either State or local, that may be in a position to take the necessary steps to remedy conditions. For instance, sometimes the information as to the cause of the pollution in itself would enable the locality to remedy the situation of which complaint is made.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Is it not purely a local matter, and can not the local authorities deal with it, and why should the Government expend any money in this direction?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The pollution of the Potomac River, for instance, is a matter that would cover investigations in several States. No one State would be in a position to make the investigation.

Mr. SMITH of New York. What I had in mind is this: The Government has expended quite a large sum of money to establish the fact that Lake Erie, Niagara River, and other boundary waters are being polluted. After that fact has been established, a fact that had already been known to all of the States and authorities along the boundary lakes and rivers, we are exactly in the position that we were before. The local authorities are thoroughly familiar with these situations, and I can not see why the Federal Government should expend money to establish facts that are quite well known to the States, municipal authorities, and the villages along these navigable streams and waters.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 19, noes 21.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. MANN and Mr. FITZGERALD to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 18, noes 23.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

One-half of the sum of $300,000 heretofore appropriated for the construction of a modern fireproof hospital building to replace the building of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum shall be reimbursed to the United States Treasury on or before the close of the fiscal year 1915 out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I do this merely for the purpose of asking with reference to the form of this provision. The form says that one-half of the sum appropriated shall be reimbursed to the United States before the end of the fiscal year. Has all of this $300,000 been expended, or will it all be expended?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will all be expended before the 1st of July.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman sure that it will be all expended?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was the information. They expect to occupy it.

Mr. MANN. I understand that; but the question is whether you shall reimburse the Government for one-half of the appropriation or one-half of the expenditure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will all be expended.

Mr. MANN. Some of it may not be expended until after July 1 next.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will all be obligated, even if not actually paid out.

Mr. MANN. It will all be obligated if the entire sum is used, but it is very seldom that an appropriation is used up to the last dollar. Why would it not be better to say one-half of the sum expended out of the $300,000 appropriated shall be reimbursed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to see if there is any statement by the Superintendent of the Capitol as to whether the whole sum is to be expended.

Mr. MANN. Of course the $300,000 is the total authorization of appropriation for the construction of the hospital. I should think it would be very unusual that the bread and molasses came out exactly even.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Superintendent of the Capitol stated that they would be very fortunate in obtaining the building that will be obtained within the appropriation of $300,000. He said:

The hospital consists of a five-story fireproof building, 225 feet long and 106 feet deep in extreme dimensions. The building is 86 feet high at the center of the main portion and 108 feet high to the top of the towers. It contains in all 134 beds. The hospital contains 980,000 cubic feet.

Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman, Would it not be perfectly safe, as far as the Government is concerned, to say "one-half of the sum expended out of the $300,000 heretofore appropriated shall be reimbursed to the Government"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The suggestion has been made that at line 21, page 44, after the word "appropriated," to add "or so much thereof as shall be expended"——

Mr. MANN. Well, that is the same thing.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). For the construction, the purpose being only to require the District to pay one-half of the actual cost.

Mr. MANN. Then you would want to strike out "on or before the close of the fiscal year 1915," because a part of it might not be paid out until after the close of the fiscal year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These are not continuing appropriations.

Mr. MANN. No; well, I do not know whether they are or not, but it does not make any difference. If the work has been done, an accounting may not be had of the amount paid out until after the fiscal year. That would leave the reimbursement to be made as soon as it was expended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I will offer this amendment, which I think will cover the whole thing.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 21, after the word "appropriated," insert the words "or so much thereof as shall be expended or obligated."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

International exchanges: For the system of international exchanges between the United States and foreign countries, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, including necessary employees and purchase of necessary books and periodicals, $32,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Inadvertently, yesterday, in discussing the Arkadelphia (Ark.) post-office amendment, I stated that it differed from the Willow (Cal.) case in that at Willow, Cal., the site had been donated, and it was proposed to donate plans and specifications, while at Arkadelphia the site had not been donated, and they proposed only to furnish plans and specifications. As a matter of fact, at Arkadelphia the site has been donated to the Government, and it was exactly in the same category as the Willow (Cal.) case, which the committee had previously passed upon.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. As to the donation of the plans, specification, and site.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So that the two projects are in exactly the same situation as to plans, specifications, and site, which were to be donated in both cases. I make this statement after a conference with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GOODWIN], so that there will be no misunderstanding on the part of anybody reading the RECORD as to the situation relative to the Arkadelphia matter.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the Government branches under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution may exchange typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices in part payment for like articles.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Why would it not be a good thing to put a general provision in here in reference to the exchange of typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices instead of carrying it so many times in different places in different bills?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the intention of the committee to take it up on the deficiency bill and put in a provision.

Mr. MANN. You have a provision in here, and I do not see why you could not add it here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We want to look into the question of making reports and limiting prices and some other matters that ought to be taken care of at the same time.

Mr. MANN. They have been sticking this provision in in recent years for lots of the departments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a law now which limits the price that may be paid for typewriters.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It requires a report to be made and requires the report to state the price paid for the typewriter and exchange price and machines turned in. There is no limitation as to prices of adding machines and other labor-saving devices, and the committee wishes to take that up and do just what should be done, if anything, in regard to the limitation of prices and the like.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the committee put the provision in here covering the general subject?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We want to take care of these people, anyway.

Mr. MANN. In recent years in the estimates some bureau asks for this and it is put in the various appropriation bills.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Now the Committee on Appropriations put it in for the Smithsonian. I think it is a very proper provision. But if you are going to cover the general provision in the deficiency bill, I do not quite see why you would not put the provision in here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman thinks it wise to have it here——

Mr. MANN. Well, I will not ask to have it here; if it is going in the deficiency bill, I have no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all other authorized expenditures necessary in the execution of laws to regulate commerce, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, $925,000, of which sum there may be expended not exceeding $50,000 in the employment of counsel, not exceeding $3,000 for the purchase of necessary books, reports, and periodicals, not exceeding $1,500 for printing other than that done at the Government Printing Office, not exceeding $100 in the open market for the purchase of office furniture similar in class or kind to that listed in the general supply schedule, and not exceeding $65,000 may be expended for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that the committee has included in a good many items in this bill this language:

Including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914.

I confess after examining section 13 of the act I can see no reason for the extra expense of clerical work in printing and putting this into the different items in the bill. Money could be used for that purpose according to section 3 of the sundry civil act, and this might authorize the department to grant a per diem in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $4 per day.

This expenditure would be authorized by the appropriation even if it were not specifically provided. It says:

For all other authorized expenditures necessary in the execution of laws to regulate commerce—

And so forth.

They have been paying per diem for the year without any specific authority, and may I ask why the gentleman thinks it necessary to include specific authority and add three lines to the appropriation bill here and in a great many other places in the bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is true that the committee has inserted this language in a number of places in the bill. In the first place, it has inserted it where the service has estimated as required by law and stated its pay at so much per diem. In other instances it has inserted it where investigation has found that it was so doing and thought it desirable. One of the matters for which there has been considerable suggestion as to the necessity for some close scrutiny was in the payment of per diem. It was thought that by inserting the provisions in this way it would help to keep a little better track of the matter.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman further, then, this question: My recollection is they used to pay $5 per diem under the Interstate Commerce Commission. Has there been any kick registered on account of the reduction to $4?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Last year there was a very universal protest against the limitation of $5 a day for traveling expenses. It was said that it was impossible for important officials of the Government to travel in the style and dignity becoming the occupants of important offices for $5 a day. Probably in some instances that is correct. But that provision originated in a peculiar way. An official of the Government said, in stating some matters connected with the service to which he was attached, that they had some employees whose subsistence, in his opinion, if they had been paying their own expenses, would have cost $3 a day, perhaps, found it very convenient to put up at the Savoy Hotel, in New York, at the expense of the Government, and that they had no control over the matter. Then some further investigation was made, and the committee incorporated a provision, which was enacted into law without the slightest question, limiting the per diem in lieu of subsistence to not exceeding $4 a day, and, where the actual expenses were accounted for, not exceeding $5 a day. After that had been the law for several weeks some one seemed to awaken to the fact that on the 1st of last July it would be impossible to obtain reimbursements from the Government for subsistence where actual expenses were certified in excess of $5 a day and where the per diem was fixed in lieu of subsistence in excess of $4 a day. In most instances the various governmental officials have become reconciled to the situation, and while there are sporadic complaints that the allowance is not sufficient, they are not made with very great force, and a very large sum is likely to be saved as the result.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Valuation of property of carriers: To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry out the objects of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof by providing for a valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks, bonds, and other securities, approved March 1, 1913, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and including not exceeding $15,000 for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia, $3,000,000."

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], the ranking minority member of the committee, rose. Was he not entitled to recognition?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is true. If the gentleman from Massachusetts has an amendment to offer, he will be recognized.

Mr. GILLETT. I move to strike out the paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BARTLETT. What does the gentleman from New York want to do?

Mr. LEVY. To reduce it to $1,000,000 from $3,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out line 21, on page 49, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$1,000,000, and said valuation shall be completed within four years."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I would like to state, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEVY. I would like to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has made the motion to strike the paragraph out?

Mr. GILLETT. That is my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time will be required for debate?

Mr. MANN. There will be quite a little time necessary to debate that, undoubtedly, and there should be a fairly full House to vote upon it. That is, I think many Members will want to be here to vote for it or against it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course, Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of great importance, and undoubtedly will be debated for a reasonable length of time. There should be more Members present——

Mr. COOPER. Let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). When the matter is taken up than there are present now. The question with those of us who are here is to determine whether we ought to try to go out and bring Members here to-night or whether we should start on it to-morrow morning.

Mr. COOPER. I shall make a point of no quorum if there is an attempt to discuss this and pass it to-night. It is an important thing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] myself.

Mr. MANN. I would like to call the attention of my friend from New York to the fact that a little while ago I offered an amendment mainly for the purpose of demonstrating what the situation was on the floor, and there were at that time, I believe, in favor of the amendment 18 or 19 and 22 or 23 against it. Since that time, I notice, most of the Democrats have left the House, and I am sure the gentleman does not want to continue the consideration of this bill with the minority having a majority on the floor. I do not think it would be fair to us. We might be tempted to do something that otherwise we would not want to do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A large number of the Members have gone to dinner.

Mr. MANN. I understand; just a few who have been here to-day have gone to dinner—not many.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have been here on the floor myself eight hours to-day.

Mr. MANN. I think we are making pretty good progress on this bill; and to-morrow being Calendar Wednesday, we can set that aside and proceed with the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Undoubtedly there ought to be a large number of Members present when we consider this question as to whether anything is to be appropriated to continue the work of the physical valuation of railroads next year. The committee recommend $3,000,000, which is the amount of the estimate. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] moves to strike that from the bill, and I would not feel justified in having the matter even discussed unless there was quite a large attendance of Members here.

Mr. GILLETT. Why not move that the committee rise?

Mr. BARTLETT. May I suggest to the gentleman that even if he should have a call of the House and get the Members here, they would not want to stay?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, may I say a word? I think the Members all recognize that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has done his whole duty in the matter of getting this bill before the House and in attempting to put it through. We have worked here since 11 o'clock this morning, and it is now 10 minutes to 7 at night. I think the House will unanimously approve of the rising of the committee at this time if the gentleman will make the motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Can we get an agreement now as to the length of the debate on this item?

Mr. MANN. That would hardly be fair, when there are hardly 25 men on the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I thought we could save time if we could secure an agreement.

Mr. MANN. You can probably get an agreement in the morning; but somebody who is inadvertently absent, attending the sessions of another body, might want to be heard upon this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, Mr. Chairman, with the understanding that we will start on this item in the morning as soon as we meet to-morrow—we meet at 11 o'clock, I understand?

Mr. MANN. We meet at 11 o'clock under the order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. With the understanding that this item will be the first thing considered in the morning, so that every Member who reads the RECORD will have notice of the fact that the first thing to-morrow morning will be the disposition of this item for the physical valuation of the railroads, I will move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 21318) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WALKER, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. OGLESBY, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order heretofore made, adjourned until Wednesday, February 10, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. GUDGER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6134) to amend the act authorizing the construction of a public building at Biddeford, Me., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1377), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1702) increasing the limit of cost fixed by act of Congress approved June 25, 1910, for enlargement, extension, etc., of Federal building at Bath, Me., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1380), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SUMNERS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2471) for purchasing a site and erecting a public building at Superior, Nebr., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1378), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURNETT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21184) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building and site at Cohoes, N. Y., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1379), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. McCLELLAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13421) for the relief of William Hensley, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1383), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MOTT, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16777) for the relief of Amato Castellano, Libero Baranello, and Michele Baranello, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1382), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15934) for the relief of Mrs. Joseph Cameron, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1384), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20439) for the relief of the heirs of the late Frank Henry Rogers, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1385), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. EVANS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7043) for the relief of Nabor and Victoria Leon, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1386), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16594) for the relief of Eva G. Bond and Daisy E. Jackson, sole heirs of the late Warren F. Jackson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1387), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20822) for the relief of Homer Rock, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1389), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. POU, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 19090) to reimburse the officers and enlisted men of the Revenue-Cutter Service and Public Health Service for losses sustained in the wreck of the revenue cutter Tahoma, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1388), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 10, 1915.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Open Thou our hearts, Father in heaven, to the spiritual forces which wait upon us and inspire us with a full sense of the confidence Thou hast reposed in us as free moral agents, that we may choose right and follow the lead of our conscience in the affairs of men; that with clear conceptions and noble purposes we may do Thy will, and thus be worthy of the intellectual, moral, and spiritual gifts Thou hast bestowed upon us. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21318, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21318, the sundry civil appropriation bill. When the committee rose last evening there was pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, Mr. LEVY.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if possible, I would like to arrange some time for debate on this proposition.

Mr. GILLETT. I have no idea how many Members on this side wish to speak.

Mr. COOPER. I want some time against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. Suppose we go on without any time agreed upon for a while. I do not think there will be a great deal of time used.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from New York had an amendment pending to perfect the text, which would be first in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so stated—that the question was on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment for the present and allow the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts to be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws his amendment, and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 49, strike out the paragraph beginning on line 8 and ending on line 21.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am making another attempt here to come to the rescue of the party in power and the suffering Treasury. Judging from my success the other day in attempting to save the Treasury $9,000,000, I am not very sanguine of the result here. At the same time there is this difference: That amendment appealed to the individuals in the House—it was a piece of fat, luscious pork—whereas this amendment does not strike at us as individuals; so I hope it can be considered more impartially.

Now, I do not wish to go into the original question of the value of ascertaining the cost and present value of railroads. I think everybody must admit that would be very desirable to accomplish, and that it would unquestionably aid in fixing rates and in determining the values and settling the mind of the people of the country as to whether railroads were extorting from them or not undue rates and would be of great use. The question is not whether it is valuable, because I and everybody must admit that.

The question is, are we to-day in such a financial condition as to warrant the expense of ascertaining these valuable facts. It is going to cost a great deal more than we had any idea when we first adopted the legislation, and at the same time the Treasury is much less able to meet the expense than it was then. When first considered, we were told that it would cost three or four million dollars. What is the condition to-day? We have appropriated to date two and a half million dollars which has been nearly expended, and the work is hardly begun, and the chairman of the commission informed the committee—I will read his exact language:

Now, we are spending at the rate of $2,000,000 a year; $2,000,000 a year, with perhaps some slight addition, because our land work is not fully developed yet, will carry all parts of the work along at the same pace; that is to say, would cover approximately from 20,000 to 25,000 miles of railroad a year. Of that $2,000,000, over $500,000 is what may be termed overhead expense, and that expense would not be increased if you doubled the number of our parties; and it has always been my belief that we should conduct this work at the rate of about 50,000 a year; that is to say, we should practically clean up the work between July 1 next and July 1 four years later.

That is to say, if they go at the rate of 50,000 miles a year they would do it in 4 years from next July or 6 years from the time the work was begun. But at the rate he asked appropriations for, two millions a year, at the rate they are now progressing it would take 8 or 10 years, for they are only doing about 25,000 miles a year; and if at the rate of 50,000 a year it would take 4 years from next July, at 25,000 a year it will take them 8 or 10 years to complete the whole work. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, he told us that it is costing the railroads at least as much, and he instanced one railroad which it is costing twice as much per mile as it is the commission in addition.

Mr. ESCH. That had reference to the Boston & Maine, and was due to the fact that it was one of the oldest railroads and had no maps and no original records, and they had to reproduce them all.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; I was not assuming that it would cost that much all over the country. He said in some cases it cost twice as much. I think it is fair to say that on an average it will cost the railroads as much as it does the commission, and that at the rate we are now going, $2,000,000 a year, in eight years' time it will cost $16,000,000, and we have spent two millions and a half already, so there is about $20,000,000 on the present estimate, and that in the past estimates have always been far too low. It will cost the railroads as much more, and that all comes out of the people, because the railroads have got to get their rates, and so there is an expense of about $40,000,000, and we do not know how much more. It will cost the country $40,000,000 and upward to establish these facts.

Now, in the present condition of the Treasury, when, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] said yesterday, we are probably next year going to have a deficit of from thirty to one hundred million dollars, is it not just as well to stop and hesitate before we go further into this expense? It is going to take at the present rate 10 years, and will cost the country $35,000,000 at least. At the end of 10 years a large part of the work will be obsolete; the inventory which is taken at the beginning will be of very little value then. Moreover, Judge PROUTY said in the hearings that if the law were strictly to be carried out, and if they were to make the inventories that the law requires, there would be $15,000,000 more in addition required in making the computations. So we are entering into a tremendous field of expenditure—a field which we did not contemplate at all when we passed the original bill. It seems to me, under the present conditions, when the Treasury is suffering, when that side even admits the probability of a deficit—it seems to me that now is the time to curtail expenditures, and here is an opportunity to cut off $3,000,000, which we ought not to neglect.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, of course I am deeply impressed by the earnest, soul-stirring, tear-compelling remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], who is so deeply concerned about economy and who rushes so often "to the rescue" of the poor, incompetent Democrats in his efforts to protect the people against Democratic extravagance. Of course the remarks are jocular. It is not generally known that he is a humorist, but he is of the very gravest type. His speech reminds me of a fable, which no doubt he will remember as giving him pleasure in childhood. It may be that he wants his party to imitate a character in that fable. The pigeons, you know, in terror of the hawk, besought the kite to come and protect them against the hawk and rule over them. The kite came, and without difficulty routed the hawk, and then took possession of the pigeon cote and ate the pigeons all the winter in perfect happiness. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman and his party, if they can hornswoggle the people into driving the Democrats from custody and power, and restore them, will be very much in the position of the kite, and again thrive and grow rich and powerful by devouring the substance of the people whom they misrule and rob. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. It is necessary only to state the principles on which to-day the people, regardless of party, are united, in order to show that we ought not to stop the work of making a physical valuation of railroads upon which the Interstate Commerce Commission is engaged, and that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts should be defeated.

Transportation is a necessity of business life, and as a railroad is a monopoly of transportation rates ought to be, and have been, made the subject of public regulation. The law has bestowed upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to say what is a just and reasonable rate, and yet that commission is to-day without the information absolutely necessary to enable it to tell when rates are just and reasonable. That sounds strange, but it is entirely true. The commission to-day has not the facts necessary in order that it may with confidence declare that rates are just and reasonable as between shippers and the companies. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has just said that no one will deny that the valuation of the property of railroads might be a good thing, but he maintains that the condition of the Public Treasury does not warrant us in proceeding with it at this time. Mr. Chairman, this is not a question of doing a good thing by and by. This is a question of providing for an absolute and pressing necessity now. It is not a question of the future possibility of a deficit; it is a question of the necessity of giving the Interstate Commerce Commission without delay reliable data with which to determine whether rates are reasonable.

The gentleman from Massachusetts said that this valuation ought not to be proceeded with now because of the condition of the Treasury; but he made another statement which indicated that if he could have his way there would not be any physical valuation of railroads at all. If this is not his attitude why did he declare with much fervor that we are entering upon a vast field of expense and that no one knows what that expense will be? That statement of the gentleman reveals that it is not the present condition of the Treasury which especially troubles him. On the contrary, it clearly shows that he is going to be troubled in the future, as he is now, regardless of the condition of the Treasury. He is alarmed because, as he says, we are entering upon a great field of expense, the magnitude of which no one can tell. That means that at heart the gentleman is opposed to having the Government ever learn the value of the railroad properties.

Mr. GILLETT. Does not the gentleman admit that is the fact?

Mr. COOPER. I do not.

Mr. GILLETT. That we are entering into a great field of expense that we can not estimate?

Mr. COOPER. Oh, we can not exactly, but we can approximately.

Mr. GILLETT. What does the gentleman think it will cost?

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman's question shows plainly that I correctly interpreted his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is at heart opposed to continuing and completing this business of making a valuation of the physical properties of the railroads.

Mr. Chairman, there is a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which is decisive of the question presented by the amendment now pending. But before reading from the decision it may be well for me to say that no Member wishes—certainly I do not wish—to indulge in indiscriminate attacks on railroad management. I know railroad officials, men of fine character and of unusual ability, high-minded, public-spirited citizens. I have heard of others who are not men of that character, but are lacking in the essentials of true American manhood, but that fact would not, as I have said, justify me in indulging in denunciation of all railroad management—that sort of unreasoning, indiscriminate abuse characteristic of the demagogue and of the demagogue only.

But to return to the decision of the Supreme Court. I read from Smyth v. Ames (169 U. S. Repts.) the decision rendered by Mr. Justice Harlan.

> A railroad is a public highway, and none the less so because constructed and maintained through the agency of a corporation deriving its existence and powers from the State. Such a corporation was created for public purposes. It performs a function of the State. Its authority to exercise the right of eminent domain and to charge tolls was given primarily for the benefit of the public. It is, therefore, under Government control, subject, of course, to the constitutional guaranties for the protection of its property. It may not fix its rates with a view solely to its own interests and ignore the rights of the public, but the rights of the public would be ignored if rates for the transportation of persons or property on a railroad were exacted without reference to the fair value of the property used for the public or of the services rendered, and in order simply that the corporation may meet operating expenses, pay the interest on its obligations, and declare a dividend to stockholders.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COOPER. I ask the careful attention of the House to another paragraph in this opinion of the Supreme Court:

> The basis of all calculations as to the reasonableness of rates to be charged by a corporation maintaining a highway under legislative sanction must be the fair value of the property being used by it for the convenience of the public; and in order to ascertain that value, the original cost of construction, the amount expended in permanent improvements, the amount and market value of its bonds and stock, the present as compared with the original cost of construction, the probable earning capacity of the property under particular rates prescribed by statute, and the sum required to meet operating expenses are all matters for consideration and are to be given such weight as may be just and right in each case. What the company is entitled to ask is a fair return upon the value of that which it employs for the public convenience; and, on the other hand, what the public is entitled to demand is that no more be exacted from it for the use of a public highway than the services rendered by it are reasonably worth.

Observe again the language of the Supreme Court, for it is conclusive against the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts:

> What the company is entitled to ask is a fair return upon the value of that which it employs for the public convenience.

Here is a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that a railroad is entitled to receive a fair return on the value of the property it uses. But how is the Government to know the value of the property used by a railroad unless it appropriates money to find out? This decision of the Supreme Court conclusively shows that the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts ought not to pass. To-day the Government does not possess the information which the court says is indispensable in the establishing of just rates.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I will.

Mr. GORDON. Is it not a fact in these hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission now that the only evidence of the value of railroads is the stocks and bonds which the managers themselves issue?

Mr. COOPER. There is considerable truth in that suggestion.

The people of the United States are fair-minded. They would not harm the roads; they ask only justice for themselves. Public opinion——

Mr. BARTLETT. May I suggest to the gentleman, in answer to that question, that while they have that evidence under this bill on which this valuation is to be taken, that they have sent bodies of men out for the purpose of going over the roads and making the actual examination to determine the value of the roads. In other words, the mere fact that we are providing for the physical valuation pretermitted the idea that they make a value of all their stocks and bonds issued.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, we have not provided for a physical valuation. We provided for a valuation of the property.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is what we thought we were doing.

Mr. MANN. No; we changed it on purpose.

Mr. COOPER. Well, the law now includes it.

Mr. MANN. Certainly it includes physical valuation, but the endeavor was to give the valuation of all classes of property, so the commission will have that information.

Mr. BAILEY. In that very physical valuation, does the gentleman understand the franchise values are included?

Mr. COOPER. No; they do not pay anything for the franchise. Why should they charge rates to earn dividends on something the people gave them?

Mr. BAILEY. Well, the franchise value to-day figures in the freight rates and other rates, does it not?

Mr. COOPER. Here are the elements of valuation set forth in this decision of the Supreme Court:

> And in order to ascertain that value the original cost of construction, the amount expended in permanent improvements, the amount and market value of its bonds and stocks, the present as compared with the original cost of construction, the probable earning capacity of the property under particular rates prescribed by statute, and the sum required to meet operating expenses are all matters for consideration, and are to be given such weight as may be just and right in each case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the great importance of the pending amendment, I ask for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAILEY. I think they include franchise values in the calculation in the issuance of stocks and bonds; in other words, the stocks and bonds are based upon the franchise value almost invariably, or very largely so.

Mr. COOPER. Stocks and bonds ought not to be issued upon something they got for nothing and then proceeded to declare worth millions to them after getting it.

Mr. BAILEY. Is it not true that the recent freight advance is being capitalized to-day and more securities are being issued thereon?

Mr. COOPER. I do not know; I am speaking now on a matter of abstract principle. I say that it is utterly impossible for the Interstate Commerce Commission properly to perform its duties in the vastly important matter of regulating rates unless Congress shall appropriate money sufficient to enable it to ascertain the value of the property used by the roads.

The sum of $3,000,000 is nothing compared to fifteen or twenty billions, the alleged valued of the property. We better issue bonds for that sum than to stop this valuation. The interests of the Government, the interests of the shippers, the interests of the roads themselves all demand that this amendment be defeated, the money appropriated and the work of making the valuation be, as rapidly as possible, hastened to a conclusion.

Only yesterday the newspapers reported that one of the western railroads voted presents of $100,000—gifts of money—to each of three of its officials, and that on the 25th of this month the Interstate Commerce Commission is going to make an investigation of these interesting and munificent donations. Who furnished these hundreds of thousands of dollars? Why, of course, the people, who paid for freight over the road and the passengers who rode in its cars.

Consider the scandalous performance of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. Ought the people not to know how much is really invested in that property? The best railroad managers in the United States are in favor of this law and of its enforcement now. A good railroad man told me not long since that the one great obstacle with which railroads are constantly confronted is the prejudice aroused, and legitimately aroused, in the public mind by the scandalous conduct of some men who are manipulating stocks, but ought not to be managing railroads.

It is impossible for the Government properly to fix rates without knowing the value of the railroad property, and yet the gentleman from Massachusetts proposes not to appropriate a cent for us to continue this absolutely necessary work. Public opinion is very strongly in favor of having this work go on. Wisconsin has valued her railroads, Michigan has valued her railroads, other States have valued their railroads, and all with benefit to intrastate shippers in these respective Commonwealths.

Will anybody tell me why it would not be of equally great benefit to the interstate shippers and to the interstate passengers in the United States if we had that data for the great interstate trunk lines? What we need in order to do justice in the United States in the solution of all of the great industrial problems which confront the Republic is publicity, not secrecy and the strong arm. I shall vote against the amendment, and I shall be astonished if the Committee of the Whole does not reject it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In the gentleman's State I understand they have a very complete system of physical valuation of railroads, and the gentleman states that it has resulted in a material reduction of rates within the State.

Mr. COOPER. I have been told so.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What has been the effect in regard to taxing railroads since the physical valuation has become known?

Mr. COOPER. As I understand it, the relations between the State now and the railroads are more harmonious than ever before in the history of the State. Both corporations and the people are satisfied with present conditions. The earnings of the railroads have increased and in many instances rates within the State have been reduced.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Has their use been utilized for taxing purposes as the result of the physical valuation?

Mr. COOPER. I do not know as to that; but I know that rates have been diminished. Perhaps the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] may know.

Mr. LENROOT. The taxes have been increased in this way: At the time the physical valuation was had the system was changed from a gross-earning system to a valuation system.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Can the gentleman tell what it cost to make the physical valuation in Wisconsin?

Mr. COOPER. I do not know.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] know?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Were not the figures of the valuation for the purposes of taxation used in the physical valuation?

Mr. LENROOT. The tax commission had made the valuation for the purposes of taxation and that was used as a basis for the investigation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Can the gentleman tell us to what extent, if any, the physical valuation made in the State of Wisconsin is taken into consideration by the Interstate Commerce Commission in making the physical valuation?

Mr. COOPER. I know nothing of what the Interstate Commerce Commission is doing under the Federal statute, except as information has come to me that it is busily at work.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] is recognized, after which the gentleman from Iowa will be recognized.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, this $3,000,000 appropriation is a monstrous outrage on the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVY. Not at the present time.

Three million dollars! That is 2½ per cent on $120,000,000 in one year. What do they propose to do? To keep on valuing the railroads for the next 20 years, for at the rate they are going now they will not finish it within that time. What is the good of such a valuation? Every State in this Union has a railroad valuation now fixed by a commission for tax purposes. You can go to any commission in any State in this Union and they will give you the valuation of the railroads. Even in the archives of the Interstate Commerce Commission at the present time they have valuation of these railroads. Last year I opposed a similar provision, and at that time offered an amendment that this valuation be submitted to the lowest bidder for the purpose of valuation by experts, and at that time I read to this House a proposition from a distinguished statistician, who made the offer, and which I will repeat:

All of this work and valuation to be begun within 60 days from date of signing and execution of contract and finished within three to four years from date of beginning for the sum of $5,197,000.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVY. Excuse me for the present. If I have time later I will be glad to yield. It costs the railroads of the United States for valuations not $3,000,000 but $6,000,000 a year. Why place upon the carriers of this country an enormous expense? Is there any reason for this? Can you not see why the cost of freight and passenger rates have to be advanced? The railroads of this country carry freight for one-third of what it is carried for abroad. Since last year many roads have been forced into bankruptcy by this most extraordinary policy of interfering with the management of railroads.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Has anybody else gone into bankruptcy except the railroads?

Mr. LEVY. Oh, yes. [Laughter.] There is no question about that; and it has all come from what? From the Sherman law, which was placed on the statute books by the Republican Party [laughter], and which is one of the most obnoxious laws that was ever enacted. The Hepburn law has caused an increase in the price of commodities to every household in the country. Take, for instance, since the Hepburn law was passed coal has cost in the city of New York $2 a ton more than previous to the passage of that act. That gave no relief to the people. Why do you continually bring up propositions like this? Here is a commission that has gone into existence, and last year they asked for $1,900,000, and then $100,000 more, and now I hear $500,000 more, and now they ask for $3,000,000, which is the interest on $120,000,000 for one year.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVY. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the gentleman think that the Government could save a great deal of money if it authorized the railroads to make their own valuations for the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. LEVY. They are doing it now.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the gentleman think the railroads would like to do that?

Mr. LEVY. Does the gentleman deny that the States have made valuations?

Mr. LENROOT. That is not the question. Does not the gentleman think that we could save money if we permitted the railroads to make their own valuations for the Government?

Mr. LEVY. It is uncalled for at the present time. Your proposition here is not valuing the railroads, but you are making an allowance as if you were taking preliminary steps to building these railroads. It would be much cheaper to buy the railroads.

Mr. GORDON. Does not the gentleman think that the railroads ought to be allowed to fix their own rates?

Mr. LEVY. No. They are fixed by law.

Mr. GORDON. How are you going to fix them by law unless you know what the value of the railroads are?

Mr. LEVY. They are fixed by law at the present time, and many of their charters do not permit them to charge more than a certain amount. I am looking after the interests of the people of this country. We need 100,000 miles more of railroads in this country, and the way you are placing obstacles in the way of the carriers in this country is disastrous. Take, for instance, the Interstate Commerce Commission. It took them nearly two years to give the railroads a fair rate, and it was many months before they decided the question. It went into effect about the middle of January of this year. Is it any wonder that many railroads have gone into bankruptcy?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the condition of the Treasury naturally impels Members of Congress to economize wherever they can without stopping the ordinary functions of the Government. In the last Congress we authorized a valuation of the railroads of the country by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and during the past year that commission has organized a large force, and is now at work making that valuation. To stop this work at this time, it seems to me, would be to take a long step backward. It would not be in the interest of real economy and would be a direct blow to the principle that railroad rates should be based upon the value of the property employed by the railroads. To adopt the amendment would stop the work that the great Interstate Commerce Commission has been carrying on. I can not, therefore, much as I regret, support the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

But, Mr. Chairman, at this time I want to congratulate the President of the United States on a great accomplishment, one of the greatest accomplishments in the minds of many people of his administration. On the 29th day of April, 1907, President Wilson wrote a letter to Mr. A. H. Joline, president of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Co., which letter is as follows:

PRINCETON, N. J., April 29, 1907.

MY DEAR MR. JOLINE: Thank you very much for sending me your address at Parsons, Kans., before the board of directors of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Co. I have read it with relish and entire agreement. Would that we could do something, at once dignified and effective, to knock Mr. Bryan once for all into a cocked hat.

Mr. MADDEN. When did the gentleman say that was written?

Mr. GOOD. In 1907. The wish expressed in the President's letter in 1907 has been accomplished by the President of the United States. In 1912 the Democratic convention adopted a platform from which I read:

We favor such legislation as will effectually prohibit the railroads, express, telegraph, and telephone companies from engaging in business which brings them into competition with their shippers or patrons; also legislation preventing the overissue of stocks and bonds by interstate railroads, express companies, telegraph and telephone lines, and legislation which will assure such reductions in transportation rates as conditions will permit.

On that platform the President of the United States was elected, and in support of those declarations of principles, on hundreds of platforms, Mr. Bryan renewed his charges—charges which he had frequently made years before—that railway companies were charging excessive rates and that the Democratic Party would bring about a reduction in those rates. I realize what the gentleman from Massachusetts evidently had in mind when he offered this amendment to strike out this provision, and in a measure I sympathize with him, because under the present administration railway rates are going up no matter what the values of the railways may be. If left to this administration, there would be no reduction in rates, no matter what the valuation of the roads might be.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I can not yield. And let us remember that this work will not be completed during a Democratic administration. When the work of making a valuation of the railroads is completed we will have in the White House a man who will not indicate his wish or dictate to the Interstate Commerce Commission as to what its decision should be on the question of granting an increase of rates.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GOOD. I can not yield just now, but if I can get a little more time I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GORDON. Upon what authority does the gentleman say that the President dictated——

Mr. GOOD. The eastern railroad companies filed their petitions with the Interstate Commerce Commission asking for an increase of 5 per cent in freight rates in that section of the country. The Interstate Commerce Commission heard the testimony and arguments thereon and denied the increase. In practically every newspaper there was then published the statement, or rather what purported to be the views of the President. From this source it appears that the President desired, in effect——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I ask for five more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GORDON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know if the gentleman is willing to answer my question?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield to the gentleman when I have finished my statement.

Mr. GORDON. I will object or the gentleman will yield to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio objects. The question is on the amendment——

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa just made a statement here that the President of the United States has dictated to the Interstate Commerce Commission and compelled them to reverse their decision. I want to say that statement is entirely false. Now, that statement or similar ones have been made on the Republican side of this Chamber for a year past. Several gentlemen came to me privately, and winked, and exclaimed that the President had dictated to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I respectfully denied this as a general proposition. I said I did not believe the President of the United States would be guilty of any such thing as that.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GORDON. When I finish this statement. But that statement was persisted in privately; it was not made on the floor of the House, as the gentleman from Iowa just made it, but it was persisted in here, so I made an appointment with the President of the United States and told him about it. [Laughter.] That is the way to find out a thing. The President of the United States said to me, in substance, that he would no more think of interfering with a case pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission than he would of interposing in a case pending before the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Or with Congress.

Mr. GORDON. That is what the President of the United States said to me, and I undertake to say that the statement of the gentleman from Iowa is absolutely false and without a particle of foundation in fact. It is made purely for partisan purposes, and it has been made repeatedly by men on that side of the House; but he is the first man I have ever heard make it here upon the floor of this House. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I just wanted to ask the gentleman who are these men who came to the gentleman and winked and explained that the President had dictated to the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. GORDON. They were Republican Members.

Mr. MADDEN. Who were they?

Mr. GORDON. It is not important. They did not make the statement publicly, or offer any proof in support of it, or assume any responsibility for it and put it in the RECORD here, as the gentleman from Iowa does; and if he has any proof of the statement he has made he ought to present it to this House or else hold his peace.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was just about to submit a little proof which I think to the ordinary man would be almost conclusive that the President has interfered in the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission, just as he has interfered with what is going on at the other end of the Capitol to-day, if the newspaper accounts of what actually took place are to be believed; and the gentleman from Ohio is the first person I have heard declare that there was no truth in or foundation to those newspaper accounts. Suffice to say that the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission refusing the 5 per cent increase to eastern roads had no sooner been flashed over the wires throughout the country than it was known or whispered about, talked about, and became common knowledge——

Mr. GORDON. Whispered.

Mr. GOOD. The newspapers stated that the President wanted the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant the increase. If the President's interference did not cause certain commissioners to change their minds, why was it that, without filing additional proof, the Interstate Commerce Commission within 90 days from the time it rendered its decision refusing the increase on the petition of the railroads granted precisely the increase that it had denied to them only 90 days before?

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Not just now. Take the new appointees of the present administration on the Interstate Commerce Commission. I am led to believe that one of the new appointees is in favor of increasing the rates of railroad companies irrespective of what the physical valuation of railroads might be. I refer to Mr. Daniels, the gentleman who was appointed from the State of New Jersey, and I arrive at this conclusion by a reading of his dissenting opinion on the first petition of the eastern roads. I am also inclined to this opinion by a reading of the reports on his decision before he was appointed to his present position. According to these decisions it was the opinion of Mr. Daniels that the rate of a railroad company should be large enough to pay returns on going value, good will, franchise value, and the like. Do you think the shippers of this country or any considerable number of men anywhere in this country are willing that freight rates shall be based upon that kind of a valuation? And yet we are told by the newspapers that Mr. Daniels, from New Jersey, because of the wish of the President, would be sent to Chicago to conduct the hearing and take testimony of the transportation companies and others on the application of the western roads for a 5 per cent increase.

I want to say to my friend from Ohio, when he states I am not submitting good and sound proof, that I venture the assertion that when the decision is filed it will be found that Mr.

Daniels is in favor of the Interstate Commerce Commission granting the increase petitioned for by the western railroads. In this respect everyone knows that Mr. Daniels only reflects the opinion of the President; that the views expressed by Mr. Daniels in the dissenting opinion referred to were also the views of the President. I have no doubt that under continued pressure from the White House the commission will grant the 5 per cent increase. Ah, yes; the President has found at once a "dignified and effective way to knock Mr. Bryan into a cocked hat." Never again can Mr. Bryan go throughout the State of Iowa and throughout the State of Nebraska and that western territory where he held such a tremendous political power and say that the Democratic Party, or at least the man that he made President of the United States, is in favor of a reduction in rates of the railways of the country. [Applause.] I think that evidence of Executive interference in this regard is almost conclusive.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I sometimes think that my good friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], of whom I am fond, is so strongly partisan that he overleaps the bounds and becomes a little unfair to those with whom he may differ on account of some advantage that he imagines may come to his party.

I have a great respect for and confidence in the President of the United States, to whatever party he may belong. I do not believe that President Wilson is knowingly going to do anything except for the best interest of the people of the country. I believe he is an honest, conscientious, and sincere man. Now, the gentleman makes the charge upon the floor of this House that the President of the United States has influenced the Interstate Commerce Commission to raise railroad rates. He also goes further than that, and prophesies that through the influence of the President the Interstate Commerce Commission will raise the rates on the western roads. I do not know, nor does he, whether the rates will be raised in the western part of the United States or not. I do not know whether they ought to be raised or not; but I think we ought to be fair in these matters. It is true that we are partisans here, and that aisle in the center divides the two parties, but I submit that with all of it we ought to be fair as men, fair to the interests of this country and to the men who hold high office, and not get up here and loosely charge that the President of the United States is influencing the great Interstate Commerce Commission to carry out his will.

Mr. BLACKMON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BLACKMON. Does the gentleman think that any considerable number of people take the gentleman from Iowa seriously when he undertakes to make a charge of that kind against the President of the United States, even in the gentleman's own district?

Mr. FOSTER. I would not imagine so, because I imagine that in the district the gentleman has the honor to represent they understand the partisanship of their able Representative, and that he is doing it for partisan purposes; but I submit that, though we may be partisan, and that it is right that we should fight for our party and for the principles upon which be stand, but I submit that it is unfair for any man, for partisan purposes, to charge those things of which he has no proof, which he can not substantiate, and the gentleman in this case did not present any proof. Now, one word more and I am through.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. No; I can not yield now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FOSTER. Just one word more. The gentleman speaks of Mr. Bryan, the Secretary of State, and says that he has gone into the western country, among the people, and that they have gone in great numbers to hear him speak in political campaigns. As you know, Mr. Bryan has for 20 years, as the gentleman says, been politically killed almost every 30 days. Still he stands before the American people as a man who is incorruptible and who stands for their rights. [Applause on the Democratic side.] My friend from Iowa may endeavor to knock Mr. Bryan into a cocked hat every day if he likes, and still he will appear as a man who stands upon the side of the people of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Long after other men may be forgotten, long after they shall be known only by the name upon the stone over the place where they rest, Mr. Bryan will be remembered by the American people for the good things he has done. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Now, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. If Mr. Bryan is the great patriot and Democrat that the gentleman has said he is, why was it that in 1906 Woodrow Wilson refused to support him for the Presidency of the United States?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Bryan was not a candidate in 1906, and the gentleman ought to know that.

Mr. GOOD. I mean in 1896.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not talking of that now; it is not the question.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; of course you are not.

Mr. BARTLETT. How does the gentleman know that Mr. Wilson did not support Mr. Bryan in 1896?

Mr. FOSTER. That is another one of the gentleman's charges for which he furnishes no proof.

Mr. GOOD. It has been charged openly.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman has asked me a question. He wants an answer to it, does he not?

Mr. FOSTER. I will tell the gentleman when I get through, and he can answer it then. The gentleman has seen some rumor in the newspapers again, and imagines that what he sees there is absolutely correct, and he never looks at more than one side of a proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask for two minutes more. The gentleman wishes to ask me a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. I will point to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to speeches made in the Senate by eminent Senators of the United States, charging that Mr. Wilson did not support Mr. Bryan for the Presidency in 1896. Will the gentleman produce a single speech to the contrary?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not making any charge, nor is that the question now.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman produce a single speech or letter of Mr. Wilson, which he wrote, indorsing Mr. Bryan at that time?

Mr. ADAMSON. Will my friend from Illinois make peace and yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Iowa seems to be unhappy about the President's interference. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think that the interference which is troubling the gentleman so much is the President's interference with the plans and success of the Republican Party? [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FOSTER. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. FOSTER. No; I must decline to yield just now. I just want to say this in conclusion: In all fairness I say that it is so easy to criticize public men and take rumors that may float around against them here and there——

Mr. GORDON. In the newspapers.

Mr. FOSTER. And some article that may appear in some newspaper. Now, I submit to my friend from Iowa—I know that the gentleman, when he will lay aside his partisanship, intends to be fair. I believe that the gentleman wants to be fair; but he is so partisan that he finds it hard to get his mind around where he can be fair, and I suggest to him, and to every other man in this House, that we ought to be just to public men and not always be criticizing them upon some little rumor that may be afloat in the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOSS of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the reason why I do not believe that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is correct in making the charge that the President of the United States influenced the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant the 5 per cent increase of rates is solely because the Interstate Commerce Commission would not permit the application of such kind of influence. I believe that the President of the United States, with all due respect, is the greatest dictator that we have had in the White House for 50 years, and possibly, not being a judge or a lawyer, he might not fully realize the impropriety of trying to influence a judicial body like the Interstate Commerce Commission. But, Mr. Chairman, if he did try, I feel very sure that the Interstate Commerce Commission, composed as it is of men of the highest type and character, realizing their duty as judges to decide the case solely upon the evidence, would not for a moment let even the President of the United States influence it in its decisions.

Mr. Chairman, I am getting tired of this thing of accusing men, situated as the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission are as judicial officers, of being influenced by outside considerations in reaching a conclusion. When that commission first refused to grant the increase it suggested to the railroads certain economies that they could practice. It wanted to test the question of whether or not in that way the railroads could not obtain the revenues they were seeking. It was tested for months, and it was found that these economies did not produce the expected result. Meanwhile the earnings of the railroads had steadily declined, and conditions had become almost critical, and so, after careful consideration, and having come to the conclusion that the best interests of the country demanded it and the railroads sorely needed it, the Interstate Commerce Commission did grant an increase of 5 per cent to the railroads; and I believe they had ample evidence on which to base that conclusion, though other men considering the same evidence might have reached a different conclusion.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there are any large number of shippers in this country who would attribute unworthy motives or improper influences to the Interstate Commerce Commission for its action in that case.

Now, some gentlemen refer to the fact in criticism that in valuing these railroads to ascertain proper earnings on the investment the franchise or good will is considered.

Mr. Chairman, in some States in this Union the franchise is considered as an asset of the railroads for the purpose of taxation. In West Virginia and other States, when that question was submitted to the courts, the franchise was considered a very valuable asset for taxation purposes. If this was correct, then it would not be incorrect to consider the value of the franchise in determining reasonable earnings on the investment.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the time is coming in this country when, without prejudice and without this spirit of hostility which seems to prevail in some quarters, we ought to give the railroads and the shippers of this country equal justice, and not merely presume, simply because they decide a question in a way that does not suit some gentlemen, that a great commission, composed as it is of great, big men, who are trying to do their duty, are influenced by unworthy motives. I believe the Interstate Commerce Commission has one of the hardest tasks and some of the most difficult duties to perform of any body of men in this great country. If any critic will even start to study the transportation problem and get even a little insight into it, he will see the magnitude of the difficulties that arise in fixing rates. It is one of the most intricate problems that could possibly be brought before any commission or any court; and I believe that when it comes to criticism of the Interstate Commerce Commission, we ought at least to try to be fair, and unless we know the facts and unless we know the evidence we should not condemn it. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the pending amendment proposes to strike out the entire appropriation for this branch of the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The gentleman who has offered the amendment has avowed his purpose solely that of economy. At the same time he has admitted that the work in question is desirable, that it should be carried on, but insists that on the score of economy it ought at this time, at any rate, to be suspended.

I can agree with the gentleman as to the need of economy at present in our Government expenditures, but I do not believe, and I do not believe the gentleman from Massachusetts would urge, that we have yet reached the point where we should vote against appropriations simply and solely on the plea of economy, regardless of the merit of the particular item under consideration.

The gentleman himself has not followed that course. I noticed the other day when we had before us the naval appropriation bill the gentleman from Massachusetts, who then, no doubt, knew as well as he does to-day the serious financial condition of the country, found it possible to support a proposition for two battleships, notwithstanding the attempt made by the leader of the majority [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to secure the commitment of the bill in order to cut down the provision from two battleships to one and save an expenditure of $15,000,000 to $20,000,000. Notwithstanding we are hard up, he was able to see where we could get $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 for the purpose which to him seemed meritorious. Here is a purpose which we may easily infer does not seem so meritorious to him, and hence, with his economy plea, he would cut out $3,000,000 and put an end to the work.

To my mind this is not an abstract proposition, as to work that should be done some time in the uncertain future. It is a concrete proposition as to work which needs to be done and needs to be done as soon as possible. If I could have my way, I would like to have the appropriation $6,000,000 instead of $3,000,000, because I believe the work should be expedited, and I have had some experience in connection with this subject which leads me to that belief.

In the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Five Per Cent case, about which we have heard so much the past hour, my complaint as to that decision—and I would not comment as to the decision itself, as to the question which was before the commission, because that should stand for itself—my complaint is as to the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission in going out of its way, going away from the record and evidence in the case, and putting in obiter dicta which have resulted in the most active lobby on the part of the railroads in this country that we have ever seen for an increase of rates all over the country. That is a result not of a decision of the commission based on evidence, but of obiter dicta to the effect that the railroads might well increase their passenger rates.

And as a result of that, in the State of Michigan—just as is the case in every State, I presume—there is an active lobby on the part of the railroads before the legislature, before business men's associations, and everywhere for an increase in passenger rates, and they bottom their case on this piece of dicta from the Interstate Commerce Commission. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that if we are to suffer because of the dicta of the commission we might at least have the benefit of the evidence which the proposed valuation purposes to bring us. I understand the commission has already taken up under this law—or it is supposed to have done so—the work of making the physical valuation and financial investigation of the Pere Marquette Railroad, which is largely in the State of Michigan. The commission is supposed to have begun that work. I hope it will be completed some time, although the speed with which it is going forward is not attracting any wonderment. Even though it be progressing but slowly, we do not want it stopped or suspended for a few years. Some time it may be completed. In the meantime, spurred on by the dicta of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and quoting it with relish, the receivers of the Pere Marquette Railroad are before the Legislature of the State of Michigan with a formal petition asking for a repeal of our 2 cent rate law and an opportunity to increase their rates. With all of their facilities for furnishing or concealing information to the people of the State, they have under way a remarkable propaganda, which is ex parte and stands uncontradicted. It is wonderful how much more information they can give when they want to than they can when they do not want to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, two years ago, before a committee of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, the Pere Marquette Railroad Co. was asked to submit figures showing the actual cost of carrying passengers, and they professed, which was no doubt the truth, their inability to do so, their inability to figure out that proposition. Now, however, they come in voluntarily with their petition to the legislature, and they can figure that all out for you to the fraction of a cent and be sure that they are right, and having done that they read to the legislature and the people the obiter dicta of the Interstate Commerce Commission. They ask the legislature to act along the lines so gratuitously suggested by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How long has that road been in the hands of a receiver?

Mr. CRAMTON. Two or three years is my recollection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What was the occasion of the appointment of the receivers?

Mr. CRAMTON. The immediate occasion was the fact that they had gone to the railroad commission of the State of Michigan for an authorization of bonds, and secured an authorization of a loan of $8,000,000 to be used for certain purposes. The road used the money, in part, for other purposes, as later developed. Later on they again went to the same commission for permission to issue another lot of bonds, and those facts appearing, they were not able to get an authorization, and the receivership followed. That was only the immediate cause, and back of that was the fact that they had been piling up millions and millions of dollars of obligations with no increase in equipment or other facilities for service, until to-day they have $110,000,000 of obligations, whereas, under the physical valuation of a number of years ago, they were valued at $29,000,000, approximately, and are now being taxed supposedly on a cash value of twenty-six and one-half million dollars.

That a decrease in rates of fare must result necessarily in a corresponding decrease in gross revenues is not true, and before the commission declares itself on such an important proposition the actual effect of such decreased rates on revenues should be thoroughly investigated by them. I am inserting here one piece of significant evidence bearing on this question. It is a statement of the Michigan Railroad Commission, issued February 28, 1908, as to the effect of the Michigan 2-cent fare law, which took effect September 28, 1907, on the gross revenues of the roads. It follows:

CIRCULAR No. 7.

EARNINGS OF MICHIGAN ROADS UNDER THE 2-CENT-RATE LAW.

MICHIGAN RAILROAD COMMISSION,
Lansing, Mich., February 28, 1908.

In accordance with the statute the various railroads of the State have filed with the Michigan Railroad Commission statements showing their gross earnings for October, November, and December, 1907. The 2-cent law having taken effect September 28, 1907, these figures are the first available in consideration of the effect of the 2-cent law on the earnings of the roads. In advocating the passage of the 2-cent law before the last session of the legislature it was the contention of Gov. Warner and Commissioner of Railroads Glasgow that the passage of such a law would not materially affect the gross earnings of the companies by reason of the increase in travel under the lower rate. The commission are very glad to be able to say to the people of Michigan that the facts at hand go very far to sustain this contention.

We have prepared a tabulation of these quarterly earning statements which is worthy of careful consideration. In this tabulation we have compared the passenger and freight earnings of the months referred to in 1907 with the same months in 1906 and do not hesitate to say that such comparison vindicates the Michigan 2-cent law and demonstrates that, while it is of the greatest benefit to the people of the State, it is not injurious or unjust to the railroads. It is to be remembered that during a portion of the months referred to in 1907 the business of the railroads was very seriously reduced by the financial scare, and for this reason in comparing the earnings of 1907 with those of 1906 we are comparing the earnings of the 2-cent law under times of considerable financial depression with the earnings under the old law in abnormally prosperous times. It is also to be remembered that the test during the three months referred to has not been an entirely fair test owing to the fact that many of the roads have entirely, or to a great extent, cut out excursions, which in previous years they have been eager to conduct and have been supposed to do so at a profit. Had all profitable excursion business been sought for by all railroads under the 2-cent law the same as before, we believe the showing would have been even more strongly in favor of the law.

In the tabulation we first considered those roads which are now on a 2-cent basis, namely, the Ann Arbor, the Cincinnati Northern, the Big Four, the Grand Rapids & Indiana, the Grand Trunk, the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, the Michigan Central, the Pere Marquette, and the Wabash. Considering these roads altogether we find that their aggregate passenger earnings for the months named in 1907 exceed the earnings of same months in 1906 by $620.84, a very small portion of 1 per cent increase. At the same time their freight earnings show a gain of $202,417.98, or a gain of 2.6 per cent. While the passenger earnings were affected by the 2-cent law the freight earnings, of course, were not; but notwithstanding this it will be observed that the passenger earnings have kept practically up with the freight earnings. None of the principal roads above mentioned show any serious reduction which can be traced to the 2-cent law. The Ann Arbor shows a loss in passenger earnings of 6.4 per cent, but they also show a greater loss in freight earnings, namely, 8 per cent. The Grand Rapids & Indiana shows a decrease of 5.9 per cent in passenger earnings and a gain of 2.5 per cent in freight earnings. The Pere Marquette, a loss of 4 per cent in passenger earnings, with a gain of 11 per cent in freight earnings. It is safe to say that had either of these roads followed their old custom in the matter of pushing for passenger business by profitable excursions they would have shown a gain instead of a decrease in their passenger business notwithstanding the hard times. The Grand Trunk shows an increase in their passenger business of 6.9 per cent under the operation of the new law, and a gain of 13.7 per cent in their freight business. The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern shows a gain of 2.3 per cent in their passenger business, and a decrease of 12.8 per cent in their freight business. The Michigan Central shows a gain of 3.3 per cent in their passenger business, while they have a decrease of 2.9 per cent in their freight business. The Wabash shows a loss of 11.6 per cent for the three months in 1907 as compared with 1906, but inasmuch as the road was on a 2-cent basis before the recent 2-cent law was passed that act can not be charged with the falling off in their gross earnings. Their freight earnings show an increase of two-fifths of 1 per cent. The Big Four, with a very small mileage in this State, shows the most startling decrease in passenger revenue of 52.9 per cent. This is explained by electric competition. The Cincinnati Northern, with also a small mileage in this State, shows a serious decrease of 19.3 per cent.

We also have figures concerning the numerous smaller roads in the State which were not affected by the 2-cent law and continued to charge 3 cents. Their figures are not much different from the figures shown by the 2-cent roads; some of them show an increase and some a loss. The principal ones are the Detroit & Mackinac, with 3 per cent of gain on passenger earnings and 7.4 per cent of loss on freight earnings, and the Pontiac, Oxford & Northern, with 1 per cent gain on passenger earnings and 3 per cent loss on freight. The upper peninsula roads we have also compiled, and notwithstanding most of these formerly charged 4 cents and now are limited to 3 cents it is to be noted that in the aggregate they have a gain of $13,000 in passenger earnings over the same period in 1906.

We commend these figures to the careful consideration not only of those in charge of the Michigan roads but to the general public and are confident that further operation under the 2-cent law will more clearly demonstrate its fairness and practicability.

CASSIUS L. GLASGOW, Chairman,
GEORGE W. DICKINSON,
JAMES SCULLY,
Commissioners.

But, Mr. Chairman, my appeal is that now that this agitation has been stirred up, and while this demand for an increase of rates is being made at the doors of every legislature in this country by reason of this dicta of the commission, we ought at any rate to be able to let the commission go ahead and get the evidence, not only as to the physical valuation, but in respect to the financial history of the roads which is also provided for in the same law.

Mr. Chairman, there seem to be some gentlemen who believe this is a period of reaction and conservatism, and that anything to-day that can be done to saddle on the people of the country all of this load of overcapitalization and frenzied finance the people will stand for, but, to my mind, that is a great mistake, and it is the most mistaken position that any party or person can take, and I for one on this side want it understood that I do not believe that the gentleman offering this amendment represents this side of the House or that we favor any halt in this work. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, we may as well realize what we propose to do. Like a great deal of legislation that has been adopted in the past few years, this legislation providing for the physical valuation of railroads was enacted under whip and spur, and it was done under arguments that are old and not new. It was the same argument, the same illustration, that Antony used over the dead body of Cæsar—simply holding up the bloody garments and saying, "Look at these, look at the rents in the garments, and where they were made," so that the fury of the Roman mob was changed in one instant from being against Antony to being in favor of Antony and against Brutus. So we rush through this bill to provide for the physical valuation of railroads. I am compelled to say, in my judgment, after due consideration of where it will lead and what it will cost, that we, too, held up before the House and before the people the argument, "Look what the railroads are doing to the people in respect to the charges that are made," and we made them believe that this would be a panacea for all purposes, to properly regulate the charges of railroads for transportation of freight and passengers.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is like all such undigested and hasty legislation, and we have come to realize that we now have a white elephant on our hands. At the time it was being considered before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I was a member, the statement was made that it would cost probably $3,000,000 and take a couple of years, and not over three, to finish. Some one put it up as high as five years, and now we have already expended $2,400,000 and the ground has not been scratched, nor will we get through with it for some time to come. Commissioner Prouty stated that it is being done at the rate of 2,000 miles of railroad a month, which is as much as we can possibly do, and there are 250,000 miles of single-track railroads to be valued, and in addition 1 mile of sidetrack and additional track for every mile of single track.

In additon to the sidetracks and spur tracks and such things, it will amount to nearly 300,000 miles, and if we have 2,000 miles valued every month, which is the highest estimate, we are to have 30 years continuation of this valuation, at an expenditure of from two to three million dollars a year.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Did not Commissioner Prouty testify before the gentleman's committee that with an appropriation of three and a half million per year the whole work could be completed in four years?

Mr. BARTLETT. Four years from next July.

Mr. LENROOT. Four years from next July.

Mr. BARTLETT. But we found out that these estimates and these expectations have all gone for naught. We have started in on this examination of the physical valuation for railroads with the idea it was going to cost only $5,000,000 and not take over three years.

Mr. MADDEN. Did I understand the gentleman from Georgia to say that they could value 2,000 miles a month?

Mr. BARTLETT. Not over that, I said.

Mr. MADDEN. That would only take one year to value all the railroads in the United States.

Mr. BARTLETT. It would be 24,000 miles.

Mr. MADDEN. No; 240,000 miles.

Mr. BARTLETT. Here is what he says, "24,000 miles a year." The gentleman is way off in his calculation.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do.

Mr. SISSON. In response to the question asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] a moment ago, Judge

Prouty did not state positively this work could be done in four years.

Mr. BARTLETT. Here is what he said.

Mr. SISSON. Judge Prouty said that they hoped to be able to do it; and when you got right down to the question as to whether or not it could be completed in that time Judge Prouty was always very ready to hedge the question.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I have the testimony, which I will read.

Mr. LENROOT. Read page 324 and you will find it was positive.

Mr. BARTLETT (reading)—

Now, we are spending at the rate of $2,000,000 a year. Two million dollars a year, with perhaps some slight addition, because our land work is not fully developed yet, will carry all parts of the work along at the same pace; that is to say, would cover approximately from 20,000 to 25,000 miles of railroad a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT (reading)—

Of that $2,000,000, over $500,000 is what might be termed overhead expense, and that expense would not be increased if you doubled the number of our party.

He seems to have calculated at the rate of 2,000 miles a month, or 25,000 miles a year. My friend from Illinois has got his arithmetic a little different. He further says:

And it has always been my belief that we should conduct this work at the rate of about 50,000 a year; that is to say, we should practically clean up the work between July 1 next and July 1 four years later.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield for one more interruption?

Mr. BARTLETT. I will.

Mr. SISSON. You will find that Judge Prouty statement is always based upon conditions that if they can do certain things, but if you will ask Judge Prouty about it you will find that he has at no time made any definite positive statement as to when this work will be completed.

Mr. LENROOT. Upon the basis of 2,000 miles a month it is upon a basis of an appropriation of $1,900,000 for each year, which was the last bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Two million dollars.

Mr. LENROOT. One hundred thousand went to a deficiency.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have just read his testimony.

Mr. LENROOT. It would be nearly 4,000 miles a month on the appropriation they ask for.

Mr. BARTLETT. He said, "That expense would not be increased if you doubled the number of our parties, and it has always been my belief that we should conduct this work at the rate of about 50,000 a year." Now, the gentleman wanted to call my attention to some page.

Mr. GILLETT. Page 324. Mr. GILLETT asked him:

You think you can finish the work in four years at that rate?
Mr. PROUTY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, yes. Judge Prouty thought this work was so easy that he would spend about three months in running for Senator up in Vermont.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly, if he could run for Senator or some other political office and leave the work for his colleagues to do, it would not be done so fast.

Mr. LEVY. Commissioner Prouty previous to this commission being appointed never made a statement but he said it would cost a great deal less.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; he did. I do not propose to enter into any political discussion that is going on here. If we are going to carry on this work we might as well realize now what we are proposing to do. We are now in the second year and we are up against the proposition to do the work, and as yet we have realized no benefit, in my judgment, and the ultimate benefits—considerable benefits—are not yet in sight, because when the work is all over new conditions may arise, and new valuations will probably have to be made. We might as well realize that when we appropriate this $3,000,000 now we are liable to be called on before this Congress adjourns, or when another one meets, for a deficiency of $400,000, and if we turn this work over to those gentlemen to carry out this law, not knowing how long it would last, nor how much it will cost, and not knowing what the benefits are, if any, to the people of the United States——

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission can determine even approximately what a reasonable rate is without knowing this very thing that this law was passed to be done?

Mr. BARTLETT. Well, when a charge is being made unreasonably by the railroads it is their business to demonstrate to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Interstate Commerce Commission decides, makes its decision, and rejects the charge as being confiscatory, then they can determine through the courts whether the rate is unreasonable, and the burden is upon the railroad to do so.

And referring again to the decision that was quoted by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], it was held in that case that a corporation in making a demand for rates can not ask that their watered stock or their overissues of bonds, which do not represent actual values, shall be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. It took no physical valuation to determine that, because the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has called your attention to the leading decision upon that question, and in that very decision the Supreme Court, by Judge Harlan, said:

The public can not properly be subjected to unreasonable rates in order simply that stockholders may earn dividends. The legislature has the authority in every case where its power has not been restrained by contract to proceed upon the ground that the public may not rightfully be required to submit to unreasonable exactions for the use of a public highway established and maintained under legislative authority. If a corporation can not maintain such a highway and earn dividends for stockholders it is a misfortune for it and them, which the Constitution does not require to be remedied by imposing unjust burdens upon the public.

So that we have already the law of the land finally settled in that case, that the railroads, when they appeal from a decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, can not impose additional burdens and taxes upon the people for the carriage of their freight and passengers simply because they have swollen in amount their stocks and bonds. The burden is upon them.

Mr. Chairman, when I voted for the measure providing for the physical valuation of the railroads I was anxious to relieve the people; but now upon mature reflection and in the light of what I have learned since then, I believe now that this measure will not result in that great measure of relief, and be the panacea for all the alleged burdens in the carriage of freight and passengers which it was supposed it would be. I believe that the act of 1910, which we passed through this House on a bill reported from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, headed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], now the leader of the minority, was a measure which gave to the people all the relief that they can obtain or that they ought to expect to obtain, when we provided by law that the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission upon a question of fact is final and can not be appealed from.

Mr. GORDON. That did not help the people much in the 5 per cent advance cases, did it?

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, again we have this great hurrah about the 5 per cent increase. Mr. Chairman, I do not own a dollar of railroad stocks or bonds, nor am I in any way connected with any. I aided with all the power, energy, and force that I had in passing the act of 1906, and in passing the act of 1910 to amend the interstate-commerce act. A prominent statesman of the Democratic Party, Judge Reagan, of Texas, was the first Member of this House to introduce, away back in 1887, and to secure the passage in 1887 of the law which sought to give relief to the people for unjust exactions at the hands of the railroads, and that law was passed against the opposition of the Republicans then in the House, such men as Hepburn and Cannon; but times have changed. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and his Democratic colleagues and some of his Republican colleagues upon that committee brought before this House a bill which amended that act and gave relief to the people. I had some part in my humble way in aiding in the enactment of that legislation, and I am sincere to say that, in my judgment, considering the temper of Congress and of the Members of Congress now when we reflect upon the passage of the valuation law, it was not necessary and will not be of any substantial or lasting benefit to the people.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BARTLETT. I always yield to my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER. The Supreme Court of the United States, in Smyth against Ames, which I read, say that a knowledge of the value of the property of a railroad is absolutely necessary to the fixing of rates.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, yes.

Mr. COOPER. And we have not that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask three minutes more, and then I will have done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, yes; and since that decision these laws to which I have called attention have been enacted. Before that enactment of 1910 the railroad could appeal to the courts to suspend or enjoin any order of the commission, whether it related to law or to facts.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit another interruption right there on that point?

Mr. BARTLETT. I hesitate to, but I will yield to my friend.

Mr. COOPER. It is true that we have passed a law since then; but we have not given the court or the commission the information upon which they can base a decision, and the Supreme Court said so in Smyth against Ames.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am familiar with the case of Smyth against Ames. I have read it time and again and have it before me now; and I have undertaken to impress upon the House the fact that the position I occupy upon this matter is that when the railroads attack an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission they must show that it is not based upon proper values.

The burden is upon them, and they can not, as I have shown, put into that valuation the fictitious or watered values of their stocks and bonds. The railroad company must demonstrate that the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission is unreasonable. The burden is upon them now, and this additional expense upon the Government will amount to nothing, even at the expiration of 10 or 15 years. Whoever or whatever may be responsible for the apparent and real expected deficit in the Treasury, this is a luxury and not a necessity. It is a luxury which we might indulge in if times were different.

I do not know that I am in favor of discontinuing the work altogether. We have numbers of high-priced and high-paid men in this work. It is not of such urgent, immediate necessity as to require the continuation of the expenditure of this large amount of money to carry on this work. When we entered into it we did not realize what we were about, in my judgment. It can be suspended, not abandoned altogether, until a more propitious time and season, and I do not think the people will be injured or hurt thereby.

One word in reference to the increase of rate, Mr. Chairman. Like the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Moss], I believe that the men on the Interstate Commerce Commission who devote their time and attention to the consideration of this work have at heart the best interests of the people. I believe the increase of rates decided by them was decided on the merits of the case and met the demand of a vast majority of the people of the country, the consumers and shippers, and met with the approval of all men who think justly and properly about it. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I want to see if we can not agree upon the remainder of the time to be devoted to this proposition.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to say to the gentleman I would like 15 minutes. The gentleman from Georgia has spoken 18 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the gentleman will not ask for that much time. I know it is a very important matter, but we do not want to devote too much time to it.

Mr. MANN. Gentlemen on this side are asking for over an hour.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have already debated it an hour and 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If no proposition is submitted, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think we ought to have some agreement as to time on this item.

Mr. MANN. I think so, too, or otherwise we will debate it all the afternoon.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that all debate on this paragraph and amendment thereto shall be closed in one hour.

Mr. LEVY. I have another amendment.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to have a little more time. We will proceed very rapidly afterwards on the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it looks like it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to reach an agreement before we proceed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At the first of it nobody wanted to talk about it.

Mr. MANN. The longer we run, the more Members want to talk.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that all debate close in one hour and a half, and let the recognition be by the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman object to my controlling one-half of the time on this side? That would be distributed proportionately to gentlemen who have asked for it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the debate ought to be divided among Members in favor of and opposed to the proposition, and the only way is to let the Chair recognize Members under the regular rules that are applicable in Committee of the Whole, preference going to members of the committee, and preference given to those opposed and in favor of alternately.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the gentleman would not object to some one controlling the time over here.

Mr. SHERLEY. Not if it did not result in having the debate lopsided. The division is not a party division; it is on a proposition touching a particular matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from New York, that all debate on the pending amendment and amendments thereto close in 1 hour and 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, I want to say that I would like to have 10 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the motion be put and either objected to or not, and then if gentlemen want additional time the committee can determine it.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Kentucky knows that if we agree upon a limitation of time, with no arrangement as to the control, the Chair will not be justified in giving anyone more than five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not agree to that proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will modify my request, Mr. Chairman, and make it 1 hour and 40 minutes, and that will give the gentleman from Wyoming 10 minutes.

Mr. LEVY. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment is not pending.

Mr. LEVY. But I want to offer it, and this is to shut off amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from New York has nothing to do with shutting off amendments.

Mr. LEVY. But I want five minutes on my amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the gentleman can take it and talk on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall close in 1 hour and 40 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may control one-half the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that he may control one-half the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will take the other half.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that the time ought to be controlled with reference to the center aisle, inasmuch as it has been stated by the gentleman from Kentucky that it is not a party question. It ought to be divided between those who favor and those who do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the further request that one half the time be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and the other half be controlled by himself. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and yet in the present state of the public revenues I realize how any man who believes in keeping the expenditures within our income if possible may consider himself justified in attempting to cut down or entirely eliminate an item of this kind on the theory that this work might, under these circumstances, wait. I voted for the bill for the physical valuation of railways, and I think I voted for it with my eyes wide open. I did not imagine, as some Members apparently did, that it would cost not over three or four million dollars. I believed then that it would cost at least ten, and possibly twenty, million dollars.

Judge Prouty now believes it will cost anywhere from $12,000,000 to $20,000,000; even more, if a literal interpretation of the statute is to be followed. Whether or not the work, when done, will be worth that much is of course a matter of opinion. That it will be valuable, of course, there is no reasonable doubt, because the physical valuation of the property is one of the factors to be taken into consideration in fixing rates. It is not the controlling factor nor the most important factor. A rather more important factor is that of the obligations of the property, and a more important question than physical valuation is that which is now being neglected by the Democratic Party, namely, legislation for the control of the issuance by common carriers of bonds and other obligations. Until we have legislation upon that subject, physical valuation of properties will be of comparatively little value. But this valuation is a factor in rate fixing.

Mr. Chairman, without waiting for this physical valuation, however, the Interstate Commerce Commission has recently increased by approximately 5 per cent the railroad rates in a large area in the eastern portion of the country. I think it is probably true that it is impossible to prove that the President of the United States in any way influenced that action by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The very regrettable feature of the situation, however, is that the President in this case is unlike Cæsar's wife. He is not above suspicion. It is a notorious fact that after the first and adverse decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the subject of an increase of rates the papers favorable to an increase in rates the country over gave everybody to understand that the administration, the President, favored an increase. Editorials and news items to that effect were published in every part and section of the country, and we heard no denial from anyone anywhere of that proposition that the President did favor an increase. In due course of time the increase came. But the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Moss] has conclusively proved the proposition to his satisfaction and said so in answer to statements made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield at this time. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Moss] says that it is impossible that the Interstate Commerce Commission was influenced by the President, that he knows the members of that commission to be high-minded and honorable gentlemen, gentlemen who have too high a regard for their duties and responsibilities to allow the President of the United States to influence them. I believe they are high-minded and honorable gentlemen, but I decline to believe that they are any more high-minded and honorable, or that they have any higher regard for their responsibilities and duties than have the Representatives of the sovereign States of this Union under this Dome, or the Representatives of the people whose seats are on this floor. And yet we have seen with our own eyes and of recent date the influence of the Executive upon legislation and on the action of some of these high-minded and honorable Representatives of the States and of the people. It is not proper to quote from what occurred in another legislative body, except in a general way, but if gentlemen want to know what certain gentlemen, representatives of certain States, in the Senate think of Executive interference, let them read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday.

The charge was hurled in another body by a Democrat of high estate that Members of the legislative branch are absolutely subservient to the dictation and domination of Executive authority; that legislation is being urged that has little real, bona fide, actual support anywhere except in the Executive Mansion; and that that legislation, if placed upon the statute books, would be so placed under coercion and dictation of the President of the United States. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission is composed of men more immune from Executive influence, more high minded, men who to a greater extent realize their duties and responsibilities, than do the Representatives of the States and the people of the Union. We have seen very recently the effect of Executive influence in this House.

Just a few days ago a bill was brought into this body on the question of passing it over the President's veto, and the Democratic side—some 11 gentlemen, if I recollect correctly—discovered that in the interval between their last vote, some 30 days before, and the time they were called upon to vote upon the proposition after the presidential veto their minds had changed upon this important question, and whereas they felt 30 days before that it was essential that there should be an educational qualification for the admission of aliens, 30 days thereafter they came to the conclusion that no such qualification was necessary or should be provided. Some time ago we had under consideration a question that a great party had passed upon in its platform and on which it had appealed to the people from every stump and rostrum in a campaign, but the presidential influence was effective in having that plank utterly stripped from the party platform and the mandate of the party repudiated and the position of more than half of the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber reversed.

Mr. Chairman, in the face of this state of affairs, with Executive influence so apparent that he who runs may read and all the world may know, I refuse to believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission is necessarily any more immune from influence from the White House than are the honorable gentlemen who are my colleagues here and the gentlemen who represent the States of the Union at the other end of the Capitol. Never in all of the history of the Republic have we seen anything like it. What is the meat that this, our Executive, feeds upon that he feels that he is justified in stopping the wheels of legislation, in preventing the passage of supply bills, in preventing his party from carrying out its legislative pledges by the order and demand from the White House that certain legislation, new, novel, and dangerous, urged by a not considerable number of our people, never pledged or approved by any party on earth, shall be written on the statute books, whether Congress favor or approve it or no. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOWARD in the chair). The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP.]

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I am confident that the predictions of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. MONDELL] concerning the interference of the President in the proceedings of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the rate question are about as far afield as the prediction of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] about the political death of William J. Bryan. For 16 years every year leading Republicans have declared that he has met his political death. If he has, one thing is certain—he has proven to be a very lively corpse, and that he has come forth from each political death stronger than ever in the esteem and affectionate regard of the people of this great country. And he is stronger to-day with the American people than he has ever been. As the years go by the people become attached stronger to him for the good and great work he is doing in their behalf.

I hold no brief to speak for him. He needs no defense, as his great public services have so endeared him to the American people that attacks, such as just made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], have but little effect upon the great mass of the people who appreciate his great work, clean, pure, and noble life. Let me remind gentlemen who are disposed to criticize this great man and the splendid services he has rendered his country and the people, that all their assaults upon him are made in vain, and will find but little indorsement among the people of this great country. He has earned the gratitude of the people for his faithful devotion to their cause, and for his great work in their behalf they refuse to be alienated from him. They believe in him as they believe in no other man in this country; they recognize him as one whom they can safely trust, and confidently rely on him as the champion of their cause. They know he has never abused their confidence or betrayed their best interests. In the great crisis through which this country has been passing for the last year the people have depended upon him more than any other person to preserve peace, prevent this country from being plunged into war, and he has met their expectations, for which the people, irrespective of party, owe him a lasting debt of gratitude. From every fireside in this great country go out the thanks of fathers and mothers that this country had at this time in the great office of Secretary of State William J. Bryan to preserve peace and prevent the slaughter of our best manhood. It matters not what gentleman may say in criticizing him or his great work, it will fall upon unappreciative ears, and the people who know the benefit of what he has done in behalf of the welfare of this great country will resent it. Long after the names of his carping critics have been forgotten, the name of William J. Bryan will be fresh in the minds of the people as one of the greatest names that will adorn American history and American statesmanship. His rank will be of the highest and his fame enduring.

Woodrow Wilson, as President of these United States, needs no defense from any Member on this floor, because the American people understand and appreciate his great work to emancipate them from the exploitation of special privileges which have dominated the legislation of this country under Republican administrations. The people well know throughout this Republic the high and laudable purpose which animates his course, and they commend him for his courage and tenacity in standing as he does for their best interests. Monopoly is now making a desperate effort to defeat his purpose, but the people understand what inspires their desperate efforts, and will align themselves on his side and assist him in his good work. They know on him they can rely for relief from the burdens which have been imposed and which impositions are attempted to be continued to the great detriment of the producing and consuming masses. They will know these wrongs against them are intolerable to him, and he is using his great power to eliminate them, and because of this fact he has incurred the enmity of the special-privilege class, which is arraying all the power it can summon to defeat his purpose, but its efforts will be in vain. He has the support in his great work of the masses of this country, who recognize in him a leader who will not surrender at the behest of the emissaries of personal privilege. The people will assist him in his efforts to conquer the forces of monopoly in this country and restore the rights of the people, so that this again will be a Government of, for, and by the people.

Mr. Chairman, it will be unfortunate, in my judgment, if at this time this appropriation is struck out of this bill. The law for the physical valuation of railroads passed this House in the Sixty-second Congress without a single dissenting vote. It received the votes of all the Members of this House, irrespective of party affiliations. There was not a single vote cast against it. The law was passed by a Democratic House unanimously, by a Republican Senate by an overwhelming majority, and was signed by a Republican President. The purpose of that law was to correct existing abuses in order to arrive at the correct determination of the value of railroad properties in this country, to regulate the issuance of stocks and bonds, and adjust fairly transportation charges; and in the last session of Congress the Rayburn stock and bond bill, as an auxiliary measure to this law, was passed by this House, on a roll call, with only 12 dissenting votes. The good features of that law will be neutralized if the great work proposed under the physical valuation law is not carried into effect. This law will be of much value to the public in the settlement of great transportation questions, now the source of much trouble in this country. There are many things, doubtless, in the Interstate Commerce Commission work that ought to and could be corrected, but it is performing a great work, if not the greatest of any department of this Government, and it requires time to work out the proper solution of these questions, some of which are of the greatest magnitude and of far-reaching importance.

I will call your attention now to one of these things which perhaps needs changing and which doubtless can and will be done when opportunity is presented. The manner in which rates are promulgated now is entirely too expensive, and experience will develop a plan in which that expense can be greatly reduced. As the correction of this involves an administration feature, the commission will doubtless consider methods calculated to reduce this expense. Take one of these trunk lines of this country and it will cost the system $250,000 to promulgate a tariff sheet and get it into force. That expense can be reduced, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, as the work developes, will, I have no doubt, find a way to reduce that cost.

The present method employed in the adoption of freight tariffs is not only expensive but cumbersome, and when once adopted is almost incomprehensible to most of the shippers of the country. A cheaper and simpler method should be, and no doubt will be, devised which will reform the present method and give better satisfaction to the patrons. But the commission has much to contend with and performs an enormous amount of work and accomplishes great good to the public. Its work should not be crippled, but assisted in every manner possible. It seems to me a tariff schedule should be presented to the commission in a petition form for approval before adoption, so that the commission could supervise the rates, and after thus passing on them then have them go into effect, and this certainly would be a great improvement over the method now pursued. It would save much expense and trouble. Some plan of this kind, I am convinced, should be adopted to obviate the trouble which now exists in this respect. A great economy can be inaugurated in this matter and this would enable roads to reduce expenses and prove a great boon to the shipping public. As expenses are reduced rates can be reduced. I hope and believe this subject will soon receive the attention it deserves at the hands of the commission.

Now, as to the physical valuation of railroads, the law was not only passed to ascertain the value but for the purpose of correcting a great evil existing in this country in reference to the issuance of stocks and bonds, which are sold to the investing public, who are entitled to protection from the financial sharks who have been fleecing the public. Innocent investors in railroad stocks and bonds have suffered very greatly because the actual value of the roads in which they bought stocks and bonds could not be ascertained, and hence they were unable to know the real value of the same, but this law will protect the innocent investors in this country in these kinds of securities when in operation. In justice to people who invest in this kind of properties means should be provided for them to obtain this information. This law will supply this means and will also enable the commission to adjust freight rates on a substantial and proper basis. The propriety of the correction of the evils heretofore existing in the issuing of stocks and bonds far in excess of value and the charging of transportation rates to raise revenues to pay the interest on the same has been an imposition on the shipping public for which there was no justification. There is and long since has been a demand for the correction of these evils, and this law, when in operation, will enable the same to be corrected, and therefore protect the investing public from worthless stocks and bonds and the shipping public from exhorbitant transportation charges.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, no appropriation found in this bill or any bill passed by this Congress is more important to the public than is this appropriation. I was very much surprised at some of the statements made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]. He first stated that the bill directing this valuation was put through this House under whip and spur. Mr. Chairman, I well recall that this bill was open to unlimited amendment, was open to the fullest discussion. There was no caucus upon it, and if any bill has been open to full and free consideration, it was this very bill. The gentleman from Georgia states that this valuation is unnecessary, because if the Interstate Commerce Commission shall make any order with reference to rates, the railroads must prove, before that order can be set aside, that the rates are confiscatory, and therefore the burden is upon the railroads to show the value. The gentleman seems to forget that the Interstate Commerce Commission itself can not make an order except upon evidence before it; but passing that, if the railroads do get into court and attempt to prove confiscation, the attitude of the gentleman from Georgia and others who are opposing this proposition is that the Government should lie helpless without any evidence to meet that introduced by the railroads. I wonder if the gentleman himself, or any other lawyer upon the floor of this House, if he had a case in court for a client, if it became necessary to prove the value of property and the burden was upon the opponent, would say to his client that because the burden is upon the other side to prove the value of the property it was unnecessary for him to go to any expense to meet any evidence that may be offered by such opponent. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is absolutely ridiculous, a position that no lawyer would take in his own private practice.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is the very thing that the law is, and the decision of the Supreme Court is to the same effect. If it is ridiculous, they are responsible.

Mr. LENROOT. No; the law is that the railroad has the burden of proof to show confiscation, but the gentleman's position is that he is unwilling to have the Government have the means with which to furnish any evidence to overcome or meet the evidence of the railroads, and I say to the gentleman he never would advise a private client of his not to go to any expense to overcome evidence where the burden of proof of value is upon the other side in a private lawsuit.

Mr. Chairman, Congress itself has no power to change the rule with reference to the basis of rates which shall be charged by a railroad. The railroad is absolutely entitled to such rates as will pay a fair return upon the value of the property. If the rates are more than that, it is a confiscation of the property of the shippers. If it is less than that, it is a confiscation of the property of the railroad. The gentleman from Georgia stated that when this bill was passed it was upon the theory that this would mean a great reduction of rate. I took an active part in the passage of that bill. I never took that position. I said whether it amounted to a reduction or an increase of rates it was absolutely necessary to have this valuation in order that there should be a proper basis for rate making, because otherwise Federal regulation absolutely falls to the ground. And what, Mr. Chairman, is the situation now with reference to rate making in the absence of this valuation?

Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] offers a motion to strike this out. If this valuation had been directed when the Interstate Commerce Commission first asked Congress to provide the means, it would have been completed long before this. If it had been completed, the New Haven Railroad, in the gentleman's district, would not have been wrecked; thousands of widows and orphans there would not have been stripped of their fortunes. And what is the result now? Because of the mismanagement of railroads, because of the distrust of the public in railroad management, the railroads now come to the Interstate Commerce Commission and say, "We can not borrow new capital, and we want to increase our rates." And what is the basis of it? Upon the value of the property? No; the basis is that because new capital will not invest, we want the public to pay such rates as will not only pay a fair return upon the value, but because of suspicion of railroad management and because of distrust of railroad management, because of the hazards of the investor in railroad securities, they insist that they shall take from the shipper such sums as will compensate the investor for the hazards that he undergoes by reason of reckless and criminal mismanagement. Mr. Chairman, there has been a propaganda going on during the past year or two over this country attempting to discredit the Interstate Commerce Commission, attempting to discredit Federal regulation of railroads. But, Mr. Chairman, the fault does not lie in the Interstate Commerce Commission or in Federal regulation. I undertake to say that if it had not been for the New Haven mismanagement and one or two other railroads in this country we would not have had the situation that has existed with reference to loss of credit.

It has not been because of Federal regulation. It has not been because of the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission that railroad credit has largely gone. It has been due to some of the great railroad financiers themselves. It has been due to the fact that the railroads of this country during the past 10 years have been manipulated as a stock proposition upon the New York Stock Exchange rather than as a railroad proposition.

Mr. Chairman, to strike this proposition out of the bill now means an absolute loss of the $2,400,000 that has been used so far in that work; and it means that in the future, if we shall set aside this physical valuation, whenever we have criminal railroad mismanagement or other cause of the distrust upon the part of the public, that the railroads may then come to the Interstate Commerce Commission or to Congress and say that because they can not borrow money to develop their property they insist that we permit them to increase the rates to the shippers to overcome the distrust that has been caused by their own reckless and criminal mismanagement.

Mr. Chairman, the Interstate Commerce Commission in its first decision upon the 5 per cent case said:

> A carrier without a sufficient return to cover costs and obtain in addition a margin of profit large enough to attract new capital for extensions and improvements can not permanently render service commensurate with the needs of the public.

And in the second decision, granting the 5 per cent increase, it is fair to say that that decision rested largely, if not wholly, upon the proposition that the public interest demanded the increase. I am not going to criticize the Interstate Commerce Commission, but, Mr. Chairman, the Interstate Commerce Commission has no right in passing upon rates to determine what a general public policy shall be. The law is well laid down, and the Interstate Commerce Commission must keep within the limits of the law wherever they have the information upon which it can be based, and that is the simple proposition that railroads are entitled only to a fair return upon the value of their property. Again, Mr. Chairman, if this physical valuation had been had when it ought to have been had——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. If this physical valuation had been begun when it should have been begun it would have been completed a year or more ago. We would not have had pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission for nearly a year the application for increase of rates, and when the commission did finally act it would not have been a leap in the dark. On the contrary, if this valuation had been had, and they made an application for an increase, it would not have taken the Interstate Commerce Commission 30 days to decide the application, and there would not have been any great wonder on the part of the public whether there had been undue influence exercised here or undue influence exercised there. There would not have been any question on the part of the public as to whether or not the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission was based upon correct conclusions or not, for they would have followed the simple and plain path of the law after they had had this evidence which I submit must be had if there is ever to be any proper Federal regulation of railroad rates in this country.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back half a minute.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the information that we get as the result of this appropriation will be worth what it costs or not. I notice Mr. Prouty says in the hearings before the committee that if they were to undertake to ascertain the value of each separate parcel of land which the law requires it would add $15,000,000 to the expense that he had already estimated. But I think the time to have talked about the expense of the appropriation was when we passed the law authorizing the work to be done. And therefore I shall not vote to strike out the paragraph. But I wanted to find out from the gentleman in charge of the bill some matters connected with this valuation. Who is in charge of the valuation appropriation under the commission?

Mr. SHERLEY. I presume Mr. Prouty is as much in charge as anybody in connection with it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Prouty was one of the commissioners before he was appointed at the head of the valuation board, was he not?

Mr. SHERLEY. He was, and he is now the director of the valuation organization.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. At what salary is he employed?

Mr. SHERLEY. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What force has he under him?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I do not know that I can answer within the time that the gentleman has. I have in my hand the number of people that are under him and the salaries that they are being paid. It is impossible now to answer.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Are they within or without the classified service?

Mr. SHERLEY. Some of them are within the classified service and some of them are not.

Mr. BARTLETT. Let me suggest to the gentleman——

Mr. SHERLEY. Just a moment. Some of them are within the qualified classified service, which differs a little bit from the regular civil service.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have been informed—and I want to know from the gentleman in charge of the bill if it is true—that Mr. Prouty has a brother-in-law who was employed on this Interstate Commerce Commission force at a salary of $5,000 and was transferred to this lump-sum valuation appropriation at $7,500. Does the gentleman know if that is true?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman can tell me the name of the brother-in-law, I can tell him whether or not he is on the list.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I refer to Mr. Farrell.

Mr. SHERLEY. There appears on this list Mr. P. J. Farrell, at $7,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And it also appears that from the Interstate Commerce Commission he received a salary of $5,000 a year?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is true, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Is there any other Farrell engaged in the work?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not been able to find the name of any other Farrell.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think the gentleman will find that the younger Farrell, the nephew of Commissioner Prouty, is employed on the Interstate Commerce Commission force at $2,400 or $3,000 a year.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman was not asking me in regard to the Interstate Commerce Commission, but in regard to this division of valuation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Very well. Then I will go to the other question. Is there any other Prouty besides Commissioner Prouty on this valuation force?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is an attorney, W. Prouty, drawing a salary of $3,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am informed he is a son of Commissioner Prouty. Does the gentleman know anything about it?

Mr. SHERLEY. I have heard that stated, but I have no personal knowledge as to whether it is true or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for the information. Now, gentlemen, here comes the old question that we have to confront us in every session of Congress. We have tried to remedy the evil by putting into the law a positive prohibition against men being put on lump-sum appropriations at increased salaries. Here is a man jumped from $5,000 to $7,500, and one family drawing down more than $20,000 a year out of this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, of course the benefit to come from any activities that we may take along these lines is a matter of the future. We are not so very much interested in the records of the past, simply considered as records, but we are interested in the records of the past in so far as they will aid us in the future. Those records show that during the 10 years from 1902 to 1912 the railroads increased their outstanding capitalization in stocks and bonds in the sum of $7,152,546,007. They claim that during that same period of time they spent practically $2,000,000,000 of the earnings of the railroads—taken from the American people, of course, for freight and passenger charges—in improvements and betterments. So there is more than $9,000,000,000 alleged to have gone to the railroads during this period of 10 years. During the next 10 years what are they going to do? Are they going to continue the same method of procedure in the coming decade that they have carried on in the past?

It has been well said that we may forget the past and the iniquities and wrongdoings of the railroads and their officers and promoters and financiers in the past, but how about the future? There is no indication that there will be any kind of procedure in the future different from that which has taken place in the past.

England is a country that is governed more or less like ours. The railroads were given a free rein over there. There was no attempt at regulation or valuation or control such as we are trying to put in force in this country, and the valuation of railroad properties in England went up and up until it has reached $314,000 a mile. If our lines were valued on the same basis as the English lines, we would be paying interest and dividend on $81,000,000,000 of stocks and bonds. Is there any doubt that the railroads in this country will continue in the same way, increasing their capitalization each year, nine or ten billion dollars in every decade? Why should they change their practices? Why should their policy be different? Mr. James J. Hill declares that the railroads now need over $5,000,000,000 to put themselves in shape. In 1907 they issued $1,500,000,000 of stocks and bonds, and then, as Mr. Hill says, the people of the country were only saved from all kinds of industrial depression for want of the necessary railroad facilities because of the panic. It took the panic of 1907 to help the railroads out of the difficulty of inefficiency of management and insufficiency of equipment, notwithstanding the tremendous amount of stocks and bonds that they had issued.

It can not be claimed that they have spent that $9,000,000,000 in new lines, for during that period of 10 years they have built only thirty-three thousand and odd miles of new lines, and they could not have spent the money for that purpose. Mr. Hill says they use their capitalization for new lines and their earnings for betterments and surplus. They could not have spent this money for betterments. We all know it has gone to increase the private fortunes of a few men. Are we going to continue that sort of a system?

What is the remedy? What is the suggestion of a method of stopping it? This affords a reasonable and sensible plan. Here we have an arrangement by which we can learn what is the value of the railroads, and the commission can determine whether or not rates should be allowed, and when the railroads issue new bonds, whether the Government shall limit their bonds or not, the public will know whether the bonds are worth anything. The public will know whether the stock is worth buying. I can not understand how any well-informed Member can support this motion to strike the paragraph. At this time only 64 per cent of the stock of the railroads that is issued is paying dividends, and it is plain, as everybody knows, that they have increased the amount of their securities beyond all considerations of justice and equity.

Compare the situation in England with the German situation. A recent statement issued by Prof. Walther Lotz, an authority in Germany, says that the Prussian-Hesse railroads, which are valued to-day in truth at $5,000,000,000, are carried in the capitalization account of the German Government at only $2,000,000,000—in other words, 60 per cent less than their real value—and that another billion has been taken from the railroads as profits paid into the public treasury. In this country we do not follow that kind of a method. Here all the unearned increment, all the increase in value, as fast as it is realized, is issued in the form of paper stocks and bonds at the ratio of 2 or 3 to 1, on which all those who come after us must pay interest and must insure dividends. There have been 750 receiverships involving railroads and some 950 foreclosures. The money has gone in that way and in scandals and extravagance. We could forget all that, as I stated at the outset. We could put all that behind us if it were not for the fact that the coming 10 years will reveal the same kind of procedure, and we will get an ultimate $81,000,000,000 of capitalization, like England, if we do not stop it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, my judgment about this appropriation is that I do not believe that ultimately it is going to amount to any good to the people of this country who pay the freight. Judge Prouty, in his statement before the Appropriations Committee, said that there were 250,000 miles of single-line track and that there was 1 mile of siding for each mile of single track in the United States, which makes 500,000 miles of track. According to the calculation of my distinguished colleague from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], it would take over 21 years for these gentlemen finally to assess the physical valuation of all this property. At $3,000,000 a year, it will cost the people $63,000,000. Now, when we get through let us see what we shall have. In the saying of the street, "After you get it, what are you going to do with it?" Old Commodore Vanderbilt laid down a proposition away back yonder in the early days of railroading that is just as true to-day as it was then. When he was asked upon what he based his rates, he said: "I fix the rates on my line of road for every penny the traffic will bear." And they have been doing that ever since. Now, suppose you find the exact value of the physical railroad property. Is there a man within the sound of my voice, is there a man whom you ever heard or read of in your life, who could tell you the actual elements that enter into the making of a rate? If you have ever seen such a man, you have seen one that I have never been able to hear of. They do not know why they fix a rate of $1.05 to one point and $1.18 to another point, and there is not a railroad man in the world who could tell you why a certain rate is fixed. It is guesswork pure and simple, and it is for the people in their wisdom to say how long they will bear that kind of rates. The railroads are rapidly realizing that the time is at hand for them to come out in the open and deal with the people of this country fairly. I do not believe that the modern railroad directors are going to stand for any more "watered" stock propositions. They are finding out that the confidence of the people of this country will eventually be worth more to them than false profits upon questionable bond issues. My notion is they will never get unprejudiced treatment by the people or their representatives until they do.

In the wisdom of the court they have said that the burden of proof is on the railroad company, when the Interstate Commerce Commission fixed a rate, for them to show that that particular rate is not an unjust discrimination against the railroad.

Now, there is one element left out entirely in the valuation of railroad property, and that is a subject with which I have had something to do. The most valuable assets of the railroads in this country to-day are not their physical property; it is the value of their franchises, the right of exercising the power of eminent domain.

After you fix the physical valuation what have you got to do? You have got to appoint another commission or perpetuate this commission, for the Lord knows how long, to determine the value of the franchise of the railroad. Why? Because in many States of the Union the franchises of the public-utility corporations are subject to taxation just as the physical property of individuals is subject to taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to discuss at length this proposition. I should like to have the fact go into the RECORD that this does relate to the physical valuation; it relates to the valuation of the railroad property. This includes all property, of whatever nature or character. The title of the act upon which the valuation now in progress is based is "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof providing for a valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject thereto, and securing information concerning their stocks, bonds, and other securities." This law went into effect March 1, 1913, while we still had a Republican President and a Republican Senate.

This is a measure the people of the United States were in favor of, and no party nor any considerable portion of the people has suggested taking the people into their confidence on a proposition to either terminate this law or to suspend it by cutting out this appropriation. I think frankness would require that if the law is not regarded as a wise one it be terminated and not suspended.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] says that 10 years or more will elapse before this valuation is completed, and that part of the findings will then be obsolete. With that statement I do not agree. If they become obsolete when we are going through with all the speed possible, if we suspend work for one or two years, then those that have been made in the early stages at the end of the period will have become ancient history. Further, the bill provides for revision of valuations so that the early estimates will be brought up to date.

I do not believe that the suspension of this work by refusal of this appropriation would fail to meet rebuke by the people.

I appreciate the chivalry of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] in his attempted rescue of the National Treasury, as he states it. I find him so "rescuing the perishing" on frequent occasions, but will he not wait two years and then "care for the dying" [laughter], after which there will be an opportunity for replenishing our Treasury so that the ordinary functions of the Government may be provided. Then bankruptcy will not be the main subject for discussion in this House, as it necessarily has been during the last two years. Our balance in the Treasury has been going down from the 4th of March, 1913, to the present day at an average of $150,000 per day.

Permit me to further say that I do not think the plan so ably urged by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] in assisting the gentleman from Massachusetts, that we should let this valuation to the highest bidder would in any way relieve the Treasury. He asserts that $3,000,000 is a large sum. Yes, $3,000,000 is a good round sum to invest in any one year for any purpose. But the courts have fully established—and I shall ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD by quoting liberally from a recent Minnesota rate case—the fact that rates in the maximum must not be greater than a fair return on the valuation of the property which is engaged in performing the service, and that the minimum shall not be low enough to be confiscatory. It leaves only large questions of fact for the commission and courts to determine.

In the case of Simpson et al., constituting the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of the State of Minnesota against Shepard, found in the Two hundred and thirtieth United States Supreme Court Report, beginning on page 352, there will be found the following statements.

On page 355, as part of the syllabus, appears the following:

While the property of railroad corporations has been devoted to a public use, the State has not seen fit to undertake the service itself, and the private property embarked in it is not placed at the mercy of legislative caprice, but rests secure under the constitutional protection which extends not merely to the title but to the right to receive just compensation for the services given to the public.

For fixing rates the basis of calculation of value is the fair value of the property of the carrier used for convenience of the public. (Smyth v. Ames, 169, U. S., 466.)

There is no formula for the ascertainment of the fair value of property used for convenience of the public, but there must be a reasonable judgment having its basis in a proper consideration of all relevant facts.

On page 434 in the opinion the following appears:

In determining whether that right has been denied—

Right to receive just compensation for the service given to the public—

each case must rest upon its special facts. But the general principles which are applicable in a case of this character have been set forth in the decisions.

(1) The basis of calculation is the "fair value of the property" used for the convenience of the public. (Smyth v. Ames, supra, p. 546.) Or, as it was put in San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City (supra, p. 757), "What the company is entitled to demand, in order that it may have just compensation, is a fair return upon the reasonable value of the property at the time it is being used for the public." (See also San Diego Land & Town Co. v. Jasper, supra; Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co., supra.)

(2) The ascertainment of that value is not controlled by artificial rules. It is not a matter of formulas, but there must be a reasonable judgment having its basis in a proper consideration of all relevant facts. The scope of the inquiry was thus broadly described in Smyth v. Ames (supra, pp. 546–547), "In order to ascertain that value the original cost of construction, the amount expended in permanent improvements, the amount and market value of its bonds and stocks, the present as compared with the original cost of construction, the probable earning capacity of the property under particular rates prescribed by statute, and the sum required to meet operating expenses are all matters for consideration, and are to be given such weight as may be just and right in each case. We do not say that there may not be other matters to be regarded in estimating the value of the property. What the company is entitled to ask is a fair return upon the value of that which it employes for the public convenience. On the other hand, what the public is entitled to demand is that no more be exacted from it for the use of a public highway than the services rendered by it are reasonably worth."

In view of the foregoing the importance of this work of valuation must be reasonably apparent to all.

If a competent commission shall find those facts accurately and reduce them to a workable basis, a large service, worth many million dollars, will have been performed for the American people, railroad and shipper as well. [Applause.]

[Mr. SLOAN was granted leave to extend his remarks.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I intended my remarks to apply to an amendment which I shall offer, but the agreement as to time having made that impossible, I speak upon the question now. The old question arises as to the benefit that physical valuation of railroads will accomplish. Certainly if it is carried out, if they depend upon it to make rates, the rates will be double what they are now, because there is no question but that the valuation will be far in excess of that upon which the rates for freight and passengers are now based at the present time.

It is unfair to charge the President of the United States with interfering with the Interstate Commerce Commission. We all know that such a charge is absolutely incorrect and without a scintilla of proof. The statements made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], which he claims as evidence that has not been denied, are so absolutely absurd on their face that they require no denial. All American citizens, irrespective of party affiliations, hold the President and his office in the highest esteem, and it seems astounding to me that any Representative on the floor of this House should even intimate such a charge.

It is the same way with the Interstate Commerce Commission. In all of my charges against a portion of the commission, I never charged that they were unfaithful in the way of being influenced. I believe it is impossible to influence the Interstate Commerce Commission, but they have got the wrong theory, and the country arose at their outrageous treatment of the railroads in trying to drive them into bankruptcy by allowing such a low rate, and they had to change their decision. They heard the popular voice of the people, and it was opposed to them. In fact, if the Interstate Commerce Commission would give the railroads a fair rate to-day, they ought to have 10 per cent, and every shipper in the country would be in favor of it. It would bring us prosperity and double the business of the country. It would give more employees higher rates of wages. How can you expect the railroads to go on and increase the rates of wages of employees and reduce their rates on freight? Take the statistics from abroad. Our freight rates are one-third of what they are in Germany and England. I stated last year that a prominent statistician of this country would value the railroads in four years at $5,197,000.

If you are fair and you want a valuation and you want it promptly, give it by public letting to a statistician, at a stated amount, and let it be carried through. Commissioner Prouty, when he first appeared before the committee urging a physical valuation of the railroads, stated that it would cost a moderate amount, something like the amount asked by the commission for one year, but after he and his commission were appointed he states that he wants so many millions, and you should bear in mind that $3,000,000 is 2½ per cent on $120,000,000 a year. Just think of that—in one year! But next year he will probably want $5,000,000. What is he doing? Is he surveying this country for the purpose of building railroads? Why not buy the railroads outright? My theory is that this money is absolutely thrown away. It will not be for the benefit of improving the rates, because every State in the Union has a commission that already has a valuation of the railroads.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOWARD). The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. LEVY was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the motion to strike this item out of the appropriation bill, not only for the reasons already well stated, but for other reasons. Early in the last session of this Congress I introduced a resolution calling for an investigation of the financial affairs and the physical condition of the Rock Island Railway Co. Pursuant to action taken by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which the resolution was referred, this investigation was undertaken last fall by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, while the investigation is not yet complete, important facts have developed that are of great value to the public generally and of especial interest to all of the stockholders of that company. Based on information derived through this investigation one suit has already been commenced to recover $7,500,000, which was taken from the treasury of the railway company to pay losses sustained in the purchase of stocks and bonds of other railways. Other suits have also been commenced, all of them against the directors of this railway, to recover various sums appropriated, running into hundreds of thousands of dollars, among which I might mention one political contribution of $25,000, to which party I do not know, and also because of large transfers of stocks and bonds given to certain favored parties for much less than their real value.

As a further result of these investigations there has been a change in the management of this railway. It was controlled by what was called the Reid-Moore interests, which originated the plan of creating holding companies, which for so many years dominated the actions of this railway. All of the directors whose terms expire this year have now signified their intentions to retire under fire. Most prominent among them is Mr. Reid, perhaps the boss, as some gentlemen suggest, of the syndicates which have controlled that railroad.

But, Mr. Chairman, the Interstate Commerce Commission finds itself unable to go on with this investigation with reference to the physical condition of this railway, although it expects to finish the investigation into its financial affairs. It does not have time to go into the physical valuation of this railway under a separate commission or board, and it also has thought it would be a duplication of the work soon to be done under this appropriation in the way of physical valuation of all of the railroads of the country. This work, Mr. Chairman, is extremely important, not only for the purpose of ascertaining what is a proper and just rate to be charged for the shipment of freight, but also in order that the people may understand whether the railways are safe for the conveyance of passengers and whether they are rendering to the public the service which they ought to render. This is the only way in which this can be ascertained. This, as I think, is by no means the least important part of this physical valuation, and for that reason, as well as the others that have already been stated here, I am very much opposed to striking out this item.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the state of the time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has consumed 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois 35 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not see on the floor at the present moment any of the gentlemen to whom I had expected to yield, and if the gentleman from Illinois can use some of his time now I will endeavor to reach them at once, so as not to delay the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will yield myself three minutes. I would not be competent to make a railroad rate, yet I think I have given as much study to the legislative theory in reference to railroad rate making as anybody in the House, owing to the position which I occupied in committee for many years. Probably no one can tell just how railroad rates are made. I am rather inclined to the belief that they are mostly like Topsy—they have just growed. They are not based on the value of the property, and can not be, exclusively. There are eight or nine trunk lines which carry freight between Chicago and New York. The rates have to be the same on each, except on some of the lines that run away around about, and on these the rates are a trifle lower than they are on those that can carry the freight most cheaply straight across the country. One of those roads may have a valuation of $50,000 a mile, and the other might have a valuation of $75,000 a mile, but the rates would have to be the same; and yet it is impossible for anybody to make railroad rates without taking into consideration the value of the railroad property. We have reached the point under legislation where the courts have very little to say and the railroads not very much to say in reference to the rates. It is left to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Railroads can propose rates. The Interstate Commerce Commission determines the rate, and under the existing law they determine the rate in a way that usually can not be overturned by the courts. Well, it is a great problem to fix the railroad rates throughout the United States with the enormous value of freight that is carried by the roads. It strikes at the industrial prosperity of every portion of the country, and may affect the bankruptcy or profit of every industry and every business man, and hence it probably is desirable to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission all of the information which can be obtained which may influence the fixing of railroad rates. We have commenced the valuation of railroad property. I think it is highly desirable that we complete the valuation of railroad property as rapidly as possible. Gentlemen are in error who think that if the valuation be not completed for 10 years that it will then be obsolete and out of date, because under this law they are required to keep up to date the valuation of every railroad which they have previously valued.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I will take two more minutes. The term has been frequently referred to in the debate, "physical valuation of railroad property." That is not the language of the law. The language of the law is that they shall value all the property of the railroads. Now, whether the franchise is property or not I do not undertake to say. It may be that it is. If it be property, it is to be valued by this commission. Every item which is property is to be valued by the commission, and if franchises are property, then they are to be valued separately, so that the commission can or not, as they please, take that into consideration in determining the rate. The law is so drawn that those things will not be confusing, and hence in my judgment it would be very inadvisable, having commenced this work, having organized a force to carry it on, having found the need of the valuation of railroad property in a determination by the Interstate Commerce Commission of freight and passenger rates throughout the United States, it would be very inadvisable at this time to give this commission any less money than it can properly use during the next fiscal year. The sooner the work is completed the better, in my judgment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this debate has taken a very wide range. I have listened with considerable interest to gentlemen as they have traversed practically the entire field in reference to the physical valuation of railroads. The committee should not lose sight of the fact that two questions are pending before the committee for its determination—one, whether any appropriation shall be made to continue the work of the physical valuation of railroads, and the other whether the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations for $3,000,000 should be modified by substituting therefor $1,000,000. Before I discuss the propriety of appropriating $3,000,000 I wish to revert to some statements made earlier in the debate which seem now to have floated off on the tide with a lot of the other flotsam and jetsam that is usually injected into debates in this House.

The matter to which I wish to refer briefly was the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] that the Interstate Commerce Commission has been coerced by the President of the United States in the recent rulings in proceedings pending before the commission. I know of no more serious offense on the part of the Executive or on the part of members of the Interstate Commerce Commission than that suggested by the gentleman from Iowa. If the President of the United States has used his great power and influence to coerce the Interstate Commerce Commission into a decision which was not justified by the evidence upon which the commission would act, then the President should be impeached. If the Interstate Commerce Commission has been guilty of reaching a determination in a proceeding before it for the purpose of increasing railroad rates, and that decision has not been reached through the honest conviction of the commissioners upon the evidence, but rather through the persuasive or coercive powers of the Chief Executive of the country, the commissioners have demonstrated their full incapacity for their positions, and they should be impeached and removed from office. If I believed that either the President or the Interstate Commerce Commission were guilty of the offense alleged by the gentleman from Iowa, and if I had the slightest proof to justify that belief, I would think that I was under the compulsion of the highest obligation resting upon me as a Member of this House to move the impeachment of whichever officials had been guilty of this conduct. If I did not have sufficient proof to justify such a belief, I would not utter idle and unwarranted statements regarding their conduct. Nothing harms our entire system of government more than loose, unfounded, unsupported, and unjustifiable charges against those occupying high places in public service, and it is particularly incumbent upon members of a coordinate branch of the Government to be particularly careful not to indulge in statements which, if not direct charges, can only be construed as such charges against high officials, unless their statements are supported by evidence which will appeal to reasonable men as sufficient to justify such conclusions.

No one, of course, seriously believes that the President has attempted to coerce or persuade the Members of the Interstate Commerce Commission to render any decision upon any question pending before it in a way that the evidence does not justify. Not only has the President not attempted to use any influence he may possess to persuade the Interstate Commerce Commission not to render or to render a decision not justifiable by the evidence, but I will hazard the opinion that the President has not attempted to influence the Interstate Commerce Commission upon any question whatever; that he has permitted that commission to perform its duties and discharge the functions devolving upon it under the law without any attempt whatever to suggest or interfere with them in their work. It might be well to recall, Mr. Chairman, in connection with what has been said, if I remember correctly, that the application of the eastern railroads, as the matter is commonly designated, for an increase of rates had been pending for a very considerable time—my recollection is several years, although I may be mistaken—and a decision had been filed for a very considerable time; but after it was handed down another petition was submitted by those railroads, and evidence of conditions which did not exist at the time the original application was offered and submitted, and upon this additional evidence the commission rendered the decision of which complaint is made. So far as my observation goes, there was not any universal outcry or criticism of the commission for its action in granting the request of the railroads. On the contrary, it seemed to meet with the approbation of the people of the country. I am not sufficiently informed as to the facts to express an opinion upon the merits of the matter, and I would be content to acquiesce in the determination of the commission at this time. Now, this bill carries an appropriation of $3,000,000 to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry out the work providing for a physical valuation of the railroads of the country.

When it was first proposed that this work be undertaken, statements were made before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House to the effect that it could be completed for about $3,000,000 and be finished within three or four years. Later the statement was made that it would probably take $6,000,000 and probably occupy five years. After the bill was enacted into law, the Interstate Commerce Commission submitted estimates of the moneys required to carry on the work; and Commissioner Prouty, who had been designated to make an exhaustive investigation of the subject and to outline the program to be followed by the commission, presented his views of what the cost would be. He reached the conclusion that it would cost the United States at least $12,000,000, and in all probability the cost might be between $12,000,000 and $20,000,000. He stated that the Congress should not initiate the work if it was not prepared to spend at least $12,000,000.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. COOPER. According to my mathematics, if it would cost $25,000,000 to value $20,000,000,000, the alleged value of the railroad property, that would be only a little over a tenth of 1 per cent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not discussing that phase of it.

I want to point out what the situation was when Congress started this work—the information the Congress had. This information that was furnished to the Committee on Appropriations by Judge Prouty was stated by me upon the floor when the first or second appropriation was made. The first appropriation was $100,000, in the deficiency act of 1913. And then we appropriated $300,000 when $1,500,000 was requested; and then we appropriated $2,000,000 when $2,000,000 was requested. Now we are asked to appropriate $3,000,000, and we made this recommendation; but before we had expended any considerable sum of money the House was informed that, in the opinion of the men best qualified to judge, this valuation work, if undertaken, would have cost at least $12,000,000, and the cost within reasonable probabilities might reach $20,000,000; and he and myself informally agreed that it was more likely to reach $20,000,000. But those facts were stated to the House, so that the Members when voting to commence the work would have a full knowledge and understanding of what it was believed the work would cost if it were begun; and the work was begun by the appropriations, and the organization that was necessary to do the work was outlined and perfected, and the work has been carried on. Now it has reached the point where the organization has been perfected and the work is being carried on.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield.

Mr. MANN. Somebody stated a while ago that in the hearings Judge Prouty said that if the law was to be carried out according to its terms, valuing each piece of property separately, it would cost about twice what is now contemplated. Is that true?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That arose in this way: The law requires separate valuation upon each parcel of property of the railroad companies, if I recall correctly.

Mr. MANN. That is the term used. Just what does it mean?

Mr. FITZGERALD. For instance, the railroad is running through a stretch of open country. Judge Prouty's opinion is that it is easy to ascertain the value of an acre of land—an average value—and then take the entire holdings of the railroad right through a stretch of country, where you can fix an average price and put the value on it.

Mr. MANN. I think that is all the law contemplates.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some persons contend, however, that instead of doing that the commission must take each parcel as it was acquired in the condemnation proceedings and fix a separate value on that particular parcel, and if that policy were adopted it would increase immensely the work of valuation. But Judge Prouty expressed the opinion that when the commission had this matter placed before it and understood the situation exactly, it would very likely determine on the plan that he believed should be followed—that is, that the taking of the average acre value of land through a stretch of country and applying it was the proper and correct procedure to follow, and that the other method would be so impracticable and so unnecessarily time consuming and expensive it would not be expected to be followed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will notify the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that he has occupied 15 minutes. He has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the Chair to notify me when I have used five minutes more. That is all I want to use.

The organization has been perfected and there are parties out and work is going on. There is a certain overhead expense in connection with this work which will go on regardless of the speed with which other parts of the work is undertaken.

Now, the larger the force that is put in the field and that can be worked without increasing the overhead cost the cheaper this work will be done in the long run, and, secondly, the more quickly the work is completed, if it is to be completed, the more useful and beneficial the results will be. Now, unless the work is to be abandoned entirely, then it is the part of wisdom to conduct it as rapidly as it possibly can be conducted, because by so doing two things will be accomplished—the total cost will be reduced and the results will be more current and can be utilized to more advantage.

Now, that is the situation, Mr. Chairman. Congress passed the law in response to a great public sentiment. There was some difference of opinion about the advisability of enacting the law. After the law was enacted and the work was initiated, before any considerable sum of money had been expended, Congress was informed as to the probable cost. Two million four hundred thousand dollars have been appropriated and largely expended in the work. In my opinion, having gone so far, the country expects this work to be completed. It should settle some very important questions of vital interest to the people of the United States, and since it is under way and since it is desirable to complete it, I believe it should be completed as rapidly as it is possible to carry on the work. The Interstate Commerce Commission suggested that $3,000,000 be appropriated at this time. Judge Prouty thinks that perhaps more money than $3,000,000 can be used. I believe that we should keep the commission supplied with sufficient funds to enable the work to be carried to completion as speedily as possible, and once the work is done, to enable the solution of a number of questions troublesome both to Congress and to the people using public facilities generally. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] to strike this appropriation from the bill. I am opposed to the amendment of my colleague from New York [Mr. LEVY] to reduce the appropriation; and I am opposed to placing a limitation upon the commission as to the time within which the work is to be completed.

The commission is anxious to complete it as speedily as possible. I would not embarrass the commission by compelling it to attempt to complete the work within a definite period, unless the commission itself is prepared to say it can be done within that period.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, the law contemplates that after the work of making the contemplated valuation is completed, the information shall be kept current by constantly continuing investigations and accountings, so that the valuation will not be obsolete in a certain time, but will be kept current and available for use at all times. And if that is to be done, then the work will never in effect be completed. The great bulk of the work will be done, but certain moneys must be expended every year in order to keep the valuations current. I hope both amendments will be defeated.

Mr. MANN. I yield the rest of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who have opposed this amendment have in the main followed one of two lines. They have either adopted the policy which one of the professors at the law school told us as students, "When you have a bad case, attack the counsel on the other side," or else they have indulged in mere praise of the usefulness of appraising the value of railroads. Now, at the very outset I admitted the value of that. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], to be sure, tried to extort or distort from what I had said the intimation that I did not approve it. I recognize that it is valuable. I do not see how anyone can question that in framing rates it would help the Interstate Commerce Commission to know the valuation. But when we are deciding upon whether we will expend money in private life we always consider what we are going to get for it, and whether the amount of money we are going to spend will be compensated by the value of what we are getting. And so it seems to me in this case, admitting as everybody must, that it is valuable to know what these railroads cost and what they are worth, yet that value may be acquired at a greater expense than will be compensated by the result.

You can not say it is so valuable that we should have it, no matter what it may cost. And, moreover, when we are purchasing a thing we also consider the state of our pocketbook. And to-day, in determining how much we will spend, it seems to me we ought to consider what we have in the Treasury. When we first passed this law we had no idea it was going to cost any such sum as we are told to-day it will cost. Obviously, by what Judge Prouty told us at this session, it is going to cost at least $20,000,000 to make the valuation, and at the present rate that the Interstate Commerce Commission suggests that it should go on, we are not going to get it in less than 8 or 10 years from now. So the postponement of one year is not a very serious proposition. And then, in addition to that, as the gentleman says, if we are going to carry out the purposes of the law and find valuations, there is an additional expense of $15,000,000. And then, if they are to add what the gentleman from Illinois says they ought to do, and keep their valuations current all the time as they go along, that is going to cost another vast sum. And then there is the additional sum which it is costing the railroads.

So it seems to me that the mere fact that this is of great value, as every one must admit, is not necessarily conclusive that we should make the appropriation for it at this time. And the one argument on which I base my motion, and on which I stand now, is that the Treasury of the United States at the present time forbids us to appropriate for anything except necessities. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has pointed out, this is not a necessity. Valuation is not even the most important element in determining rates. Between here and New York there are two lines of railroad—the Baltimore & Ohio and the Pennsylvania. One may have cost twice as much as the other, but when you know the cost of them you are not going to determine the rates upon that alone. For the next eight years we have got to get along in fixing rates without this valuation; we are doing it now; and, to my mind, the Treasury, owing to the circumstances which I have explained before, is not in a condition to allow the United States to spend anything except for necessities. I believe this is not a necessity, but a luxury, which can be postponed one year. I will admit that if it is stopped now I do not believe it will begin next year again, because I do not believe that side of the House will provide us sufficient revenue the following year to enable us to indulge ourselves in luxuries. We will have to await another administration for that. But it seems to me here is an expense which we can defer. Therefore on account of the condition of our finances we ought to postpone it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman used five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I waive the remainder of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman waives his time. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has a very peculiar idea of the duty of Congress at this time. I commend his newly awakened zeal in the interest of economy, and I only hope it may prove contagious on that side of the House. But I think the manly thing to do in connection with this particular appropriation is either to repeal the law, on the ground that we do not believe in doing the work that the law provides shall be done, or else make the requisite appropriation for doing it in decency and in order, and not undertake to kill by indirection what has been the expressed will of Congress.

When we passed the bill I had no delusions as to the cost of this work. I think the hearings first had by the committee after the law was enacted will show that I then stated that the cost would run very, very much greater than had been originally estimated. And I think men who had thought at all about the matter were of that opinion. But I have not yet convinced myself that the work is not worth doing, and I certainly do not believe that this House would be warranted in refusing the appropriation to continue it without having first considered the basic proposition whether they desire the law which directs it to be done kept on the statute books.

But I did not arise, Mr. Chairman, to speak entirely of that phase of the question. The debate has taken a wide range this morning, and some things have been said that make me desire to say some words in response.

I have served in this body 12 years. I believe I have as high a respect for the dignity of Congress as any man can have. There is nothing that will serve to increase the respect in which the Congress of the United States is held by the people of America that I will not gladly promote. But during these 12 years I have been impressed with the fact that there are constant criticisms of the Executive by Members in this body and constant expressions of the decline of this body because of what men are pleased to call the usurpations of the Executive.

I believe that a reading of history will show that there has never been a strong President of the United States, one who had and maintained the confidence and affection of the people of America, that has not been constantly assailed on the ground of executive usurpation. Read over the history of illustrious men who have occupied the White House and you will find those who are held in the dearest memory by the people of America are those who were of a positive character, men who had the courage of their convictions and who properly used their high office to carry out those convictions.

The power of the President of the United States to do good is limited only by his ability. The power of the President of the United States to do evil is almost negligible. Let any man, an occupant of the White House, lose the confidence of the people of America, no matter what he may endeavor to do in the way of usurpation or otherwise, his ability to accomplish becomes absolutely negligible. We need only to refer back very briefly in order to have a striking illustration of that fact.

I am somewhat amused by gentlemen who sat silent in other days now undertaking to inveigh against the present President of the United States because of what they assume is executive usurpation on his part. Let me say this to you: I believe that when any man in the House of Representatives or in the Senate of the United States can be controlled against his deliberate judgment as to his duty touching matters within the field of his obligations it is a good thing for the country when such a man is controlled. In other words, any man so lacking in courage, so lacking in stamina, that he is willing to surrender his real convictions upon matters is a man whose judgment is of so little value that he needs to be led, and when he is led it is in the interest of the people of America.

Statements are constantly made here that have no foundation in fact—the statement which was made by the gentleman from Iowa, touching the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and then the gentleman from Wyoming undertaking to say that, while he had no evidence, he had sufficient ideas as to the character and personality of the President of the United States to have his own conclusion that there had been influence upon that distinguished body, the Interstate Commerce Commission, are, to my mind, wholly unwarranted. The President of the United States may or may not have expressed an opinion touching the rates, and whether they were too low or too high. If he did, he was well within his rights. But there is no man with any consideration for honesty of expression who is willing to say that there was wrongful influence brought upon that commission by the President of the United States or by anybody else. This country had an agitation for months as to whether or not there should or should not be an increase in rates. Testimony had been adduced, and outside of that testimony there had been many articles written and much said in the public prints and elsewhere; and yet, so far as any man knows or has any right to say, that case was heard upon its merits and decided upon its merits. The fact that the commission saw fit to review its previous action no more justifies a criticism being leveled at it than it would if any court reversed its former decision.

I am not at all fearful of the domination of the Executive in America. I am not at all fearful of the decline of the Congress of the United States as an institution. Individual Congresses may decline or may not, according to the personality of the men that make up the body, but the Congress of the United States will be respected in just the proportion that the action of the Members in this body cause it to be entitled to respect. I repeat that I have nothing but contempt for the man who on the floor or in the cloakroom talks about Congress being overawed by the Executive and that he is forced to do something against his will. Whenever the time comes when I feel that I have not courage enough to express my own judgment on matters properly coming before me and that I am willing to surrender to the dictation of some one else, then I shall hope to have at least enough remaining courage to resign and let some man with real red blood in his veins take my place in the Congress of the United States.

I think this Congress would do itself infinitely more credit if it were careful of its own action, to see to it that its own action was always such as to meet the approval of the people, instead of undertaking to go out of its way in criticism of the executive branch of the Government. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto. The amendment of the gentleman from New York having been withdrawn, the Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph beginning on line 8, page 49, down to the end of line 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BRYAN) there were—ayes 13, noes 89.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert quotation marks after the word "securities" in line 15, page 49. It is the description of an act, and the quotation marks are left out by mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I call up my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. LEVY. I withdrew it so as to permit a vote on the other amendment. I desire to offer the amendment again.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out line 21, on page 49, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$1,000,000, and said valuation shall be completed within four years."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEVY) there were—ayes 2, noes 57.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 8 to 21, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Valuation of property of carriers: The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to advertise for bids from financial experts for the purpose of carrying out the objects of the act providing for a valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce and amendments thereto, and to secure information concerning their stocks, bonds, and other securities, and to award the contract to the lowest bidder. Said valuation shall be completed within four years and shall not exceed $5,197,000; and to enable said commission to carry out the provisions of this section there is hereby appropriated $1,000,000. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this section are hereby repealed."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all authorized expenditures under the provisions of the act of February 17, 1911, "To promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," including such stenographic and clerical help to the chief inspector and his two assistants as the Interstate Commerce Commission may deem necessary, and for per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, $220,000.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There has been quite a discussion going on in this country, especially in the newspapers, on account of the incident of a British merchant ship raising the American flag. This morning I am in receipt of a letter from one of my constituents, who was a lieutenant in the United States Navy during the Spanish-American War. The information contained in that letter is so important that I feel that every Member of the House, as well as the people of the United States, will be interested in knowing what he has to say. I therefore send the letter to the desk and ask that it be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

NEW YORK, February 9, 1915.

DEAR MR. BROWNING: As I am a voter in your district, I thought the following would interest you:

During the War with Spain I was the senior watch officer of the U. S. S. Resolute. We were on the blockade off Santiago in the early part of the war, and were ordered to Tampa to load ammunition for Admiral Sampson's fleet. We rounded Cape Maysi and steamed to the westward. We could see the semaphores of the blockhouses along the coast signaling our approach, as there was at that time no telegraph lines, the cable being cut. The late Rear Admiral Eaton (then Capt. Eaton) was in command of the ship, and to deceive the Spaniards we hoisted the British naval ensign and sailed under it all day. We were only armed with four 6-pounder rapid-fire guns, and we knew there were several Spanish torpedo gunboats on the coast. Sure enough, in spite of our war ruse, we were attacked by three small Spanish torpedo gunboats in the Bahama Channel just at nightfall, and only escaped by superior speed. We brought the news of the attack to Tampa and were corroborated by Rear Admiral Sutherland (then Lieut. Sutherland). This news kept the troops in the transports at Tampa back three days, until it was known that there were no larger vessels in the Spanish squadron. (This was the so-called phantom fleet.)

I afterwards, at the close of the war, saw the three torpedo boats in Habana Harbor, when we took the Evacuation Commission to Habana in the Resolute. So we have used the British flag as a ruse of war, and it was perfectly legitimate.

Sincerely,

CHAS. S. BRADDOCK, Jr.,
Late Lieutenant, United States Navy.

Home address: Haddonfield, Camden County, N. J.

The Clerk read as follows:

The space now occupied by the Bureau of Corporations in the building rented for use of the Department of Commerce is transferred to and for the accommodation of the Federal Trade Commission, and the Secretary of Commerce is directed to transfer to said commission any additional rooms or space in said building that may be required for its use.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. That paragraph directs the Secretary of Commerce to transfer to the Trade Commission any additional rooms or space which that commission may require, practically, for its use. Is it not sufficient to say "authorized"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee thought that the word "directed" was the better word to use. It is intended for one year only. The committee intends to look into the matter.

Mr. MANN. I do not know who would decide what would be required, but the Federal Trade Commission might have the swelled head, as most commissions do that are created, and they might want a great deal more space than could properly be given to them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There would not be any danger of that, I think.

Mr. MANN. Very well; I will not raise the question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee intends to inquire into the matter.

Mr. MANN. But you can not inquire into it after it becomes a law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a fact that all of the present space in the Commerce Building is now occupied, and if they wish larger quarters would they not crowd out some of the others?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was the idea at first, but the committee is of the opinion that there is much more space than is really required. We will take that up later.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. How is the committee going to take it up later?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee intends to take the matter up before this bill becomes a law.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I wish again to say a word to call the attention of the House to the location of the Department of Commerce on Pennsylvania Avenue at Nineteenth Street NW., in rented quarters, notwithstanding the fact that the Government of the United States has for years owned a site that was purchased expressly for the purpose of erecting upon it a building for the Department of Commerce. Although we own that beautiful site facing the park south of the Treasury, suddenly a 10-year lease is executed by which the Government rents a building at the corner of the Avenue and Nineteenth Street for this department and leaves that site vacant. I call attention also to the site where it is proposed to locate the new Interior Department, a department visited more frequently by Senators and Representatives on public business than is any other department—two or three blocks the other side of the State, War, and Navy Building, on F Street—alone, isolated, awkward to reach, not related at all to any other Government building, and not in accordance with the plans for the improvement of the city of Washington.

These buildings all ought to have been located in accordance with the plan for the improvement of Washington, because unless we do locate these buildings in accordance with that plan, it will be said, whether justly or not, that there is real estate speculation and graft in the location of public buildings at these outlandishly inconvenient places. People will not be apt in any other way to account for the location of these buildings. I have never been able to ascertain why we should take a 10-year lease on a privately constructed building at the corner of Nineteenth Street and the Avenue, where nobody ever dreamed a departmental building would be located, when we had a site on which to put the structure a great deal better located and much more convenient, facing a park. Of course I withdraw the amendment; I only desired to call attention to something which it is time to stop.

The Clerk read as follows:

Estimates in detail for all expenditures under the Federal Trade Commission for the fiscal year 1917, and annually thereafter, shall be submitted to Congress in the annual Book of Estimates.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, in renting buildings in the District of Columbia it must be remembered that the rent would depend very much upon the location of the building. If the building is located in a business section, the rate per square foot is very much higher than if it were located outside of the business section. The authorization for the three buildings referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin provided a building for the Department of State, a building for the Department of Justice, and a building for the Department of Commerce and Labor. The law has not been changed so as to permit the construction of a separate building for the Department of Commerce. One reason, perhaps, why these buildings have not been advanced as rapidly as the gentleman would desire is the character of the plans of the buildings. A few years ago it came to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations that plans had been drawn for the Department of State building. They had been approved by the Secretary of State. The plans included provisions for a great banquet hall, suites of living apartments, and a kitchen and serving room. An investigation disclosed that some one had come to the conclusion that if the representatives of royalty or distinguished members of noble families of other countries should visit this country it would be highly improper to have them contaminated by that association with the ordinary American citizen which would result from providing accommodations for them in some hotel in the city of Washington. It was proposed to have several royal or regal suites in that building for the Department of State, so that when a representative of some virile or effete monarchy of Europe came to this country with his train or suite or entourage, instead of being provided with accommodations at one of the more or less palatial hostelries in the city of Washington every precaution would be taken to avoid the contamination that might result from coming in contact with the democracy of America, and he and his suite would be escorted with great pomp and installed during his more or less lengthy sojourn in Washington in these palatial and sumptous quarters in the Department of State building.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In just a moment. I was somewhat surprised when this information was divulged. I almost said it was somewhat shocking to me, but I have reached that point in legislative life when it would be difficult for any action of certain officials in the executive departments to shock me. When I thought of what might happen to Members of the legislative body who would have acquiesced in such a scheme and appropriated money for these quarters and thereby put their approval upon such a proposition—that it might in some way harm or injure the representative of royalty or the distinguished scion of some of the noble families of the old and effete world to rub elbows with an ordinary democratic citizen who had the means of permanently sojourning at one of these hotels or had that independence of spirit that would permit him merely to pass through one of them—I thought that there was little likelihood of Congress approving such plans. Such a protest was made that the scheme was abandoned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say that while the plans came to the committee, they never got any further. I could very easily picture what would have happened to any committee that brought a bill in here for the erection of a public building in which were the facilities I have outlined. In my opinion we had better use public funds in paying rent for distinctly office buildings, where, even if the temptation existed, an invitation that these distinguished personages should be housed there during their stay in Washington, would be refused.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, the committee will observe that the distinguished gentleman from New York failed to refer to the rented building at the Avenue and Nineteenth Street now occupied by the Department of Commerce, but talked about an alleged plan for a building for the Department of State, a subject that had not even been touched upon during this discussion. He will not pretend that there were dining-room facilities or any other facilities provided for the "scions of effete monarchy," as he termed them, in the plans made for the Department of Commerce Building which it was proposed to erect facing the park on Fifteenth Street near Pennsylvania Avenue.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; if the gentleman will permit, that was a building for the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman said the Department of State.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was speaking about the Department of State Building, but the other building was for the Department of Commerce and Labor; and since that time that department has been divided and two departments created, and Congress has never determined which of the two departments is entitled to the building that was authorized.

Mr. COOPER. Oh, well, Congress will have ample time to decide which department shall have it, because there is a 10-year lease of the building at the corner of the Avenue and Nineteenth Street. It will be years before Congress will have an opportunity to decide that. The 10-year lease of that building in that out-of-the-way place postpones the decision indefinitely. That is a chief point in this controversy. As to the hall of which the gentleman speaks in the proposed Department of State building, I know nothing; but have heard that it was intended to be used for international conferences and arbitrations, it being thought that the United States of America—the greatest Republic the world has ever known—would be the ideal country and the city of Washington the ideal place in which to hold such meetings of representatives of the nations.

I believe it was thought also that possibly some of the money annually appropriated to the State Department for the care and entertaining of distinguished visitors from abroad might well be used for such purpose in a building that would itself be in keeping with the dignity of the Government. I am sure that the gentleman from New York is mistaken in saying, as he did say, that the proposed building was to be so constructed in order to prevent the scions of royalty from rubbing elbows with those whom the gentleman called "common Democrats," a description that, of course, includes my friend from New York, who, I assume, is proud to call himself a "common Democrat."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not any special kind of a Democrat. I am just a Democrat.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman would not want to be called an uncommon Democrat?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; just a Democrat; neither a reactionary, common or uncommon, ordinary or extraordinary, good or bad. I am just a Democrat.

Mr. BROCKSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. BROCKSON. Did the Government contract for the lease of property at Pennsylvania Avenue and Nineteenth Street for quarters for the Department of Commerce——

Mr. COOPER. It did.

Mr. BROCKSON. Before the building was constructed or afterwards?

Mr. COOPER. I understand that the lease was contracted for before the building was started. Secretary Nagel managed it, and now the department is out there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He got authority to make the contract before the building would be built.

Mr. COOPER. Exactly; and that is the kind of Government contract making which Congress ought to stop just as soon as it is possible to stop it. Had the proposition for that long lease been fully, clearly presented to the Members of the House, it would have been overwhelmingly defeated, for nobody then would have thought of locating a great Government department away out at Nineteenth Street.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All the information was before Congress.

Mr. COOPER. I knew nothing about it until all was done. I hear the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] saying that we ought to be onto the job. If the gentleman was on the job and did not protest against locating a department in that remote place, he ought to apologize to the House.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman from North Carolina did know it. He has been, I think, in the Bureau of Commerce one time since they went into that building. I have many other things to occupy my time rather than spending it in these department buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAY). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. To make a bad matter worse, the proposed new building for the Department of the Interior is to be put on F Street, two or three blocks west of the State, War, and Navy Building. And yet it is the department most frequently visited by Members on public business. Does any gentleman believe that if the Members of the House had been fully informed and had their attention called specifically to it as an original, independent proposition, they would ever have voted to locate the great Interior Department in that hidden, out-of-the-way place? Here at my left is a gentleman who answers, "No; never." Of course not. But the provision was well toward the end of a long bill, as I found by hunting it up, and it went through. Here is another gentleman who says that he knew nothing whatever about it. I do not think 5 per cent of the House knew that anybody had even suggested that absurd location.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have said that very few Members know what is in the bill except the items in which they are interested. They do not care about anything as long as they get what they want.

Mr. COOPER. The public buildings should be located with the view to the convenience of the public and the convenience of the Senate and the House, whose membership have frequently to visit them on business for their constituents. Moreover, they should be located in accordance with the plan for the improvement of the city of Washington, so that they will not only serve the public convenience and interests, but also help to make the city what it ought to be, a handsome national capital. But to take these great department buildings and put them off in out-of-the-way, unseen localities, without any reference to each other, will entirely prevent an orderly carrying out of the plan for the improvement of the city. And especially will it prevent a rebuilding of the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue. We hear it frequently said that Pennsylvania Avenue is the handsomest street in the country. It is not. A large portion of it is far from handsome, far from worthy to be a part of the great thoroughfare between the White House and the Capitol of the Nation. Two-thirds of its distance there is practically nothing about it to commend except its width. That is all. Junk shops, auction houses, old, tumble-down buildings, secondhand stores, hand-me-downs of all kinds! And it will never be improved as it ought to be improved if Congress is to locate the Government buildings, as it is now proposed to locate this new building of the Department of the Interior, out of sight, in remote, inconvenient, inaccessible places, and without even the slightest reference to any plan for the improvement of the city.

Mr. ESCH. Does my colleague know that there is a picket fence on the south side of the Avenue between the Capitol and the post-office building?

Mr. COOPER. No.

Mr. ESCH. There is.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York tell what provision is made in this appropriation for printing reports?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is carried in the printing appropriation, $15,000.

Mr. MOORE. That is separate, then, from the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. MOORE. I make that inquiry because we just had an appropriation for the Industrial Board of Mediation and Conciliation and Commission on Industrial Relations. With respect to the Commission on Industrial Relations, I understand that no provision has been made for printing the voluminous reports that are to be expected from that body, and which has been having hearings for two and one-half years?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They do not expect to make any voluminous reports, I understand.

Mr. MOORE. What is the purpose of the commission, then?

Mr. FITZGERALD. To make reports and print certain digests of testimony.

Mr. MOORE. Appropriations have been made up to date for this Industrial Relations Commission approximating $500,000. That is a pretty large sum for digests of testimony.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The appropriations, all told, aggregate $350,000, and this makes $450,000.

Mr. MOORE. So long as we are on this subject, will the gentleman tell us whether in the $100,000 appropriated in this bill to the Industrial Relations Commission provision is made for the printing of any reports at all, or will there be?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This provides that they shall do their printing out of the appropriation or out of whatever money they have on hand.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, this Industrial Relations Commission was established by law less than three years ago. It will expire in August next. It was appointed without any special authority under the law, except to inquire as to the differences between capital and labor, the differences between rich men and poor men, and $100,000 was given to it for the first year of its work. When the bill was in the House the present Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, who fathered it, stated that the commission was not to have any power to settle controversies, and that its only purpose was to inquire into the differences existing between capital and labor, and that it would report to Congress. It has been operating for two and one-half years, and the appropriations for continuing it have grown until approximately a half million dollars have been spent to send this handful of men and one woman into various cities of this country to drag people from their offices and their workshops to tell them what they know; and, although this testimony has been taken stenographically, we find from the testimony of the chairman of the commission before the Committee on Appropriations that the commission has not printed any reports, that it does not expect to print any reports, and that it is going to leave it to Congress to find the money to print anything Congress may want of the testimony that has been taken. Now, the commission having been at work for two and a half years, going into various cities, being heralded by the newspapers, and having this testimony taken stenographically, it is to be presumed that a vast amount of copy has been accumulated; but the chairman of the commission appears before the Committee on Appropriations and blandly says that it is up to Congress to do what it pleases—print the testimony or not.

Mr. COX. How have they spent this enormous sum of money, then?

Mr. MOORE. They have spent it in hiring professors and assistants and gentlemen familiar with the labor situation to go around the country and work up theories; they have employed people in various ways, and they have got them on their staff. They have taken learned men from the colleges—men who have hobbies—and they have put them at work; and, if some of the reported utterances of the chairman of this commission are correct, it would appear that the general disposition is to spend this money in the propagation of ideas and theories based very largely upon what is known as modern socialism. The trend has been toward proving the advisability of Government ownership; and after this vast amount of money has been spent the chairman of the commission tells the committee that if Congress wants anything in the way of printed matter it is at liberty to go ahead and pay for it. I thought it well to discuss this matter in the presence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], as it relates to the new Trade Commission. Since this seems to be an era of commissions, it might be well when appropriations are made in lump sums for commissions to take testimony and assume to gather information for the benefit of Congress, that they save enough money out of the appropriations allotted to them to print the necessary reports that Congress authorizes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course, the Federal Trade Commission is a different character of body. It is a permanent institution, and its appropriations will be upon an annual basis, and the appropriations for its printing will be made the same as the appropriations for the printing of all other governmental establishments—annually—and the appropriation is carried under the Government Printing Office item, where all other appropriations for printing should be carried.

Mr. MOORE. When Mr. Walsh, the chairman of the commission, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] asked him:

> Do you mean that out of this $40,000 you do not expect to pay for the printing of your investigation?
> Mr. WALSH. We have not.
> Mr. GILLETT. That represents practically the entire usefulness of the reports, does it not?
> Mr. WALSH. Yes; I supposed that the Congress had some way of providing for that.

Later on, being pressed by Mr. SHERLEY as to why they did not do any printing or did not make any reservation for printing these reports, Mr. Walsh said:

> I am perfectly willing to tell it to you now. I thought the Congress had the entire option, and I thought I was allowing them to exercise that option very freely.

He thought he was "allowing" Congress to exercise the option freely of spending whatever money it was desired to spend to print the reports after the commission had taken the testimony.

A little while later Mr. Walsh said, under pressure from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]:

> If that was my duty, Mr. SHERLEY, I have been very remiss in it, because, while I am prepared to tell you what we have and what ought to be printed, I have never contemplated the idea of having estimates made as to the cost of the printing.

A little later on the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] said:

> And how could we proceed on any other theory? I am surprised that it could be conceivable that it was not necessary to give us that information.

Our $500,000 Industrial Commission, through Mr. Walsh, answered:

Here is exactly what I thought about it: I supposed—in fact, it had been stated to me; I have had no previous experience with the Government and have not, of course, served in Congress and have not followed such matters, because Mr. BORLAND, who is sitting there, has naturally kept all the rest of us out of Congress. My idea was this, that if you wanted anything printed there was some way of having it ordered printed in Congress, so that we did not have to take cognizance of it in our appropriations.

A little later on Mr. Walsh suggests that the job was a very interesting one. Being pressed again by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], who said—

You might just as well finish April 1, or to-morrow, or 10 years from now—

Mr. Walsh answered:

Yes; the people who promoted this legislation just arbitrarily concluded that the job would take three years. You could go on with the job for 300 years. It is a constantly changing thing.

Being willing to spend $500,000 of the people's money on a three years' job, Mr. Walsh says he could go on for 300 years; that the thing is constantly changing.

Then we come down to the point where Mr. Walsh gives one view that perhaps he might have given earlier—and I think this is the principal recommendation we are going to get from the commission:

I think that there ought to be some permanent body on industrial relations.

What else would a commission recommend that has traveled about the country for two and a half years at the Government's expense and been heralded everywhere as investigators on behalf of the Government, to the extent that John D. Rockefeller and Andrew Carnegie have fallen at their feet and confessed the secret of their wealth? If such a commission could obtain $500,000 for work like this in three years, why not make it permanent? But I trust the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will see the wisdom of inducing such commissions hereafter to save enough money out of their appropriations to pay for what it is necessary to print for the information of Congress.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, the law under which this Industrial Commission was appointed was enacted in 1912. It provides, among other things, section 3, as follows:

That said commission may report to Congress its findings and recommendations and submit the testimony taken from time to time, and shall make a final report, accompanied by the testimony not previously submitted, not later than three years after the date of the approval of this act.

So by the terms of the law, Mr. Chairman, it was left discretionary with the commission from time to time to report the testimony as it might be taken, but at the end of the hearings all of the testimony not previously reported must be filed with the final report of the commission. This is not left discretionary with Mr. Walsh nor with anybody else. I recall distinctly, as every gentleman will who was a Member of the House at that time, the very earnest debate on the bill to create this commission. The Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, was then a Member of the House, and strongly advocated the measure. If I may make a personal reference, I insisted on the provision requiring the commission to report the testimony. I have not consulted the report of the debate since that time, but I remember very well of my saying, in substance, that for Congress and the people to judge of the value of the recommendations of the commission it would be necessary for them to know the testimony upon which the recommendations were based. And if I am not mistaken, it was my amendment that was accepted by the present Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, then a Member from Pennsylvania, which put that provision into the statute.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Has the gentleman looked over the testimony of Mr. Walsh, given before the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. COOPER. No.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Walsh says he does not contemplate the printing of the testimony—he leaves that to Congress. He does not contemplate printing the testimony even of the specialists that have gone out of the colleges to work out these theories.

Mr. COOPER. It may be that Mr. Walsh did not have the copy of this mandatory law before him when he made that statement.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, the law does not require the commission to submit their report and testimony in print. The law does not say the commission shall print the testimony in advance. I have no doubt that Congress will print it.

Mr. COOPER. By remarks made here the impression was created that there will be no way for Congress to know the testimony. But if the commission submit a typewritten report of all the testimony they have taken, Congress will have access to it and will undoubtedly order it printed. But it would not be able to learn about the testimony if this mandatory provision had not been inserted in the law. Of course the commission will not submit the stenographic notes of the testimony because Congress could not read them, but they will submit a typewritten report, we will know what is in it, and order it to be printed.

Now, I do not agree with the criticisms nor with the innuendo and sarcasm in the allusions made here to the Commission on Industrial Relations. I think that commission, while it may have made some mistakes—its members are human, as we all are—has been engaged in a work and has carried it out so thoroughly and well that it will result in great benefit to the country. [Applause.]

They have taken the testimony of miners, the testimony of women workers and of girl workers, the testimony of old men and of young men, poor men and rich men, people engaged in all of the principal occupations known to the United States. They have subjected these witnesses to rigid examination. They have permitted them to bring in written statements embodying their respective views and to have these printed in newspapers and circulated broadcast; and I have little doubt that their report and the accompanying testimony will contain the most suggestive and, in many respects, important statement of facts and opinions ever submitted to the Congress of the United States.

The subjects under consideration by the commission are of the very greatest significance. Never before in the history of the Republic have conditions begun to crowd as they are now crowding. The great frontier has all vanished. Men can no longer relieve congestion in cities by going across invisible State lines into unoccupied lands in the West. The frontier has been carried over the Missouri, over the Rockies to the golden shores of the Pacific, and now population has commenced to crowd just as it has long been crowding in the countries of Europe. The same problems are coming upon us. Human nature here does not differ from human nature across the sea.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it just thus to assail a commission which has not yet reported, composed of men and women of the character, reputation, and ability of those who compose this industrial commission. There are persons who sneer simply because this commission has been investigating the conditions existing between capital and labor or because it dares to inquire into the origin of strikes or because it has put the widows of miners killed in Colorado on the witness stand and heard their story. Perhaps these women did not tell the truth, but they were entitled at least to have their story heard. They have told it and I have seen no intimation that anybody who heard them doubted their word. One of those women swore that she saw a militiaman with a torch in his hand set fire to the tents which housed the families of strikers, and another woman swore that in that fire three of her children were smothered to death. It does no harm to hear testimony of that kind, for if it be not true its falsity can be easily demonstrated. But if it be true——

The men who own the mines have also given testimony most important for us to read.

Others besides the commission have been busy. I received circulars purporting to give the facts of that strike. They were written by a man who lives, I believe, in Philadelphia. He was called by the commission and compelled to admit, and did admit, that a circular which he wrote contained falsehoods which seriously reflected upon some of those men. That circular was sent to Representatives in Congress ostensibly for the purpose of acquainting them with the facts of the strike, but instead it contained a very harmful falsehood.

It is well enough to let people who can not employ investigators for themselves have Congress send investigators to learn and report the facts. This commission had on the stand Mr. Carnegie, Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. George Perkins, and many others of the great capitalists of the country. Their testimony was of extraordinary interest. Congress and the country will know their viewpoint and what they think ought to be done. We will read with care what they suggest as remedies for our pressing and perplexing and troublesome conditions. All of this information ought to come to Congress and go to the country. If there are ways of remedying conditions, now exceedingly threatening, it is the part of wisdom for us to have the facts upon which to base possible remedial legislation. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Benicia Arsenal, Benicia, Cal.: For increasing facilities for fire protection, $10,000.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 52, line 11, after the figures "$10,000," insert:
"For increasing storage facilities, $25,000; for increasing the water-supply system, $20,000: In all $55,000."

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, Gen. Crozier, the Chief of Ordnance, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and urged that these two items be included in the bill. He said they were necessary for the protection and for the proper care and handling of the valuable United States property at the Benicia Arsenal, but for some reason best known to themselves the committee ignored his recommendation. It must be borne in mind that the Benicia Arsenal is a depot of supplies for one-third of continental United States, and also for Alaska, the Sandwich Islands, and the Philippine Islands. Last year over 30,000 packages were shipped from the Benicia Arsenal, weighing in all over 5,000,000 pounds. On October 28, 1912, a fire occurred at the Benicia Arsenal and destroyed the storehouse. Since that time we have been unable to do anything to secure action toward the rehabilitation of the arsenal or the construction of a new storehouse. Last year at the last session $15,000 was appropriated to put a roof on one story of the old storehouse, but that does not give storage room sufficient to care for the valuable property that is always on storage at the Benicia Arsenal. About four years ago Col. Ruggles, who at that time was the commandant of the Benicia Arsenal, called the attention of the department to the danger from fire in that storehouse. The building was of stone, but the interior was finished in wood. It was a tinder box. Col. Ruggles stated that at any moment a fire might occur that would destroy a million dollars worth of property belonging to the United States. He requested that $8,000 be appropriated to install an automatic sprinkler system in the storehouse, but the committee, as usual, was economical and refused to appropriate that money for a sprinkler system.

In about six months afterwards, to be exact, on October 28, 1912, a fire did occur. There was no adequate fire protection, and $1,622,000 worth of United States property was destroyed. The storage facilities are not adequate to care for the valuable property at that arsenal. A great deal of it is exposed to the weather. We have not sufficient fire protection there. The water system should be extended, and I thought it was my duty, not only as a Member of Congress from the third district, but also as a citizen, to call the attention of Congress to the conditions there, so that if anything should happen and more property be destroyed because this small amount is not appropriated, no fault could be attached to me or to the department. I am going to submit the matter to your judgment. I do not know whether you will vote for the appropriation for which you ought to vote, or whether you will stand by the committee, but I hope you will see the thing from the business man's standpoint, and vote this small appropriation to give the little additional storage room and the fire protection asked to protect the United States property at the Benicia Arsenal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, every year the department recommends a number of improvements at various plants and properties of the Government. The committee investigates them all very thoroughly and endeavors to recommend those that are imperative from the standpoint of good Government service. Benicia Arsenal this year recommended $10,000 for additional fire protection. There is a request for $20,000 to be added for an additional water supply. They have two reservoirs, one of which holds 2,225,000 gallons of water and the other 250,000 gallons of water, and it is proposed to erect a dam and in that way obtain another reservoir to be connected up with the two existing reservoirs. The statement is made that it is necessary to hold a quantity of water in these reservoirs during the dry season so as to afford a protection against fire, but the committee suggested that probably by connecting the fire mains with the salt water and utilizing the pumps now installed, or provide some additional pumps, that all the water necessary for fire protection could be obtained without this additional dam and reservoir. A few years ago a large storehouse was destroyed at Benicia Arsenal by fire. It is proposed to reconstruct it, if I recall correctly, to cost about $200,000. Instead of doing that Congress provided for the utilization of the storehouse that had not been completely destroyed. Now, it is proposed to obtain $25,000 for another system of storage. From the investigation I have made I believe that the usefulness of this establishment will not be impaired in the slightest by a failure to provide these two items proposed by the gentleman from California, and as there was a necessity of exercising some care in the expenditure of public funds during this session of Congress these two items were among those which could be most easily deferred, and I hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, it is true there are two reservoirs at the Benicia Arsenal, such as indicated by the gentleman from New York; but if any Member on this floor imagines that that is enough water to properly protect from fire and supply fresh water at Benicia Arsenal and Barracks, covering 339.7 acres of land and scores of buildings, they have another guess coming to them. When it comes to the proposition of using salt water for fire protection, it would cost over one-half of the amount asked for to put in a fresh-water system to provide for pumping salt water through the mains to be used in case of fire; and while it is true that salt water will put out fire just as well as fresh water, it is also true that salt water destroys the goods that it soaks. Salt water destroys leather, it destroys clothing, it corrodes and rusts iron and steel, and it would destroy all the goods that are in these storehouses; so while you are putting out the fire you are destroying the goods with the salt water. Now, I do not like to ask for an appropriation or an increase of appropriation on account of the condition of the Treasury, but I do not believe that this is money that can be properly saved to the Government. You are taking the risk of losing a great deal more property than the amount of money the appropriation calls for. As a matter of good business judgment, if it were your own plant, you would ask that these two items be appropriated. You would expend the money and use it to protect your own property. Now, that is all I am asking of this Congress, to protect the property of the United States and save a loss which may amount to millions by the expenditure of $45,000. It is up to your judgment, gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 52.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend and revise my remarks in reference to the amendment offered a moment ago by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, speeches already made are reasonably convincing, but needlessly make the progressive vote a factor and place stress upon the popular vote without emphasizing the fact that Presidents are elected by the States.

The returns of last November's election prove that the next House is Democratic merely because of the Democratic advantage of unanimity and near unanimity of congressional representation in Democratic States and the lack thereof in Republican States.

They prove, when carefully analyzed, that the fact of a Democratic majority in the Sixty-fourth Congress is not of the slightest significance; in other words, that it is fortuitous, or accidental.

They prove that if last year's election had been presidential the Electoral College would have contained a Republican majority over all, regardless of any showing made in the returns by third parties, such majority ranging from 19 upward.

They show that all the essential States—Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Illinois—which have always constituted battle grounds in presidential contests, are irretrievably lost to the Democratic Party.

I shall include in my remarks a table containing a full list of safely Republican States with reference to the next presidential election and a Democratic list which will not only contain what may be considered as safely Democratic States but several doubtful, as well as some which there is good reason to consider safely Republican States.

I give the electoral and the complete Republican and the Democratic popular vote in these Republican and Democratic States, also the congressional representation as between the same parties. Where there was a senatorial contest in the last election, I use the vote on that office. Where no Senator was to be elected, I use the aggregate vote on Congressmen.

I do not care to complicate the clear logic of this showing by a discussion of doubtful States which I have placed in the Democratic column. But can any one doubt the Republicanism of Maine, California, Oregon, and Wisconsin in the next presidential election in view of existing political conditions?

In Oregon, while owing to the personal popularity of Senator CHAMBERLAIN, who had a margin of 23,000, the Republicans carried all the congressional districts, with an aggregate plurality of 35,000, besides electing a governor by 27,000. While I have consistently placed Wisconsin in the Democratic column because of a plurality of less than 1,000 received by the Democratic candidate for Senator over his Republican opponent, yet the Republicans elected 8 out of 11 Congressmen, with an aggregate plurality of nearly 40,000.

In South Dakota, where owing to a factional division among Republicans, the Democratic Senator was elected by 3,800, while the Republicans carried the governorship by 15,000 and had a like plurality of the congressional vote.

The extravagant claims made by Secretary Bryan soon after the election in his personally and officially manipulated organ of publicity, the Commoner, and the no less absurd and ridiculous assertion of President Wilson in his Indianapolis speech have long deserved, without receiving, a conclusive answer.

In the foregoing remarks I have endeavored, I think successfully, to place a quietus on all such absurd and far-fetched conclusions as they have drawn.

As bearing on the question of what would be the political complexion of the next Congress if the Republican States were as Republican as the Democratic States are Democratic, I call attention to the fact that these Republican States, with a total representation in the next Congress of 227, yield 68 seats to Democrats, whereas the Democratic States, with a total representation of 202, yield only 36 seats to the Republicans. By calculation I find that Republican representation in the Democratic States is 17 per cent, while Democratic representation in Republican States is 30 per cent. If Republicans had also 30 per cent in Democratic States and the Democrats only 70 per cent, the representation in Democratic States would be 141 Democrats and 61 Republicans, and making no change in the representation from the Republican States the grand result would be 220 Republicans and 209 Democrats. And if the Democratic representation from Republican States were only equal to Republicans from Democratic States, even allowing the result from the Democratic States to stand, the delegation from the Republican States would be 189 Republicans and 39 Democrats, and the grand result would be a House containing 224 Republicans and 205 Democrats.

The Clerk read as follows:

Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa.: Extension of double-action press shop building, $6,000; improving facilities of the boiler plant, $15,000.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 52, after line 14, insert: Extension of lumber shed, $22,500.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, this item was included in the estimates submitted by the War Department. We have repeatedly essayed to show the House some of the economies which have been effected at the Frankford Arsenal, and I am prepared to submit to-day that the Government has no workshop that is better or more economically managed than is the arsenal at Frankford. Every Member of this House who has visited the arsenal has been impressed by the glaring fact that additional buildings are needed. Some few of the members of the Committee on Appropriations inspected the place last year and were convinced that there was urgent need for a new tinshop, an enlarged lumber shed, and the acquisition of additional land for testing grounds and storage buildings. The War Department submitted estimates aggregating $245,500 for Frankford Arsenal, but the committee in their wisdom and in their desire for economy cut the amount down to $21,000, or about one-twelfth what the War Department said was necessary. Fully appreciating the need we have for the practice of economy at this time, I still regard economy of this character as false economy. Failure to provide a sufficient lumber shed at so profitable a plant as the Frankford Arsenal is known to be is no economy whatever. I have here photographs of actual conditions, showing that expensive materials are exposed to the elements for lack of proper buildings in which to store them. The extension of the lumber shed is badly needed to relieve the congestion of the shrapnel shop, where large turret lathes are now installed. The congestion in the shrapnel shop is such that it is necessary to store boxes on the outside. These photographs show this condition of affairs.

Mr. Chairman, Frankford Arsenal being in my district, I know the conditions there very well. I know that this building is badly needed, and I trust we will not fail to appropriate the modest sum of $22,500 for this very necessary improvement. For lack of funds the buildings are badly in need of painting, the roads are little better than dirt roads, and yet during last year the arsenal saved to the Government upward of $1,600,000 in the manufacture of ammunition. Under improved conditions greater savings may reasonably be expected, and therefore I feel that this economical plant, this valuable workshop of the Government, should not be slighted at this time. I trust that this amendment, carrying the small sum of $22,500, will be adopted by the committee.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday I placed in the RECORD a letter——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman defer that statement until we dispose of the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. All right. I have no objection to that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the Frankford Arsenal is an important plant, and every year the committee has recommended improvements necessary to keep it in proper shape. In the bill for the current year improvements to cost $88,000 were provided. This year there were several proposed improvements, and one very large item was $135,000 for the purchase of land. The committee recommended two items, one for the improvement of the power plant and the other for the extension of the press shop building. It is impossible in any one year to make recommendations for all of the proposed improvements in any of these plants. The attempt is to give the things that are most essential, that are necessary to keep the plant in a satisfactory working shape. At times the committee is able to make recommendations on a more generous scale than on others. This is not the time when improvements that may be desirable, although not imperative, should be made. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DONOHOE. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 35.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For a storehouse for the storage of oils, etc., and its equipment, $15,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As I started to say a moment ago, on yesterday I placed a copy of a letter in the RECORD from Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, in which he called attention to a report that has been submitted to the Senate by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce in response to a Senate resolution. In that letter the Secretary requested that the various Democratic Members read the first 20 pages of that report, and said that they would find them illuminating. I have taken occasion to get a copy of that report, and I find that the Secretary is correct—that it is very illuminating. I read on page 19 of the second part of the report:

There is attached to this report as Exhibit 76 a list of ships offered by the Merchant Marine Agency, J. V. McCarthy, manager, Boston, Mass., from which it will be seen that there are 15 ships of English registry and 7 of German registry which he proposes to sell. Attention also is invited to Exhibit 75, showing that other ships are obtainable.

We are convinced that within a reasonable time after the shipping bill is passed enough ships can be secured to greatly relieve and assist our foreign trade.

Now, turning over to Exhibit 75 I find a long list of ships that are for sale by the "Merchant Marine Agency," of 1123 Old South Building, Boston. One of the leading members of the Boston Chamber of Commerce has furnished me a report in regard to this Merchant Marine Agency that is enlightening. I will read it:

The Merchant Marine Agency referred to in the report to the United States Senate of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce as having a list of ships for sale, in which 15 British ships appeared, does not appear in the Boston telephone book, nor does the name appear in the Boston directory. An investigation showed that the "Merchant Marine Agency" was being conducted by one "J. V. McCarthy," with an office at 1123 Old South Building, Boston, Mass. In the Boston directory his business is given as "real estate." A visit to the office of the "Merchant Marine Agency" disclosed the fact that it consisted of one small room, in charge of a girl in Mr. McCarthy's absence. When an inquiry was made as regards Mr. McCarthy's absence and the possibility of purchasing a ship from him, the girl said that she had been instructed not to talk, and refused to give any information.

The janitor stated that the name of "Merchant Marine Agency" had been painted on the door for about 10 days, i. e., since January 18, 1915.

It seems likely that the list which was annexed to the report of the Secretaries was such a list as steamship brokers ordinarily issue, and there is nothing on its face to disclose whether the assent of the British Board of Trade had been or could be obtained to the transfer to any other person than a British subject, which consent is now required before any ship can be transferred to a foreigner. It seems absolutely safe to say that the British Board of Trade in no event would assent to the transfer of any ship where there was the slightest possibility of its being placed in trade to German ports.

Now, that is the agency that has furnished the largest list of ships for sale that is printed in this report. It seems to have come into existence just about the time it sent the list. Who is the manager, and what is this agency? That shows the character of the men who are offering these ships for sale, and, as the Secretary said, this report is illuminating. Only two or three days ago a British ship was sold in New York, but the British Board of Trade refused to ratify that sale.

Now, while I am on my feet, I want to make another statement or two that will be illuminating in regard to some of the statements that have been made by the Secretary of Commerce as well as the Secretary of Labor. According to press reports, the Secretary of Commerce makes a very pathetic statement about a man in South America that had a cargo of wool and was unable to send it to the United States because of the exorbitant freights that were charged. It so happened that on Saturday I met a former Member of this House, the Hon. James T. McCleary, and he said he had personal knowledge of that transaction, and that what the Secretary of Commerce had stated about it was true, but that he did not state all of the truth. He said that American bottoms had been offered to carry this wool, but the man could not take advantage of it because he had entered into a conference agreement with foreign lines that ran to South America, and if he sent his wool by any other line he stood to lose a large rebate, so large he could not afford to take the chances. Mr. McCleary gave me information in regard to another statement that the Secretary of Commerce made, of a similar character. The Secretary illustrated the need for this shipping bill by citing the fact that a certain man in South America had a cargo of rags to send to this country, and that he was unable to ship them, and Mr. McCleary said that that was absolutely true, but the Secretary again did not tell all the truth there, because there had been a quarantine issued against the shipment of rags, and even if all the vessels afloat on all the seas had been there those rags could not have been shipped. So that is another illuminating statement upon this shipping question.

And I hope that my friends upon that side of the aisle will follow Secretary McAdoo's advice and read this illuminating report. And if I had time and would not think that somebody would make a point of order that I was not talking in order I would read more of it now.

Mr DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

On Friday last, during the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, a colloquy arose between my colleague [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] regarding a certain "bonus" system of compensation at Frankford Arsenal. The system had been in force at the arsenal since 1910, but was recently discontinued by order of Gen. Crozier, Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. MOORE. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not he knows that there is quite a protest on the part of employees against stopping the bonuses that have been received for extra work?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman, if he will yield, that my information on this is that the protest has been worked up by the officers in the Frankford Arsenal, who are opposed to this legislation, just as employers always seem to be able to find some employees whom they can coerce or influence in some way to come and oppose eight-hour measures, like they did the woman's eight-hour day here and in Illinois. So far as its being the position of the majority of the employees who have courage to speak for themselves, I do not believe there is any truth in the statement that they are opposed to it.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to add anything now to what I said at that time regarding the bonus system; but I do feel that I should say something in reply to the charge that the protest against the order discontinuing the payment of bonuses was "worked up" by the officers of the Frankford Arsenal.

I am sure the gentleman from Illinois would not intentionally misrepresent anyone, either officer or employee, and I believe he will be glad to know the facts in the case.

When the order in question was promulgated there was heard quite a storm of protest, especially from the female employees of the arsenal. At the request of a number of the employees affected I called at the arsenal, which is in my district, to get particulars at first hand.

The commanding officer, Col. Montgomery, gave us the use of his office and he and every other officer withdrew while the representatives of both sides, those who favored and those who opposed bonuses, had full and free opportunity of giving their views without interference from anyone. The conference lasted upward of an hour, during which time neither the commandant nor any other officer entered the room. From what I saw and heard while at the arsenal I am convinced that there was no working up of sentiment except by the employees themselves.

In view of these facts and in justice to Col. Montgomery and the other officers at Frankford Arsenal, I feel impelled to make this statement. Having known Col. Montgomery for many years, I can say, in truth, that I have met few men so fair to the employees, so sympathetic of their needs, or so considerate of their safety, their comfort, and their general welfare. It is not right to charge such men with "working up" a sentiment against anything that might make for the betterment of the condition of the arsenal employees. Indeed, I feel that the cause which is sought to be thus helped is often hurt by such reckless and unjust charges.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONOHOE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. It is true that the employees round about the arsenal there have various associations of their own and get together and talk these questions over, is it not?

Mr. DONOHOE. It is.

Mr. MOORE. They have a perfect right to do that?

Mr. DONOHOE. Yes; certainly.

Mr. MOORE. Sometimes they pass resolutions and send them forward to Congressmen, do they not?

Mr. DONOHOE. That is correct.

Mr. MOORE. I know I have received some.

Mr. DONOHOE. We all have.

Mr. MOORE. And we treat them as any Representative should treat a communication from his constituents. I think the gentleman has received many of them.

Mr. DONOHOE. I have.

Mr. MOORE. May I ask the gentleman concerning the movement to which he refers? There was an honest and bona fide complaint on the part of employees that their wages had been reduced by the abolition of the bonus system. Is not that true?

Mr. DONOHOE. That is quite true.

Mr. MOORE. That, irrespective of the merits of any speeding-up system, or Taylor system, or whatever it may be called, many of them who were doing good work had had their wages reduced?

Mr. DONOHOE. That is correct; and, unfortunately, the loss falls on those least able to bear it, namely, the women and unskilled men.

We frequently hear similar sweeping charges against employers in general, as if all of them were totally devoid of human feeling and aimed only at spurring their employees to the utmost limit of their power. If there be justification for any such general charge against employers of labor, then I can only say that I have been fortunate in meeting employers of a very different type. Those whom I have known were ever considerate of the health, the comfort, and the happiness of their working forces, skilled and unskilled, while, on the other hand, some so-called leaders whom I have met were most noticeable for their indifference to all workers outside their own particular class or craft. I have known employers who hesitated to install labor-saving devices until provision could be made for faithful employees who would thereby be displaced. As one who is in sympathy with the cause of labor and as one who has supported every measure aiming to better the lot and lighten the burden of the masses of our people, I feel that I have a right to pay this modest tribute to some good men, some good employers, whom it has been my pleasure to know. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs to roadways to national cemeteries which have been constructed by special authority of Congress, $12,000: Provided, That no railroad shall be permitted upon the right of way which may have been acquired by the United States to a national cemetery or to encroach upon any roads or walks constructed thereon and maintained by the United States: Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be used for repairing any roadway not owned by the United States within the corporate limits of any city, town, or village.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. May I ask why it is that the committee provides that no portion of the appropriation for repairs to roadways to national cemeteries shall be expended outside of the corporate limits of a city?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not the provision. It is "within" the corporate limits.

Mr. MANN. This says:

Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be used for repairing any roadway not owned by the United States within the corporate limits of any city, town, or village.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is right.

Mr. MANN. You can not spend it on any roadway unless it is owned by the Government within the corporate limits of a city. That is what it says.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It says that no part of this money shall be spent on any roadway not owned by the Government within the corporate limits of a city.

Mr. MANN. That is it. You can not spend it on any roadway anywhere unless it is a roadway owned by the Government within the corporate limits of a city.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. MANN. That is what it says.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; it does not say that at all. It says: "No part of this sum shall be used for repairing any roadway"——

Mr. MANN. Not owned by the United States within the corporate limits of a city.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). "Which is not owned by the Government within the corporate limits of a city." It is very clear.

Mr. MANN. That is what it says.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is well understood, both by the War Department and the gentleman from Illinois, and its purpose is to prevent this appropriation from being spent in improving roadways within the corporate limits of towns because a road owned by the municipality happens to be the leading approach to a national cemetery.

Mr. MANN. It may be that the War Department is not able to read or construe plain English.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is very clear.

Mr. MANN. Yes; very clear.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It sparkles like a crystal.

Mr. STAFFORD. I move to strike out the last two words. I rise to direct the attention of the chairman whether in the paragraph on page 56, line 13, the word "fourteen" should not be "thirteen"? I have referred to the sundry civil appropriation act of August, 1914, and I believe that the section which the committee has in mind is section 13.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It should be section 13. I ask unanimous consent to change the word "fourteen," in line 13, page 56, to the word "thirteen," so that it will read "section 13."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to change the word "fourteen" to "thirteen." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire what is the necessity of making these authorizations when the head of any governmental establishment has the authority to grant these per diems in lieu of subsistence?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law requires specific estimates to be submitted for this purpose, and it was believed that by incorporating the provision in the bill the committee would be more likely to keep track of them in the future. If it was not included here, attention would not be directed to the fact that per diems are paid out of certain appropriations, and it is desirable to have the attention of the committee drawn to that, so that inquiries will be made as to what is done in that direction.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this for the purpose of having a further segregation, so that the committee may know the amount?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is to insure investigation by the committee when the items are considered.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, civilian employees, etc.: For interment or of preparation and transportation to their homes or to such national cemeteries as may be designated by proper authority, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, of the remains of officers, including acting assistant surgeons, and enlisted men of the Army active list; interment or of preparation and transportation to their homes of the remains of civil employees of the Army in the employ of the War Department who die abroad, in Alaska, in the Canal Zone, or on Army transports, or who die while on duty in the field or at military posts within the limits of the United States; interment of military prisoners who die at military posts; removal of remains from abandoned posts to permanent military posts or national cemeteries, including the remains of Federal soldiers, sailors, or marines interred in fields or abandoned private and city cemeteries; and in any case where the expenses of burial or shipment of the remains of officers or enlisted men of the Army who die on the active list are borne by individuals, where such expenses would have been lawful claims against the Government, reimbursement to such individuals may be made of the amount allowed by the Government for such services out of this sum, but no reimbursement shall be made of such expenses incurred prior to July 1, 1910, $57,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the word "of," in line 23, page 8, and also in line 3, page 59, should go out. It was left in inadvertently when the language was changed. The item used to read "for expense of interment," and the word "expense" was left out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the word "of," in line 23, page 58, and line 3, page 59, be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS.

Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park: For continuing the establishment of the park; compensation and expenses of civilian commissioners; maps, surveys, clerical and other assistance, including $300 for necessary clerical labor under direction of the chairman of the commission; maintenance, repair, and operation of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle; office and all other necessary expenses; foundations for State monuments; mowing; historical tablets, iron and bronze; iron gun carriages; roads and their maintenance; purchase of small tracts of land heretofore authorized by law; in all, $55,260.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask what is the reason for having passenger-carrying vehicles at Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park and Shiloh, and not at Gettysburg and Vicksburg?

Mr. FITZGERALD. At Shiloh they have an automobile and at Gettysburg they have a horse and wagon.

Mr. MANN. At Gettysburg there is no provision for a horse and wagon. There is one provided for in Chickamauga and one for Shiloh, but none for Gettysburg or Vicksburg. Why do they need them more in one place than in another?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They say they have a great many miles of road. Shiloh is isolated from any town on the river and not as accessible as other parks.

Mr. MANN. I supposed that the Gettysburg park was more extensive than any of the others.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But there is quite a community right at Gettysburg.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gettysburg National Park: For continuing the establishment of the park; acquisition of lands, surveys, and maps; constructing, improving, and maintaining avenues, roads, and bridges thereon; fences and gates; marking the lines of battle with tablets and guns, each tablet bearing a brief legend giving historic facts and compiled without censure and without praise; preserving the features of the battle field and the monuments thereon; office for the commissioners in Gettysburg; compensation of civilian commissioners, clerical and other services, expenses, and labor; purchase and preparation of tablets and gun carriages and placing them in position; and all other expenses incidental to the foregoing, $45,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 62, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "office for the commissioners in Gettysburg."

Mr. FITZGERALD. At Gettysburg there is now a public building. I am informed that the office of commissioners is in the public building, and that there is no necessity for renting any office for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the vicinity of Gettysburg we have many productive farms. It is not generally known, but there are probably more individual farmers in the State of Pennsylvania than there are in any other State in the Union. They are vitally interested in questions of freight and transportation, which leads me to suggest that the Secretary of the Treasury has also been taking a very general interest in these questions recently in endeavoring to have passed through the Senate the shipping bill by which, through the expenditure of $30,000,000 belonging to the people of the United States, we shall purchase foreign ships in which to transport both American and foreign merchandise.

The Secretary of the Treasury, speaking for the President of the United States, who has indicated this day that an extra session may be called if the shipping bill is not passed, thus proving conclusively that he does not unduly influence legislation, has insisted in certain official reports that unless the shipping bill is passed, and we take from the Treasury of the United States—already depressed to the point of a deficit—$30,000,000 to pay for foreign ships built by foreign labor, the farmers of the country will have to pay the freight to get their grain and cotton abroad.

Now, much has been made by the Secretary of the Treasury of this argument that the farmer must pay the freight to the man who operates the ship. Hence, if the Government owns the ship, according to the administration contention, the situation will be different, and the farmer will be relieved of paying freight. I can not understand this kind of reasoning. The report which the Secretary of the Treasury, fortified by the Secretary of Commerce, recently made to another body in support of the argument for the passage of the ship-purchase bill states:

In other words, the increased ocean freight tax arbitrarily imposed upon our farmers and business men for the month of December, 1914, only was $18,018,700. If exports by sea continue for the 12 months of 1915 at the December, 1914, rate, and the ocean freight charges are the same as for December, 1914, the American farmers and business men will pay to shipowners (principally foreign) increased freight charges above the normal rates of $216,224,400, or more than five times the $40,000,000 which the Government proposes by the shipping bill to put into American ships for the protection of our foreign commerce.

In other words, in support of his desire to take $40,000,000 away from the American people and give it to the foreigner for ships constructed over there at cheap wages, the Secretary argues that the farmer will continue to pay the freight on what he sends abroad. He makes the same argument with regard to the business man.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The Secretary of the Treasury did not make any statement like this when he was making that report, did he, that ships carrying cargoes abroad are obliged to wait 30 days on the other side to unload; that it costs about $1,000 a day for every day a ship lies waiting to get to the dock; and that the ship is obliged to come back without cargo; and that if any profit is to be earned on the trip of the ship, all of these expenses must be included on the freight rates?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I think the Secretary of the Treasury is so anxious to pass this shipping bill, which proposes to take our money to buy foreign ships, that he entirely overlooked the fact to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] refers. I have no knowledge of his having brought the attention of Congress to that at all, but he is trying to make the people understand, the farmers in particular, that unless they fall in with this ship-purchase scheme of the administration they will have to pay the freight or an increased freight on what they send abroad. The Secretary of Commerce has been talking this way on his various trips throughout the country, agitating for his measure, and he has been leading the farmer to believe that unless we take the farmer's money to buy the foreign ships, and close up the American shipyards, then the farmer will have to foot the freight to get his cotton and grain to the foreign market.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania where he gets authority for the statement that the President will call an extra session if the ship-purchase bill is not passed?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I have it from the very best authority, the very highest authority, that unless the shipping bill is passed before the 4th of March there will be an extra session on the 5th of March, and, of course, this does not mean at all, nor is it to be construed in a legal sense as meaning, that the President in any way desires to unduly influence the legislative body in the passage of a shipping bill.

Mr. SMITH of New York. The gentleman is not willing to state his authority?

Mr. MOORE. If I did, I would violate a confidence, but I think the gentleman will see it in the afternoon papers and probably in the morning papers, under display headlines, because almost everyone except the President wants to avoid an extra session. The whole country is tired of Congress being in session, and nobody believes in holding an extra session and continuing the burden of expense to which we are putting the people, except that little coterie who wants to buy a lot of foreign ships. They have some reason for wanting to buy these ships which we have not yet been able to understand.

I heard a rumor this morning that the ships they want to buy are not the ships that were referred to in the remarks of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] a little while ago, but the ships that are now interned—ships of the Hamburg-American Line and the ships of the North German Lloyd—ships that were built for passenger traffic, ships that the Germans can not get, ships that were never intended to carry abroad the products of the farm, the cattle, the grain, and the cotton of this country—ships that were built to carry passengers.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman knows, of course, that these German interned ships are utterly unfit for carrying freight?

Mr. MOORE. They would have to be disemboweled in order to carry the freight of the farm. Possibly they could be rebuilt in the United States under our new ship laws, but it is more than likely, under our new freedom, even that work would be done in foreign yards, where American workmen would have no chance at it.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Did the Secretary of the Treasury say that the farmers paid this freight?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, as to that, here is the report of the Secretaries:

To show what the burden imposed on the farmers by these high ocean freight rates means, it is necesary only to bring out the fact that while the total freight cost on our exports by sea for December, 1914, was $30,742,500, the great commodities of grain, cotton, and flour bore $11,782,250 of this charge—or more than 36 per cent of the entire freight cost on all exports by sea for December, 1914.

It might be well in addition to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] that to-day's dispatches from New York help us out in this shipping dispute by reporting that this year's exports from New York to date total $148,146,690, as against $119,413,507 in the same period last year. That shows that our commodities are going abroad all right.

Mr MADDEN. That was due to the fact that grain was being shipped abroad.

Mr. MOORE. Yes; grain was being shipped, of course, and if it were not for the foreign or domestic speculators who are in the business of piling it up at the ports to-day, there would not be any congestion; and the trouble is not on this side, as it is on the other side, where the ports are unable to accommodate the ships that are going over there.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will yield for a moment: If grain is congested on the wharves and can not find a market, why would it be worth so much to-day as from $1.48 to $1.60?

Mr. MOORE. Well, I think the price is determined largely by the demand for it. In the large cities we are not getting any benefit from the advance——

Mr. FESS. I meant if they could not ship it, it would not be worth so much?

Mr. MOORE. Of course not. If there was such a frightful congestion of grain as the Secretary of the Treasury has tried to show at the various ports, the presumption is that the price would fall. That is what is the matter with cotton.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It costs about 30 cents a bushel to ship wheat from New York to European ports, and according to the gentleman's theory that does not have any influence on the price paid for wheat here.

Mr. MOORE. That does not indicate that the farmer pays the freight, but I was endeavoring to answer the gentleman from Ohio. As to the question of the gentleman from Missouri, I would say that I was commenting upon the report of the distinguished Cabinet officers who are interested in the passage of the shipping bill. They are endeavoring to make the farmer who raises grain believe that unless the shipping bill is passed, and passed before the 4th of March under the penalty of an extra session, then the farmers will have to pay additional freight. It was that attitude of the Secretaries I was trying to explain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MOORE. I would ask that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does the gentleman want the country to understand he is indifferent to the price the farmer shall receive for his product?

Mr. MOORE. I certainly do not. I want him to receive the best price for his product that it is possible for him to receive.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And that the freight charge has nothing to do with the price he receives for his product.

Mr. MOORE. We are speaking of the foreign price now.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It does not make any difference——

Mr. MOORE. I am submitting a statement made by these two distinguished Cabinet officers, that unless we have these foreign ships which the administration desires the farmer will pay the freight, a proposition which I am undertaking to dispute.

Mr. ALEXANDER. A Cabinet officer did not make any such statement as that.

Mr. MOORE. I have just read two sections of an official statement by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce, transmitted to the Senate December 29, 1914.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman misrepresents the statement.

Mr. MOORE. I have read literally from the statement. The gentleman can find it in Senate Document No. 673, Sixty-third Congress, third session.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have read the statement, and I challenge the correctness of the gentleman's interpretation of that statement.

Mr. MOORE. We have also had the views of these gentlemen from time to time in the public press. I now desire to read from the editor of the Annalist, a magazine of business, commerce, and economics, published in New York, wherein the editor says:

There is no limit to the possibilities of the theory which Mr. McAdoo expounds. It is a poor rule that does not work both ways, and apparently the same is true of a theory, for after having set forth that the American producer has to pay the freight on his products Mr. McAdoo argues that the American consumer will pay the freight on what he consumes. Instead of being a land blessed beyond all others, we seem to be so peculiarly unfortunate that economic laws are reversed against us and in favor of the foreigner. We have, Mr. McAdoo tells us, not only to pay the freight on our imports, which everybody knew, but also on our exports, which nobody knew until the administration discovered it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman is quoting somebody else than Mr. McAdoo there.

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman will permit me, I now desire to read from the Journal of Commerce, published in New York on the 1st of February, giving this additional answer to Mr. McAdoo on his theory about the necessity of our buying these foreign ships in which to carry American commerce abroad. It also deals with the freight question on which the farmers are being misinformed:

There are several grossly false assumptions in this statement regarding advances in rates and the cause of them, and delusions about the effect upon our trade, but there is nothing else quite so shallow and absurd as the bold claim that the whole freight charge is imposed upon our farmers and business men and deducted from the prices which they should receive. For the things largely exported, except our great surplus of cotton, unusually high prices are received and large profits are realized. The price here is determined by the exceptional European demand, but the freight charges are added to the prices paid in Europe. Directly, the freight is paid by the foreigners who receive the goods. The fact that they have it to pay increases the price to them, but it does not reduce it to the American farmer. The prices we pay for imports are affected by the freight charges, but these have not been greatly increased because the demand for cargo room is much less coming this way, and the import trade is restricted and not expanded by the war. The statement about the effect upon "our foreign-trade balances" is too idiotic for serious comment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; if I have time.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If I understand the logic of the gentleman's statement, which he adopts as his own, it is that we as a nation ought to be indifferent to the cost of the transportation of our commodities to foreign markets.

Mr. MOORE. Not at all. I answered that before.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Because the foreigner pays the cost of transportation——

Mr. MOORE. In this instance, the foreigner pays the freight.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Hence in extending our commerce to accommodate agriculture and manufactures and the general commerce of this country we should be indifferent to the price the foreign ship lines pay for the transportation of products. Is that what the gentleman wants the country to understand?

Mr. MOORE. No; I do not want to be indifferent; I want the country to know the facts.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is what you are arguing right now.

Mr. MOORE. As I understand the gentleman, he is arguing that the Secretary of the Treasury contends that the farmer does pay the freight when he sends his goods abroad.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not say that he pays the entire cost at all.

Mr. MOORE. The Secretary of the Treasury has been arguing that the farmer did pay the freight.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Your position is that he does not pay any part of it, and it is a matter of indifference what they charge.

Mr. MOORE. Not at all. I want the farmer to get the best of the bargain; but I do not want the administration, or a Cabinet officer, no matter how influential nor how desirous he may be to pass a bill in this House, to mislead the farmer by arguing that he pays the freight on grain when the foreigner pays it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We have ships sufficient to transport our commodities to foreign countries.

Mr. MOORE. And we are doing it now.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And because of the excessive freight rates——

Mr. MOORE. We are doing it now. The gentleman knows that there has been an abnormal condition; but, despite that fact, the ordinary business has been carried in the usual way.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I deny that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, what is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. If the consideration of this appropriation bill is over, I am going to make the point of no quorum. It is too painful to sit here and listen to that, and the gentleman ought not to punish the rest of us. It is imposing upon his associates.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that his time be extended two minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE. It may be painful to the gentleman from Connecticut; no doubt it is; but, Mr. Chairman, business men generally know that the pretense that is being set up by the administration, with regard to Americans paying the freight on what is now sent abroad, is unjustifiable. Here is a letter from Mr. Frank S. Evans, representing Strawbridge & Clothier, one of the largest business houses in the city of Philadelphia. He knows about shipping, and advises me thus:

Any business man knows that no question of the freight is figured as far as the seller is concerned. He sells his goods regardless of what the purchaser pays to get them to himself, except in rare instances; certainly no farmer delivers his goods at the price he sells them f. o. b. abroad. The farmer merely delivers the goods to his primary market and gets his price at that point.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with further reference to what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] has said in his questions to me, I desire to repeat that it is not in good taste for the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of Commerce or the President of the United States if he indorses what they have said, to go about the country working up sentiment to pass an iniquitous shipping bill, which takes $30,000,000 out of the pockets of the people to buy foreign ships and attempt to frighten farmers and business men into believing that it will be necessary for them to contribute to this scheme or suffer freight charges which they are not now required to pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important subject, and I think we should have all the light we can secure upon it. Under leave to extend, granted me yesterday, therefore, I submit two interesting and pertinent statements, one from Mr. Frank L. Neall, of Philadelphia, to whom I referred yesterday, and another from Mr. William D. Winsor, of the old American Winsor Line, which operated between Philadelphia and Boston. Mr. Neall's letter throws an interesting light upon the shipbuilding situation in England and confirms rather positively the criticism I have made of the Cabinet officers' declaration that the farmer pays the freight. Mr. Winsor's article is illuminating in its analysis of the purpose and effect of the shipping bill upon which the administration seems to have set its heart.

VOLUME OF SHIPBUILDING—PROFITS OF SHIP OWNING.

PHILADELPHIA, February 10, 1915.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MOORE: H. E. Moss & Co.'s semiannual steamship circular, dated January 1, 1914, says: "In issuing our present semiannual steamship circular we are gratified to be able to state that within a period of over 50 years in which we have been continuously connected with the steamshipping industry we find no trace among our previous records in which steamship owners have realized such profits as they have done during the last few years, and we are glad our recent predictions have proved correct. * * * The tonnage under construction for the quarter ending December 31, 1913, exclusive of warships, exceeds all previous records in this country as well as abroad. We estimate the amount of merchant shipping presently building in the United Kingdom alone will not be less than 2,200,000 gross register tons. Most of this tonnage consists more especially of high-class liners and tankers than ordinary tramp steamers. Many of our important builders have sufficient work on hand to keep them occupied during the whole of this year. There are some, however, already feeling the present dearth of orders who can give fairly quick delivery."

NOTE.—Total tonnage of world, all nations, prior to 1914 (June) 50,000,000 tons.

Circular dated January 1, 1915, says: * * * "At the present moment most of our shipyards have sufficient orders to last them well into 1916, and few builders can give earlier delivery. Prices for building have advanced in six months from 10 to 20 per cent, and what new steamers were building on speculation have been nearly all disposed of. Secondhand tonnage is difficult to obtain, except at extreme prices, and large profits have been quietly realized. The amount of tonnage under construction on January 1, 1915, will, we anticipate, be greater than it has ever been before and well above 2,000,000 tons."

The old adage, "Never fish for clams at high water," was never more applicable that at the present moment as regards prices at which ocean steamers are selling, and ocean rates of freight securable. There is much of the earthquake or volcanic characteristics in each of those factors at the present time. This morning, we have reports of annexed charters, and as to rates, exceed anything previously, we believe, that was ever recorded, and to us indicate that Germany is in the extremity for wheat.

Please realize that these freight rates are not paid by any farmers, wheat speculators, or wheat owners in the United States. The wheat has probably been secured some while back for account of foreign interests and is now seeking transportation to ultimate destination. One of the undernoted vessels gets an ocean freight equivalent to 42 cents per bushel on wheat. When the war broke out wheat was selling in Chicago at only 35 cents per bushel higher than ocean freight herein referred to. I have often heard line steamship managers say that they would be perfectly satisfied never to see ocean freight on grain by line steamers over 6 cents per bushel, as that would obviate competition from tramp steamers.

GRAIN CHARTERS REPORTED IN NEW YORK JOURNAL OF COMMERCE, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1915.

Norwegian steamer Bra Kar, 32,000 quarters from the Atlantic range to Copenhagen, 13s. 6d. per quarter, March shipment.

Norwegian steamer Sigrum, 16,000 quarters, same destination and same shipment, to Denmark, 14s. per quarter.

Yours, truly,

FRANK L. NEALL.

STEAMSHIPS TO BE RUN BY POLITICIANS—FOLLY OF THE GOVERNMENT PURCHASE BILL POINTED OUT BY A SHIPPING EXPERT.

All indications point to the intention of the Government to purchase vessels from the fleet of German steamers now interned in the various ports of this country.

Leaving out entirely the question of international complications, which would undoubtedly arise in the event of such purchase and operation by the Government, and looking at the matter entirely from a practical business point of view, the following items present themselves at once for consideration.

I name at random a few of the steamers in question, giving tonnage, speed in knots, and first, second, and steerage passenger accommodations:

HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE.

These vessels are designed and constructed primarily for passenger traffic and freight is of secondary importance. Speed is a necessary requisite, in order to obtain which the lines of the steamers are very fine and not those which give the greatest cargo capacity. Their boiler and engine power and consequent consumption of coal are very great. They are constructed in every way with a view to the carrying of passengers, and the space taken up for their accommodation is a very large percentage of the carrying capacity of the hull. To cater to the tastes of the present first-class ocean travel they are fitted in a most luxurious manner; in fact, they are floating hotels.

One can hardly imagine that the stupendous ignorance and want of knowledge shown by the authorities at Washington in this matter would go so far as to lead them to engage in the passenger business, which includes transportation of immigrants in the steerage, all of which involves the establishment of thousands of agencies all over this country and Europe, to say nothing of the necessarily large stewards' department, provisioning of the ships, and equipment of the table.

If they did not engage in the passenger traffic everything in the equipment pertaining to this would be of worse than no use and an encumbrance. Therefore, if they were confined to the freight trade, the whole of this would have to be torn out and the ship adapted for freight purposes, the expense of which would be enormous; and even if this were done the lines and model of the steamer would not permit of loading her to full capacity, and the expense of running her owing to her engine equipment would be very high.

In view of all this, the project seems to be absolutely indefensible from a business point of view, and could only result in a very great loss.

Imagine a fleet of this character, conducted under the able and efficient management of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of Commerce, who are, of course, educated by years of experience in the intricacies of conducting steamship lines. Imagine the fleet open to favoritism in the appointments that would be made at the instigation of Members of Congress. In fact, summing it all up in a few words, the line would be run under the domination of politicians.

It is supposed among other things that private capital will come forward and absorb eagerly the 49 per cent, or minority of the stock, leaving it to be managed by the 51 per cent Government ownership. Would any sane man invest a dollar in an enterprise so conducted?

It is stated to be the intention of a beneficent administration to build up the American merchant marine. How can the few steamships that we have left in the foreign trade contend against a Government-owned line, which makes no charge in its operation of interest on investment or depreciation, and which carries its own insurance, and every one of these items has got to be considered in the long run, and when they materialize will result in a deficit which would be met by the Treasury and become the basis of further taxation? Even supposing—which I do not admit—that in the abnormal condition of very high ocean rates now prevailing there should be an apparent profit, on the return to former and normal conditions the losses would be enormous for reasons already given.

Competition under such conditions would be still more difficult and impossible than it is to-day against the subsidized lines of foreign nations, and the result would be to drive the few remaining steamships which we have left off the ocean.

The American shipbuilders and vessel owners have shown themselves in the past capable of competing with those of any other nation, but they can only do so successfully where they are upon equal terms; and the foreign shipowner, in addition to exemption from the absurd and onerous restrictions of our navigation laws, mainly passed at the dictate of the labor unions, is additionally aided by many nations with a subsidy, which is abhorrent to many Members of Congress, and is spoken of as aid given with the money of the people. What is the difference between the increased cost under a protective duty paid by the customer on a yard of broadcloth and the application of a subsidy which enables steamship lines to be run for the benefit of all? Mainly, it is that in one instance the application of the duty is not seen and in the other it is regarded as money paid directly to the steamship owner, but the principle is exactly the same.

If by the payment of a few millions in the way of subsidy the country can obtain the benefit of the many millions—estimated at $200,000,000—now paid into the coffers of foreign nations in the way of freight money, would it not be a gain for the Nation, and certainly in one instance the amount so expended would be known, but in the case of a Government owned and operated steamship line it would be infinitely greater, and never disclosed.

If the American ships were protected in this manner it would at once lead to the building up of the American merchant marine, and in addition to the saving of the vast sums now paid to foreign countries in freight money our shipyards would hum with industry, where thousands of wage earners would be employed, and the effect would be seen in the ore beds, the coal fields, the steel plants, and all the numerous industries which contribute to the building up of a steamship. The fleet thus created would be truly American.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BOOHER. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the bill. We are sitting here trying to get along with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, of course, will sustain the point of order, and will ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to confine himself to the amendment, the point of order having been made against it.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I inquire what the amendment is?

The CHAIRMAN. To strike out the last word.

Mr. BARTLETT. The paragraph with reference to Vicksburg Park?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir. On page 62.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], when he made the motion, stated that there was a large agricultural population in the vicinity of this park.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming is not obeying the rule.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I insist on being protected by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] makes the point of order against the gentleman from Wyoming on the ground that he is not confining himself to the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman's point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman to proceed in order. Under the five-minute rule, when a point of order is made, the gentleman must confine himself to the subject matter of the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. I guess we had better not proceed without a quorum if the gentleman is getting so particular.

Mr. BOOHER. The gentleman has a perfect right to make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming make the point of no quorum?

Mr. MONDELL. I will make the point of no quorum if the gentlemen are getting so nervous. I have no desire to do so unless the gentlemen over there get nervous and touchy.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] may proceed without reference to or confining himself to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to follow the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] modifies the request by asking that he have five minutes in which to address the committee, without reference to the rule. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri raises the question as to the effect of ocean freight rates on the price which the farmer receives. The history of the last 60 days seems to make it very clear and evident that the cost of ocean freights has, under present conditions, little or no effect whatever on the price of the farmer's product. The Secretary of the Treasury, in the more or less illuminating pamphlet which has been frequently referred to, states it as a fact that the price of the carriage of wheat across the Atlantic has advanced since July from 5 cents to 20 cents a bushel. During the same period the price of wheat has advanced all over the country about 35 cents a bushel.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman think the rise in wheat was due to the fact that freight rates have risen also?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not said anything of the sort.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman's argument would seem to lead to that.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman had better listen to my argument.

Mr. RUCKER. I have been listening.

Mr. MONDELL. In the face of rapidly advancing ocean freight rates the price of wheat has advanced the country over. In spite of the fact, as claimed by the Secretary, that there has been a 15-cent per bushel increase in the price of transportation, we have shipped abroad in the last 30 days six or seven times as much wheat as we shipped abroad in the same 30 days a year ago. If there is any argument to be made on the basis of these conditions, it is that the freight rate has nothing whatever to do with the price of the farmer's product, and that, in my opinion, is absolutely true under the conditions that now exist, whatever may be true under normal conditions.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. MONDELL. Because at this time and under these circumstances the price of wheat is fixed here, in the greatest wheat-producing country in the world. Under other conditions, with free passage of wheat from Russia and from the Balkan States and from all the wheat-exporting countries of the world to the general European market, it is possible that the price here is to a large extent based on the price in Liverpool, at least, or on the Continent. In such a case the price here is to a certain extent, at least, the Liverpool price minus the ocean freight.

But with the channels of trade clogged, with a considerable number of the great exporting countries not able to export at all, with the largest supply for the world market coming from the United States, the price of wheat is made and fixed here, with little regard or relation to the ocean freight rate. The fact that the crop price for wheat fluctuates at times several cents a day, without any change in ocean freight rates, is another evidence of this fact.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman please apply that argument to the price of cotton?

Mr. MONDELL. I think it applies largely to the price of cotton.

Mr. HOWARD. Why has not cotton gone up in the same proportion that wheat has gone up under high ocean freight rates?

Mr. MONDELL. There has not been the same demand. There have been as many ships for cotton as there have been for wheat. There has not been as great an increase in the freight rate——

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman——

Mr. MONDELL. Please let me answer your question. There has not been as great an advance in the rate on cotton as there has on wheat, and yet the price of wheat has advanced much more than the price of cotton has. So that, applying it to the cotton situation——

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman permit another question right there? Does the gentleman think that the charge of $16 to $18 per bale for cotton is going to stimulate the demand of the cotton factors in England and Germany?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it makes a vast amount of difference under these war conditions, because they are buying cotton only as they must have it, and they must have a certain amount without regard to what it costs to carry it across the sea.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MONDELL. All this is preliminary to what I really wanted to say. You can not expect this administration to be logical. It would be expecting altogether too much. The Secretary of the Treasury and the President, in insisting on a ship-purchase bill, argue that they want it in the interest of the farmer.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The five minutes of the gentleman from Wyoming have expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of New York. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask how long the debate on this paragraph is going to continue?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair can not answer it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RUCKER. Reserving the right to object, I want to know if the gentleman from Wyoming gets five minutes more, he will yield to me for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I thought I had been granted the privilege of proceeding five minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, no; I reserved the right to object.

Mr. BARTLETT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Has debate been limited?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair just stated the question, and the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Washington reserved the right to object. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have no objection, but I would like to have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. I want to ask the gentleman from Wyoming if I correctly understood him to say that the normal rate of 5 cents being increased to 30 cents on freight rates the farmer could get as much for his wheat as if the rate was the normal rate of 5 cents?

Mr. MONDELL. I said that the events of the last 60 days—a constantly increasing freight rate and a constantly increasing price for wheat—would seem to demonstrate beyond question that under these conditions the cost of ocean freightage had nothing to do with the price which the farmer receives for his wheat. The spot price on the Chicago market is to-day from $1.62 to $1.65 a bushel, and that in face of advance in ocean freight rates of 15 cents since July.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have another point that I want to discuss. I want to discuss the delightful and lovely consistency of this Democratic administration. Wheat is $1.65 a bushel spot. People all over the country are threatened with an increased cost of bread per loaf or a reduction of the size of the loaf.

Mr. MADDEN. It has gone up 2 cents a loaf now.

Mr. MONDELL. The administration is just now trying to discover why wheat is so high—investigating the high price. The Department of Labor is, I am told and I think properly, much exercised on behalf of the poor people of the country because bread is so high. In this condition of affairs are we to understand that the President wants the people of the United States to buy $30,000,000 worth of ships and run them at a loss in order to make wheat 15 cents a bushel higher all over the country and bread a penny more a loaf. That is what will certainly happen if this theory that the reduction in ocean freight rates will increase the price of wheat by the amount of the reduction.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Is this a part of the Democratic administration promise to reduce the cost of living?

Mr. MONDELL. That is about the way the administration has kept its promises to reduce the cost of living.

Mr. DECKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. DECKER. Do I understand that the gentleman would rather have the high price of freight rates and wheat go to the ocean carrying trade than to the farmers of this country?

Mr. MONDELL. I have told the gentleman several times that, in my opinion, it does not make a particle of difference under the present conditions what it costs to carry this wheat across the water, as the price is fixed here. In the face of these high ocean rates the price of wheat continues to advance. But, if the theory of your administration is correct and a reduction through Government-owned ships in the freight rate would increase the price of wheat by the amount of the reduction, then you would raise the price of wheat all over the country, increase the cost of living to all the people all over the land, and make it more difficult than it is now—and it is difficult enough now, the Lord knows—for the poor people to live under this Democratic administration.

The situation is this: Our experience since the European war began is that the price of wheat here is based on an abnormal demand, and we, as the largest source of supply, fix the price without regard to ocean freights. But if the theory advanced by the administration, and supported by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], that the farmer is losing on his wheat the amount of the increased ocean freights is correct, then the administration's ship-purchase plan could be stated as follows:

The administration desires the American people to approve the selling of bonds for the purchase of ships to be run at a loss, the deficit to be paid by the people, in order to make the price of wheat and bread higher all over the country.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, so far as the economic question involved is concerned, it does not matter whether the ships are Government owned or privately owned. The question is whether or not there is sufficient tonnage to move our commerce in the foreign trade at reasonable rates. Hence this argument about whether they should be Government-owned ships or not is entirely aside from the merits of the question and is so much nonsense in which the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] so frequently indulge. To say it is a matter immaterial to the farmers or the merchants or the manufacturers what the ocean freight rates may be on their commodities entering into our foreign commerce is nothing short of a monstrous proposition.

The fact that there is a foreign war, that there is an increased demand for our commodities, does not change the economic principle involved. This has been a vital question for years past. Increased ocean freight rates caused by combinations between the shipping interests have materially and injuriously affected the extension of our foreign commerce. Will anyone say that the fact that we could under normal conditions prior to the war in Europe transport a bushel of wheat from Duluth to Liverpool at 5 cents a bushel did not affect the price of the wheat of the farmer in the Northwest? I do not think anybody would be stupid enough to make any such contention as that. Would he have gotten the same price if the cost of transportation had been 30 cents per bushel instead of 5 cents per bushel?

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Does not the gentleman think that the freight rate has been affected by the fact that the oceans have been mined and the carrying is hazardous?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think that is true and may justify increase in part over the normal rates. I do not say that the increase in the freight rate has resulted in loss to the wheat farmer and the cotton grower alone.

Mr. FESS. Has not the insurance gone up a great deal, and have not certain companies refused to insure at all?

Mr. ALEXANDER. The insurance rate has increased somewhat, it is true. The increased costs to the shipowners since the war in Europe began do not amount to 25 per cent of the increase in ocean freight rates.

Mr. FESS. Suppose the Government has all these ships, would not the Government charge a higher price in time of war than in time of peace?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think so, to cover the increased costs, whatever they may be. If the Government should cut the present rates in two on many commodities, and I believe the Government could do that and the rate would be remunerative, does the gentleman not admit it would have some influence on the price received by the farmer, manufacturer, and exporter for the commodity?

Mr. FESS. It might have to some extent; yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is what I think, too; but I do not think it would equal the difference. The contention of these gentlemen is that it is a matter of indifference to the exporter, the farmer, and the manufacturer in this country what the ocean-freight rate is, that it does not affect the price at which they sell their commodities. That is the contention against which I enter an emphatic protest. It is not economically sound.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. As a matter of fact, given a constant demand, is it not a matter of absolute indifference? If the price for cotton and grain remains the same on the other side, is it not a matter of absolute indifference?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think not. If the demand was constant and wheat worth $1 per bushel in Liverpool, I would think it of vital interest to the producer whether the freight rate was 5 cents or 20 per bushel on wheat.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman think that a reduction in the price of the rate by 15 cents a bushel would immediately raise the price of wheat in the United States to the same amount?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; not to cover the difference; but the southern cotton grower is now receiving about 8½ cents a pound for cotton. That same cotton in Bremen is worth from 18 to 21 cents a pound. The difference is absorbed in the ocean freight rates. If the ocean freight rates were cut in two, according to the position of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the cotton farmer would not receive 1 cent more for his cotton.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I say to the gentleman that the freight rate from here to Germany has gone up from $1.50 a bale to $18 a bale?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; and yet these great economists claim that it does not influence the price of cotton.

Mr. MADDEN. Can the gentleman say whether the cotton farmer really owns the cotton now?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; a great deal of it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It does not matter, so far as the economic question is concerned, whether he owns it or not. I suppose American citizens own the cotton; and it is material to the prosperity of this country whether the surplus cotton crop sold in the foreign market sells for 8½ or 12 cents per pound or whether the companies engaged in transporting the cotton to the foreign market absorb the difference in increased freight rates. They are mostly foreign companies, and the profits go to the foreign companies.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. If the present carrying rate were cut in two, or one-half, as the gentleman has suggested, how much, in his judgment, would it affect the price of wheat?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Would that diminish the demand abroad?

Mr. MARTIN. How much would that affect the price of wheat in this country?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think it would increase the price.

Mr. MARTIN. How much?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I could not say.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the gentleman think that at the present prices of wheat it would be just to the general people of the United States to have those prices advanced at this time?

Mr. ALEXANDER. If I understand it, the gentleman represents an agricultural district, as I do, and I take it from his question that he thinks the farmer is getting quite enough for his wheat.

Mr. MARTIN. I am asking the gentleman whether he thinks that would be a good economic proposition in the United States?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think it would increase the cost of living.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the gentleman think that is a good thing at the present time?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No, if the farmer is getting a fair price; but I am not willing that the difference should be absorbed by the ocean carriers, and I am not willing that those who are championing the interests of the Shipping Trust shall stand up here day after day and assert that such a monstrous doctrine as that the cost of transportation is no concern of the producer is sound political economy.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. I do not think the gentleman intends to name anybody who has any particular interest in the Shipping Trust. I do not think the gentleman would go that far; but I would like to ask the gentleman this, whether he and I differ on this question that the farmer who sends his wheat abroad in present conditions does not pay the freight, but the foreigner does? I have contended that the foreigner pays the freight, and that seems to be the point of difference between the gentleman and myself.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Literally, the foreigner does pay the freight, but the gentleman says this does not influence the price of the farmer's commodity.

Mr. MOORE. Then the gentleman clearly misunderstood what I was saying—that it was a mistake for anybody in this country to undertake to influence the farmer into the belief that he did pay the freight.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have not a farmer in my district who has not sense enough to know that increased ocean freight rates influence the price of his products sold abroad.

Mr. MOORE. But he does not pay the freight.

Mr. ALEXANDER. For the benefit of the gentlemen on the other side who seem to be so indifferent to the welfare of the farmer, and would have the farmer believe that the cost of getting his products to the markets of the world is of no interest to him, although we depend on his cotton and grain sold in the foreign market to give us our trade balance, and for the benefit of the calamity howlers on that side, I shall incorporate with my remarks an address made by Mr. James A. Farrell, president of the United States Steel Corporation, in Pittsburgh on February 8, and call their attention particularly to the statement of Mr. Farrell that the farm wealth of the United States this year probably will exceed $10,000,000,000, and that the United States excess of exports over imports for 1915 may easily reach $1,000,000,000, and his further statement that the balance of trade in favor of the United States for January of this year is at the rate of $1,500,000,000 a year. I give Mr. Farrell's statement as published in the Washington Post of February 9:

BIG TRADE BOOM NEAR—J. A. FARRELL, STEEL CORPORATION HEAD, SEES PROSPERITY—POINTS TO HUGE EXPORTS—URGES EMPLOYERS TO COOPERATE AND CREATE WORK FOR JOBLESS—ASSERTS THAT FARM WEALTH OF UNITED STATES THIS YEAR PROBABLY WILL EXCEED $10,000,000,000—CITES RAPID REVIVAL IN STEEL BUSINESS—"TALK COURAGE, CONFIDENCE, AND COOPERATION," HIS ADVICE TO PENNSYLVANIA ENGINEERS.

PITTSBURGH, PA., February 8.

Courage and cooperation in business and confidence in a restoration of prosperity was the advice expressed by James A. Farrell, president of the United States Steel Corporation, in an address before the Engineers' Society of Western Pennsylvania here to-night.

Among reasons for encouragement Mr. Farrell quoted "eminent European and American authorities" as calculating that the United States excess of exports over imports in 1915 may easily reach $1,000,000,000, and he declared that the balance of trade in favor of the United States for the opening month of the year is at the rate of $1,500,000,000 a year.

TEN BILLIONS FARM WEALTH.

"The years of greatest prosperity in the United States have been when the balances were largely in our favor," asserted Mr. Farrell. "It is not imprudent to predict that our total farm values for the current year, for the first time in the annals of this or any other country, will pass the $10,000,000,000 mark.

"I feel safe in saying that if you will strain a point just now and trade a little more with each other and talk encouragingly as to conditions, rather than pessimistically, the business of the country will take on a momentum which will carry us into better times, and what is more important, create more employment for labor. Our best effort should be put forth to stimulate activity in business, and do everything practicable to increase the number of working people not only in the industries in this community, but throughout the whole country.

"The elements of prosperity are at hand; the developments from day to day are favorable. The steel trade has been called the barometer of business; there is a marked increase in orders and in operations; more men are obtaining employment and the trade movement is progressing and encouraging, and we should do everything practicable to sustain and advance it."

Mr. Farrell said that up to within a few weeks "it seemed as if the prospects of a material improvement in business were doubtful, but apparently the tide has turned, and each day records a marked improvement in the general situation."

"It seems to me," he continued, "that the time has come when cooperation should manifest itself among business men, to bring about conditions which will result in a larger employment of labor.

SHOULD CREATE WORK.

"As business men let us give our attention to solving industrial unrest by creating work, by toiling and spinning, and creating a normal circulation in the arteries of commerce. In my judgment a campaign for the constructive upbuilding of the business of our country on a scale commensurate with modern needs and opportunities should be inaugurated. Our problems are national, our opportunities are national; let us hear more of national common sense, and see if we can not get back to work. Public sentiment and governmental inclination unmistakably favor a live-and-let-live attitude toward business.

"Whatever may be the political outcome of the European war, it is of vital consequence to America's future position that advantage be taken of the present opportunity to exploit the products of American invention, enterprise, and quality, to establish a firm foothold in foreign markets."

SEES HUGE TRADE BALANCE.

There is a strong sentiment, Mr. Farrell said, for coordinated effort in trade activities. Confidence in the business future of the country, he declared, is growing, and a balance of trade is piling up that will place the business of the country on firm foundations.

"We are the only Nation at the present time in position to assume the rôle of the world's banker," he said. "American dollars will be spent in America this summer as never before. The outlook for raising New York to first place among the financial centers of the world is declared by able bankers to be something substantially more tangible than a dream. Money is plentiful and low rates obtain. Cotton has recovered in price from 6¼ cents in October to fully 8¼ cents per pound to-day. Shipments to date exceed 4,000,000 bales, or two-thirds of the corresponding total of a year ago.

RATE DECISION A HELP.

"The United States is to-day the chief granary of Europe. The prices received should insure for our farming population an unprecedented measure of prosperity, and it has come to be an American axiom that when our farmers are prosperous the whole country prospers.

"The Interstate Commerce Commission's decision in the eastern rate case has raised the drooping spirits of the railroads, as has been tangibly reflected by increased orders for material.

"There is less clamor for indiscriminate governmental suits against corporations, and we may reasonably hope that honestly conducted enterprise will hereafter be allowed to carry on their legitimate functions without fear of political or legal harassment."

RESUME NEW CONSTRUCTION WORK.

Mr. Farrell announced the resumption of new construction work by the Steel Corporation in closing his address in the following words:

"Last year we suspended all operations on new construction in this district; as evidence of our faith in the immediate future we have decided to proceed with that work at once, in order that we may be prepared for greater things."

And as the Government ship-purchase bill has been discussed so flippantly by some of the gentlemen on the other side I shall incorporate as part of my remarks an editorial in the Washington Post of February 7, which I commend to the consideration of all true friends of an American merchant marine in contrast with the views of these gentlemen.

[From the Washington Post, February 7, 1915.]

THE UNITED STATES NEEDS ITS OWN MERCHANT MARINE.

The prolonged debate of the shipping bill in the Senate is focusing the attention of the entire population of the United States upon the need of an American merchant marine and causing the masses of the people to understand the reasons that the Congress has not established one in the past.

Private capital has not provided a merchant marine for this country, because private capital has no motive to enter such field except for gain, and gain could only be obtained for private capital in that field by union and cooperation with foreign shipping combines or else through subsidies from the Government of the United States.

Private capital knows full well that it can not and will not establish an American merchant marine without the aid of public cash contributed in some way, form, or manner by the Government.

It is to the interests of foreign shipping combines that no American merchant marine be established.

It is to the financial interest of powerful representatives in this country of foreign shipping—commercial and financial interests—that no American merchant marine be established unless they can control it, save their European allies from American competition, and make such rates for freight and passengers as will afford them large profits.

They are entirely willing to draw financial aid from our Government if the control of the marine is given them.

The Post is an opponent of Government ownership in all fields of action in which private enterprise and private capital can secure fair and reasonable returns upon such enterprise and capital by rendering efficient, honest, faithful service to the people at fair and reasonable cost to them.

But here is a field in which private capital has failed for 50 years to provide such service for the American people.

Here is a field that American private capital has left open to foreigners for half a century, and now, when it is proposed that its own Government shall become the creator of such a marine, private capital enters a vigorous protest.

The bill before Congress provides that of the capitalization of the proposed corporation the Government shall control 51 per cent and the other 49 per cent may be offered to private capital as an investment.

If private capital desires only investment, here is its opportunity.

If private capital desires to exploit the Government, it can not do it under this bill.

If private capital desires to wax fat by exercising control while the Government furnishes the expense money for the operation of the marine, this is not the bill it wants.

The Government of the United States must furnish the financial aid, and the Government of the United States must control, and if that control means Government ownership of this marine then the Post accepts that principle in this case, knowing full well that private capital can not do the work alone and that the Republic needs the marine.

In the above the Post speaks of private capital that might invest in a merchant marine if the Government would kindly put up the money to operate the ships, give it control, and allow it to establish the routes, fix the rates, and declare itself good dividends.

But the Post can not and does not speak for such private capital, limited to a few hundred millions of dollars at the utmost.

The Post does speak for the billions of dollars of private capital invested in the farms of the United States by millions of honest, hard-working farmers, who have been for years deprived of transportation upon the ocean at reasonable rates.

The Post does speak for billions of dollars of American private capital invested in the timber, the mines, and the manufacturing plants of the United States, capital that is now being severely injured by the lack of a merchant marine owned or controlled by the United States.

The Post does speak on the behalf of the billions of dollars of trade that would come to American manufacturers from the markets of foreign countries if such a marine were created.

The Post does speak for the great prosperity of the millions of American workingmen who would be benefited by the manufacturers being freed from the exactions of foreign shipping combines, owned, operated, and controlled by the same financial forces which are so ready to close foreign markets to our manufacturers.

The Post in its advocacy of a Government-controlled merchant marine stands for the interests of 90 per cent of the private capital of the United States and for those of 99 per cent of the population.

The Clerk read as follows:

Vicksburg National Military Park: For continuing the establishment of the park; compensation of civilian commissioners; engineer and clerk, labor, iron gun carriages, mounting of siege guns, memorials, monuments, markers, and historical tablets giving historical facts, compiled without praise and without censure; maps, surveys, roads, bridges, restoration of earthworks, purchase of lands, purchase and transportation of supplies and materials; and other necessary expenses, $36,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, there has been a good deal said about the effect of freight rates on the price of wheat, and without attempting to analyze what the effect of freight rates is on the price of wheat, I undertake to say that if the Government should by any chance be authorized to buy the ships which the President of the United States proposes to buy, the United States Government could not haul the freight for a less price than it is being hauled now without losing money; and the people of this country would find themselves in the position of having been taxed $40,000,000 to buy ships and taxed many more million dollars to pay the losses incurred by the operation of those ships if the Government undertakes to carry freight at the rates indicated by gentlemen on this floor. Now, everybody knows, because of the war abroad, that the insurance on ships and cargoes is much higher than it would be in normal times. Everybody knows——

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I can not yield. I am only going to take a minute or so. Everybody knows that every ship that carries a cargo abroad is obliged to take a war risk. Everybody knows that every ship that goes abroad is obliged to wait from 20 to 30 days before it can unload, and anybody with any business experience knows that you can not operate a ship of any size, whether it be lying at the dock or sailing on the sea, for less than about $1,000 a day. Now, everybody must realize there are no cargoes to come back, so that a ship leaving an American port for a European port with a cargo must add to the freight charge for the carrying of that cargo not only the cost of moving the cargo from America to Europe, but for every day's delay while waiting for an opportunity to unload and for the operation of the ship on the return voyage without a dollar's worth of freight on board. Now, if the Government of the United States can go into the eleemosynary business, taking the money out of the pockets of the overburdened idle people of America to run a philanthropic institution, and carry freight for half what it costs and tax the people to make up the loss, it is time that somebody somewhere had the courage to protest against the enactment of such a scheme.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph carries an appropriation of $36,000 and the one preceding carries an appropriation of $45,000, making a sum of $81,000 for these national parks, Gettysburg and Vicksburg. Those two battle fields, from the standpoint of the history of the United States, were really the turning points in the Civil War, and probably the most historical as well as significant of any or all the battles fought in our history. The Vicksburg battle was fought, or the siege finally ended, on July 4, 1863, but the battle ended July 3, while the surrender was not until the next day. The Battle of Gettysburg was fought July 1, 2, and 3, the same month and the same year. The two struggles represent probably the greatest effort on the part of the two soldieries in that great strife, and it seems to me that the Government is doing a magnificent thing in maintaining these two historic battle fields as commemorating places of that great struggle. The Battle of Vicksburg was the culmination, however, of a series of battles, designed to open the Mississippi River, one of the objective points of the Union forces. Grant had fought at Belmont and then, on February 6, 1862, he fought at Fort Henry. One of the most important of the early struggles in the West was the Battle of Fort Donelson, on the 16th of February, where Grant received the surrender of Gen. Buckner, up to that time the largest army to surrender in the New World. Then he fought the Battle of Shiloh on April 6 and 7 of the same year. This contest is known as Pittsburgh Landing and was an important engagement, because of the death of Albert Sidney Johnston. The Battle of Shiloh was followed by the Battle of Iuka, September 19; then the Battle of Corinth in October. From October, 1862, on until the middle of the summer in July, 1863, we saw that great piece of strategy on the Mississippi River in an effort to open the Mississippi River. The upper Mississippi had been opened by Island No. 10, and the lower Mississippi had been opened by the Battle of New Orleans in April, 1862. The siege of Vicksburg almost completed the one great object of the Western Army; only a single strategic point was left, which was surrendered soon after. The campaign in the East, of which Gettysburg was the culmination, commenced on the 4th of April, 1862, by the siege of Yorktown, under McClellan. On the 5th of May was fought the Battle of Williamsburg, where Hooker won the title Fighting Joe. After this the struggle at Hanover Court House took place.

Then, on the last day of May, came the Battle of Fair Oaks, or Seven Pines, where Joseph E. Johnston, one of the great generals of the South, was wounded, and his place was taken by the peerless southern leader, Robert E. Lee. Lee had been already in the service as a subordinate officer, but at this place he comes to the head of the command, and from May 31 and June 1, after the Battle of Fair Oaks, we have this tremendous struggle in the east that will see the Battles of Mechanicsville, Gaines Mill, Savage Station, Fraziers Farm, and Malvern Hill. These were followed by the Battles of Antietam, of Fredericksburg, and of Chancellorsville; and finally the struggle culminated in this great Battle of Gettysburg. At Chancellorsville the daring Stonewall Jackson fell. Antietam is said to have induced the emancipation proclamation. So I say that the Nation is doing a magnificent thing when it makes this annual appropriation to maintain these two great fields as public parks, that generations to come may read the records of valiant service for the Nation we love. The battle field of Gettysburg in some ways is the most remarkable park we have in our Nation. I am glad that the Nation has safeguarded it; that we have not permitted the trolley line to go across that battle field, although it does go on the outer edges of it. For the convenience of the public, but not for mere profit, there is a system of magnificent boulevards winding through every part of it, passing points of historic significance, where deeds of daring on either side took place. All along either side of the boulevards we find the markers, and if you are inclined to know what occurred at the various parts of the field you may read the history, printed upon these tablets—a fairly complete account, impartially written, so that we know exactly where the various forces of the two armies were located. Aside from these markers are placed all over the field monuments showing the location of troops. Generally, these are placed by States. One place in the park, as everybody here probably knows, is called "The high-water mark of the Rebellion." As you stand in front of it you read, as it appears in a tablet in the form of an open book, of the remarkable effort of Pickett as he undertook to make this great charge about 4 o'clock in the afternoon of the 3d of July.

It is said that the night before, in the tent of Gen. Lee, a plan was arranged whereby some one was to make an effort to break the center of the Union Army. Two days of severe fighting had ended, one in favor of the Confederate and the other, the second day, in favor of the Union forces. The general in command of the Confederate lines sought to break the Union center, held by Meade with Hancock, who on the second day was wounded. Between the timber, where Gen. Lee was located with his headquarters, and the clump of bushes as Lee's objective stood the barn which played an important part, as it served to divide his forces on the march. It is said that when the general asked for some one to make this daring effort, Gen. Longstreet felt that it would be an assured defeat, and was not in favor of attempting it. Gen. Pickett—who, by the way, was appointed, as I recall, to West Point by President Lincoln when Mr. Lincoln was a Member of this House in 1846—had just arrived with his troops, fresh, not yet having been in the actual fight. He wanted to make the charge. I believe that the description of it that has been given by Mrs. Pickett, known as the child bride of the Confederacy, who had gone through this war with her husband, Gen. Pickett, is one of the most graphic and interesting accounts in all military history. When you stand at the Bloody Angle near the small clump of bushes, the objective point of that gallant band, and hear men who are conversant with what took place describe the heroism that they witnessed at that particular spot on both sides of the struggle, the Blue and the Gray, there is not a man, North or South, that does not feel proud that he is a citizen of the American Nation. [Applause.] I think it is a very wise thing to make this appropriation for those two battle fields as well as for the other battle fields provided for in this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement, care, and maintenance of various reservations, including maintenance, repair, and operation of two motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles to be used only for official purposes, $30,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 65, in line 9, after the word "of" insert the words "one horse-drawn and."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds of Washington has a horse-drawn vehicle as well as two motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles mentioned in this paragraph, and this is to make it possible to maintain that vehicle under this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For care and improvement of the portion of Potomac Park east of the railroad embankment, $10,000.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. May I ask what is intended to be done with that portion of Potomac Park east of the embankment? There was some discussion in the papers, at least, and I think among the officials, of a proposition to provide various kinds of park playgrounds over there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They intend to put in some baseball diamonds this year, and they propose some tennis courts. That is all that will be done at this time.

Mr. MANN. While I do not play tennis, I have noticed with great pleasure that they have put a lot of new tennis courts in west of the Washington Monument grounds, along the roadway there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have 15 or 16 courts there, which are occupied continuously during the time that the season is open.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZERALD. The hope is that eventually Potomac Park will be provided with facilities to be the great recreation center of the city of Washington. A portion of the embankment is particularly well adapted to that purpose. An attempt is being made at present to have the street railroad company run tracks around there, so as to provide some facilities of access to persons who are not able to have their own conveyances.

Mr. MANN. I think it is very desirable to have a street car line of some sort to carry passengers there. But where is the street car line to run? The gentleman said around the embankment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Under the bridge.

Mr. MANN. Where is it expected that the street car line may be put?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will recall——

Mr. MANN. I know the exact situation there fully, as far as the grounds are concerned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is to run around the embankment, to make a loop.

Mr. MANN. Is it to go up to the river on one side and come back on the other?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; not as far as the river, I think, but to make a loop in there.

Mr. MANN. Just to get to the nearest portion of the park, I take it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just around the railroad embankment.

Mr. MANN. They can not get in on the east side of the embankment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is hoped to provide facilities so that persons who desire to do so can come right into the park.

Mr. MANN. They can come in on the west side on the street car line now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the various plans discussed it was proposed eventually, if it met with the approval of Congress, to erect there a shelter—a house which would afford accommodations for persons participating in games—and to have facilities appropriate for such purposes. It was thought it would be possible, if Congress approved, to establish a public golf course, a number of baseball diamonds, a number of tennis courts, places for croquet, and other out-of-door sports. And while no attempt is to be made to expend any large sum of money at any one time, it is thought that by degrees these facilities may be provided at very small expense, so that the city may utilize a very desirable public place for public amusement purposes. I think it would be a great boon to Washington to have such a recreation place in one of the most delightful parts of the city, and it would be an improvement that would probably meet with the approval of the people of the country generally. The sentiment of communities has changed largely in recent years, and more and more the feeling is growing that the public parks should be used for recreation purposes.

It is to be hoped that by degress the Potomac Park will be utilized in the manner most desirable.

Mr. Chairman, the House is to recess at 5.30, and I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21318, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BURGESS, indefinitely, on account of illness of his wife.

To Mr. THACHER, for six days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 19424. An act to extend the time for the completion of the municipal bridge at St. Louis, Mo.;

H. R. 20818. An act to authorize the Brunot Island Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the back channel of the Ohio River; and

H. R. 20933. An act extending the time for completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.," approved August 23, 1912.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR THIS EVENING.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETERSON] to preside as Speaker pro tempore to-night.

INCREASING PRICES AND COSTS.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement by the Hon. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH before the Commission on Industrial Relations in the city of New York, February 5, 1915, on the subject of increasing prices and costs, and suggesting a remedy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] before the Commission on Industrial Relations in the city of New York, February 5, 1915. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, the House stands in recess until 8 o'clock to-night.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. PETERSON, at 8 o'clock p. m.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order, the Clerk will call the bills on the Private Calendar, beginning with Calendar No. 405.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen be given the opportunity to object after the title of the bill is read, and then, if they desire to object again after the bill is read, they will have that opportunity also. That has been the custom that has usually been adopted recently, when we have been proceeding in this way by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Private Calendar, beginning with No. 405.

MANDAN TOWN AND COUNTRY CLUB.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill S. 5254, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to sell and convey a certain tract of land to the Mandan Town and Country Club.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell and convey to the Mandan Town and Country Club, of Mandan, N. Dak., at a price of not less than $30 per acre, the below-described land: In section 33, in township 139 north, of range 81 west, of the fifth principal meridian, beginning at a point 1,120 feet due east from the northwest corner of the southeast quarter of said section 33; thence running due south 400 feet; thence running due east 300 feet; thence running due north 400 feet; thence running due west 300 feet to the starting point, containing 2¾ acres, more or less: Provided, That if the said Mandan Town and Country Club should at any time attempt to use said tract of land for any other purpose than that of recreation or attempt to sell, lease, or convey said tract, the land shall revert to the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the Government paid $30 an acre for this land at what time?

Mr. NORTON. About three years ago.

Mr. MANN. That is, they paid $30 an acre for a tract of land including this land?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; 160 acres in all. This tract of 160 acres of land was, I believe, donated to the Government by citizens of Mandan.

Mr. MANN. The report says that the Government paid that for it. Of course I do not know what the facts may be.

Mr. NORTON. The whole tract is included in the land set apart for the Northern Great Plains Experiment Station, located near Mandan, N. Dak.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says the citizens there purchased the land?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; I am under that impression.

Mr. MANN. And donated it to the Government?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The report, then, is incorrect when it says that the price paid by the Government was $30 an acre?

Mr. NORTON. I do not understand that that is the way the Government at first secured title.

Mr. MANN. Is this land worth any more or less than the average of the land?

Mr. NORTON. This particular tract lies along on the south side of the Heart River, about three-quarters of a mile from the Northern Pacific depot in Mandan. It is about a quarter of a mile directly north from the experiment-station buildings. It is rough, hilly land. It is not suitable for use by the experiment station. Last spring I went over this particular tract of land with Mr. Peterson, who is in charge of the station, and examined it very carefully. At that time Mr. Peterson stated that the station had other grounds sufficient for its use, and that he did not believe that the station would ever have use for this particular tract on account of its topography and the very poor character of its soil. He was very much in favor of having it transferred to the Town and Country Club, which has a tract of land for its club grounds just across the river and directly north of this small tract.

Mr. MANN. The title of this land is not in the Agricultural Department?

Mr. NORTON. No; the title of the land is in the United States.

Mr. MANN. It is under the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; it is under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MANN. In some cases it would be the Secretary of Agriculture that would make the deed if a deed were made. I notice the bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior, who, it is true, usually makes deeds to Government lands, is to make the deed to this land.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that last spring I took up this particular question with the Secretary of Agriculture, with the Secretary of the Interior, and with the Attorney General. I asked the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture whether the bill should provide that the transfer be made by the Secretary of the Interior or by the Secretary of Agriculture. The Attorney General wrote me to the effect that either the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior might transfer this title, and that perhaps, according to custom, it would be best to have the authority to make the transfer given to the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question. When was this land purchased by the Government?

Mr. NORTON. About three years ago.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. From whom was it purchased?

Mr. NORTON. As I now recall that matter, the land was purchased by the citizens of Mandan and donated to the Federal Government.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is not in keeping with the report of the committee. The committee reports that the bill provides that the land out of which this land shall be sold shall not be at less than $30 per acre, the price paid by the Government at the time of establishing this station.

Mr. NORTON. I understand that, but I doubt whether that is altogether correct. It may be that the citizens purchasing this land for the experiment station were subsequently partly reimbursed. However, I think that that is quite immaterial as far as the transfer provided for in this bill is concerned.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What improvements have been put upon it by the Government since its purchase?

Mr. NORTON. No improvements whatever. The Mandan Town and Country Club desires this particular tract of land for the purpose of building its clubhouse upon it. This tract of land is higher and is a much more sanitary, pleasing, and beautiful site for the location of a clubhouse than is the land just north of the river now owned by the Town and Country Club.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Two and three-quarter acres of land will not make a very extensive country club.

Mr. NORTON. Well, the Town and Country Club owns about 10 acres just north of this——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I see.

Mr. NORTON. North of the river; the members of the Town and Country Club plan to construct a footbridge across the river, which at that point is probably 60 or 70 feet wide.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. When did the gentleman say the Government bought it?

Mr. NORTON. Well, the Government acquired title to it about three years ago. The northern great plains experiment station has been built up out there during the last three years.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the experiment station own any other property adjoining it?

Mr. NORTON. Yes, sir. In connection with the State agricultural college they have 160 acres of school land, but the title to that is in the State of North Dakota. It is being used by the experiment station there in the work it is now doing.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is this part of the purchase of more land or was this particular tract bought by itself?

Mr. NORTON. It is part of a 160-acre tract that was transferred to the Federal Government for an experiment station. The station has 320 acres altogether that it is now using in its work.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that instead of gentlemen asking to reconsider bills and lay that motion on the table, at the end of the session the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] make that request for all the bills and save that time.

SARAH A. CLINTON AND MARIE STEINBERG.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 604) for the relief of Sarah A. Clinton and Marie Steinberg.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sarah A. Clinton the sum of $400 and to Marie Steinberg the sum of $400, in repayment of the purchase money paid in such amounts to the Department of the Interior by the said Sarah A. Clinton and the said Marie Steinberg, respectively, in connection with timber and stone entries made by the said parties and subsequently relinquished by them, the said entries being particularly described as follows:

Timber and stone entry of Sarah A. Clinton, No. 6,011; Lewiston, Idaho, serial No. 32; for the southeast quarter of section 25, township 40 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian.

Timber and stone entry of Marie Steinberg, No. 6,010; Lewiston, Idaho, serial No. 030; for the north half of the southeast quarter and the north half of the southwest quarter of section 11, township 39 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

VIRGINIA MILITARY INSTITUTE, LEXINGTON, VA.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 544) for the relief of the Virginia Military Institute, of Lexington, Va.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 4, strike out lines 5 and 6.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CAPT. FRANK KINSEY HILL.

The next business in order was the bill (H. R. 17954) for the relief of Frank Kinsey Hill, captain on the retired list of the United States Navy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CAPT. JOHN HENRY GIBBQNS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17985) for the relief of John Henry Gibbons, captain on the retired list of the United States Navy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FREDERICK H. LEMLY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16823) to appoint Frederick H. Lemly a passed assistant paymaster on the active list of the United States Navy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

HEIRS OF THOMAS ROGERS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8013) for the relief of the heirs of Thomas Rogers, deceased.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of Thomas Rogers, deceased, late postmaster at Sheffield, Jackson County, Mo., the sum of $147.95, for postage stamps stolen from his office on the night of October 25, 1893.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CHESTER D. SWIFT.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill S. 1880, an act for the relief of Chester D. Swift.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Chester D. Swift, of Canton, Ohio, or his legal representatives, the sum of $1,100, as full compensation for permanent injuries received by the said Chester D. Swift on or about the 15th day of September, 1910, while in the performance of his duties as a clerk in the Post Office Department, employed and assigned to duty in the Canton (Ohio) post office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WHITACRE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection for a moment, please.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] reserve his objection?

Mr. WHITACRE. May I ask the gentleman to withdraw the objection for a moment until I make a statement in respect to this case?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Florida withhold his objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, there is a bill on this calendar, if I may make a statement, for the payment to the Virginia Military Institute of a sum of money for damage and destruction of its library, scientific apparatus, and the quarters of its professors, and it has been objected to. I know it is absolutely just and proper, and I shall object to all these bills if that objection stands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Florida object?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I did.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I would like to make a statement concerning this session of the House. There are a good many bills on the calendar in which gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber are quite deeply interested. This is an unusual session of the House. There is no opportunity to debate bills. The session was granted for the sole purpose of considering bills to which no gentleman would object. It was for the purpose of eliminating those bills which are so well understood that there would be no objection by anybody. I had hoped there would be an opportunity to consider and act upon debatable bills, but it seems we are not to have such opportunity. It has not been a very easy matter to secure consideration for these bills that we are considering now. It is late in the session, and it was the hope of the Committee on Claims, at least, both Democrats and Republicans, who have done a great deal of work, and have done a great deal of investigating, that gentlemen would not treat us in this manner. We have tried to be absolutely fair and absolutely nonpartisan. Such a thing as any political consideration has never entered the door of the committee room since I have been there. We have all tried to do the best we could to accommodate both sides of the House and put bills on the calendar which our colleagues are pressing, and I do not think it is treating the committee with perfect fairness for gentlemen to object, unless they feel that the bills objected to ought not to pass. I submit it is not treating one of the active committees of the House justly for gentlemen to object to its bills because some other bill has been objected to, and I hope my friend from Florida will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not my friend from North Carolina [Mr. POU] think he ought to lecture somebody else instead of me?

Mr. POU. I hope I am not lecturing anybody; I would not presume to do that and trust what I have said will not be so construed. I am asking gentlemen not to treat the committee in that manner.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I have not a bill on this calendar in which I am interested or in which any constituent of mine is interested. But if that be the game, I do not see why one should pass without the other. Here is a bill involving the destruction of valuable apparatus and books, a very meritorious case, and it is objected to without an explanation.

Mr. POU. The gentleman has been here a long time, and there are a great number of bills that gentlemen are going to object to because some of them have not had time to look into them. It does not seem to me the gentleman should object to all the bills reported from the Committee on Claims, a committee that has tried to do honest work, and not let any of the bills pass because some particular bill has been objected to.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I think the House is entitled to some explanation when an objection is made to a bill of that character. I think gentlemen might at least reserve the objection and give those who know something about the bill an opportunity to explain it. But to just ruthlessly object to bills without an explanation——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes; if I have the floor. I did not think I had.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the case instanced by the gentleman, did anybody desire the gentleman who made the objection to reserve his objection so that the claim might be presented to the House?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I did not hear anybody do it. But I want to say this: This matter has gone on, and when one Member objects that settles it, and such bills go through as certain Members want and those they do not want do not go through. Now, it is unfair to make fish out of one and fowl out of the other. We ought to have a square deal here and let these matters be considered upon their merits. If they ought to pass, they ought to pass.

If they ought not to pass, then they ought to be defeated. That is all there is about it. But I am not going to be mean about it. I am not going to do what others have done. I will withdraw the objection to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws his objection. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CHRIS KUPPLER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2304) for the relief of Chris Kuppler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Chris Kuppler, of Seattle, Wash., the sum of $2,137.21, and said sum of $2,137.21 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in payment of the amount withheld from him as liquidated damages under a certain contract for the construction of the United States executive mansion, at Juneau, Alaska, entered into by and between the duly authorized officer of the Treasury Department, representing the United States of America on the one part, and the said Chris Kuppler on the other part, dated August 1, 1912.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FREDERICK H. LEMLY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3561) to appoint Frederick H. Lemly a passed assistant paymaster on the active list of the United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Frederick H. Lemly a passed assistant paymaster on the active list of the Navy, to take the same rank and position on the list of passed assistant paymasters that he occupied on March 5, 1908 (the date upon which his resignation as a passed assistant paymaster in the Navy was accepted): Provided, That the said Frederick H. Lemly shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy by the usual examinations required for promotion to the grade of passed assistant paymaster his fitness in all respects to perform the duties thereof: Provided further, That the said Frederick H. Lemly shall be carried as additional to the number of the grade to which he may be appointed or at any time thereafter promoted: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed as entitling said Frederick H. Lemly to any pay or allowances from the date of the acceptance of his resignation herein referred to and the date of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment, to allow me to ask a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is this one of the line of cases similar to those that the gentleman objected to a few moments ago?

Mr. MANN. It is; and while I do not know that it is covered by the naval bill—I see that it is not. This is a resignation; but it is along the same line.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The former cases were plucking-board cases, were they not?

Mr. MANN. Not all of them.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I mean Nos. 411 and 412 on the Private Calendar, to which the gentleman objected.

Mr. MANN. I do not recall now whether those were plucking-board cases or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. They were.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They were covered, in a measure, by the provision in the naval bill, were they not?

Mr. MANN. I assume so; but that was not the reason I objected.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman has a general objection to these cases?

Mr. MANN. I do not believe it is the province of the legislative branch of the Government to restore men to the Army and the Navy as a matter of special favoritism. That is the ground of my objection. I do not object to general laws on the subject. In fact, I think this, as a particular case, has a good deal of merit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

JOHN T. HAINES.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 543) to correct the military recorod of John T. Haines.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John T. Haines, deceased, who was a captain in the Eleventh Regiment United States Cavalry, and who was nominated by the President for appointment as major of Cavalry to rank from the 3d day of March, 1911, said nomination being confirmed by the Senate after the death of said Haines, which occurred after his nomination, shall hereafter be held and considered to have become a major of Cavalry in the service of the United States on the 3d day of March, 1911, and to have held that office until the date of his death; and the President is hereby authorized to issue a commission as major of Cavalry in the name of John T. Haines with rank to date from March 3, 1911.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Illinois if this is not a special proposition?

Mr MANN. No; this is a case where a man was nominated for an advanced rank which he had earned, and there was some delay in his confirmation, and before he was confirmed he died. This simply gives him the commission as of the date of his nomination to the rank which he had earned. That is the distinction.

Mr. HAY. It helps the widow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CLIFFORD HILDEBRANDT TATE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 137) to reinstate Clifford Hildebrandt Tate as a cadet at the United States Military Academy.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I will withhold the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman reserves his objection.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I should like to invite the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that this case, as set out in the report, is that of a young cadet whose application to be turned back in the next class in the academy by reason of failure in academic studies was denied. The report invites attention to the result of similar cases, in which other cadets were interested at that time, which cadets were given the opportunity that is now by this bill proposed for Cadet Tate.

Now, in a letter from the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy at West Point to Senator TILLMAN he sets out in the case of another cadet whose case was before this body some time ago that "there is no part of our instruction more important to that end than discipline and obedience to regulations," and the report submitted to accompany this Senate joint resolution says that Cadet Tate was particularly efficient and had a high rating in military conduct and discipline, and it is thought by the committee that he might therefore be given another opportunity to make up for his deficiency in the academic course.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the distinguished gentleman from Vermont that here is a case where Cadet Tate, of West Point, failed in his studies. It was within the power of the authorities at the academy to put him back into the next class or dismiss him. I can not see how it is practicable for this legislative body or any other to determine, when a cadet at West Point fails in his studies, whether he shall be dismissed or put back into another class. It is perfectly evident that if Congress should attempt to restore every boy who fails in his studies at the Military Academy, if it was given out that we would undertake to cover that subject, we might be kept busy, but would not do much justice.

Of course, I appreciate the desire of the boy to finish out his course at the Military Academy. That is commendable; but, after all, I do not see how Congress can undertake to say whether a boy is competent to go ahead as a student at the academy and become a military officer. This boy may be perfectly competent; I will assume that he is; but I do not think it is our province and I do not think we ought to commence the practice.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I only invited attention to the fact that this young man seems to have qualified in all the other essentials that go to make a soldier and a military man. Several men in history who were great officers, who were more or less important in times past, have failed in their requisites at the academy.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly. Some people who fail in examinations make students and officers thereafter; but that is something to be considered by the officials at the academy and not by Congress. Since my friend from Vermont has called attention to this case, I had already read the report and have done everything in my mind to influence my judgment, but with some degree of stubbornness I adhere to my judgment, and I am not willing to allow the bill to pass by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

ISAAC BETHURUM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill S. 5970, an act for the relief of Isaac Bethurum.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Isaac Bethurum, who was a private of Company B, Fifteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 17th day of October, 1865: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or pension shall accrue to him prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE P. CHANDLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1703) for the relief of George P. Chandler.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws George P. Chandler, who was a private in Company F, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 27th day of September, 1864: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we usually carry in these bills a provision that no back pay, allowances, or other emoluments shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act. This bill provides that no pension shall accrue by the passage of the act, and none would accrue anyhow.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill, and I see that the Military Committee reported it without amendment. I do not think from what I know of this case that the man would be entitled to any back pay anyway. I would not like to have the bill amended under the present circumstances.

Mr. STAFFORD. The present circumstances are very favorable since the adjournment of the Senate to-night.

Mr. HAY. I do not know whether the circumstances are favorable to this bill going back or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES RICHTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 145) for the relief of Charles Richter.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Charles Richter, alias Herman Wittman, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company K, Thirty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BYRON W. CANFIELD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1044) for the relief of Byron W. Canfield.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Byron W. Canfield, late captain Company E, One hundred and fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 30th day of January, 1863: Provided, however, That no pension, bounty, pay, or other pecuniary emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES M. CLARK.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2882) for the relief of Charles M. Clark.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Charles M. Clark, who was a private of Company G, Third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 17th day of October, 1863: Provided, That other than as above set forth no pay, bounty, pension, or other emoluments shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. The Committee on Military Affairs has been very careful, as a general rule, in reporting these bills. I appreciate the conditions that exist, possibly, in reporting a number of Senate bills. The committee used to insert in all of these bills a provision that there should be no back pay, bounty, or other emolument allowed by reason of the passage of the bill, the intention being to confer a pensionable status. The bill provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, and so forth, and then follows with a proviso to the effect "that other than as above set forth no pay, bounty, pension, or other emolument shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act."

Having conferred all of the benefits that any law would confer, then they provide an alternative. This is a Senate bill. Of course, the proviso means absolutely nothing, and I suppose it was inserted in a sloppy way in the other body by inadvertence and not by design, though some skillful man might insert such a provision by design, to give it the appearance of providing what he wanted, when it did not provide anything.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A. J. HENRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18166) to correct the military record of A. J. Henry.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That A. J. Henry, who enlisted in Company B, Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and who was commissioned second lieutenant by the governor of Illinois on July 3, 1865, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered out from the military service of the United States with the rank of second lieutenant.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 7, after the word "been," insert the words "mustered in and," and on line 9, at the beginning of the line, insert the words "upon said date," so that as amended the bill will read: "shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered in and mustered out from the military service of the United States upon said date with the rank of second lieutenant."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MANN. I will withhold the objection for a moment.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I would be glad if the gentleman would indicate what objection he has to the passage of this bill.

Mr. MANN. Here is a man who was given a commission as lieutenant. He never received the commission. He never was actually appointed lieutenant. This bill proposes to say that he was a lieutenant. That is falsifying the record. He never was. The bill says he is to be considered as mustered in and mustered out of the rank of second lieutenant. He was not a second lieutenant. Why should we falsify the record and say that he was?

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, also reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill if it is the purpose of the bill to give the soldier a pensionable status, so that he can draw a pension?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. No. The purpose of the bill is simply to correct his military record along the lines indicated in the bill. There is no charge of desertion against this soldier. He has an absolutely clear record. It is to correct his record, but not for desertion. I should think it would be refreshing to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], as well as to all others on this floor, to once in a while consider a bill of this kind to correct the record of a soldier when it is not for the purpose of removing the charge of desertion.

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] particularly to the fact that Mr. Henry fought in 37 battles. He served in the Army for over four years, and I wish to call particular attention to the fact that in his discharge papers, as shown here on page 2 of the report, there is the statement that he was discharged by reason of gunshot wounds in the head and the right foot, received in the Battle of Smithfield, N. C., on March 20, 1865. That was one of the last battles of the war. The discharge further states that he is unfit for the veteran reserve corps. When he was discharged from the hospital at New York Harbor he was even at that time unfit for further service, and the report shows that when he left the hospital he left it on crutches. It is true that he did not get mustered in under the commission that had been given to him by the governor of Illinois on account of gallantry displayed on the field of battle, but surely the circumstances of the case will excuse him.

Mr. MANN. Certainly he was not at any fault himself. He has a good record, but I do not think that is any reason why now we should say that he was a second lieutenant, when he was not. Lots of good men serve in the Army who would like to be called second lieutenants.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Is this soldier now receiving a pension?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes; he is receiving a very small pension. This bill will not change his pension. It is not a question of dollars and cents. It is a question of doing justice, even at this late day, to one who rendered great service to his country. I want to say this, that the request for this legislation did not come from this grand old soldier.

He did not ask for this. His sons—splendid young men, who served with honor in the Spanish-American War—asked for it. It seemed to them that their father, who had fought in 37 battles and had a record equaled by very few men who served in the Civil War, should be entitled to this recognition from his country—rather belated, it is true. The act of heroism for which the governor of Illinois extended the honor to him of giving him a commission of second lieutenant was at the Battle of Bentonville—sometimes called Smithfield—North Carolina. He was ordered into and helped lead a charge of his regiment against two lines of Infantry with 19 pieces of artillery. According to the report of Capt. Catlett, the regiment was at one time about to break. The left of the company gave away. Henry was in the front rank on the right. He rushed to the left, rallied the men, and led them to victory. In spite of the fact that he was wounded in the head and in the foot he used his gun for a crutch and stayed with his company. On the way back one of his comrades was found lying beside a log, and in spite of the fact that Henry was wounded he stopped, put this man Jones, his comrade, on his back, and hobbled with him back to the camp, again using his gun for a crutch. When they got back they found that Jones had only a flesh wound, while Henry, who had carried him under great difficulties, had a wound in the foot and in the head, and the foot wound was so serious and so badly swollen that they had to cut his shoe off to remove it. That is the kind of soldier he was. Thank God, no one can rob him of this wonderful fighting record. It seems there would not be any dangerous or improper precedent established by the passage of an act such as this, and it would be a very proper recognition of a very gallant soldier, one who rendered not only faithful service, but long and distinguished service.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that while everything good could be said about the soldier, yet he was mustered out of the service as an enlisted man before having received the commission. Now, it would be wholly improper for us to falsify the record and say he was a second lieutenant when he was not so in fact; and the fact that he had such good service is not a sufficient reason for our making false history.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. What about these other bills that are passed here from time to time to correct military records where men have deserted?

Mr. MANN. We have not passed such a bill for years, except to say that in the administration of the pension laws a man shall be considered as having been honorably discharged, for the very reason that Congress determined, and so did the executive departments and the President, some years ago, that it would not falsify the records by saying that a man had been honorably discharged when he had not been.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in this bill we did not use the words "in the administration of the pension laws," and so forth, and I think that is worthy of note. There was no money consideration involved in this. We are not asking Congress to put him in a position where he can pull down some money from the Government; far from it. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

MRS. R. S. ABERNETHY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18572) granting permission to Mrs. R. S. Abernethy, of Lincolnton, N. C., to accept the decoration of the bust of Bolivar.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Mrs. R. S. Abernethy, of Lincolnton, N. C., be authorized to accept the decoration of the bust of Bolivar tendered by the Government of Venezuela to her brother, Lieut. Commander Rufus Z. Johnston, United States Navy, and that the Department of State be permitted to deliver the decoration to Mrs. R. S. Abernethy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will bear with me just a moment, I wish to say that I have objected on several occasions to bills of this character, which propose to authorize an officer of the Government to accept a present or decoration proffered by a foreign Government. The Constitution forbids that being done except by permission of Congress.

In 1910, in a report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, it was shown that there were pending before that committee at that time 150 cases where a decoration or gift had been offered prior to June 23, 1906, and from that down 200 cases where similar requests were pending for decorations or gifts which had been tendered between June 23, 1906, and February 15, 1910, so that up to the 15th of February, 1910, there were 315 cases pending in the State Department, coming within the scope of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, where it was thought they were cases such as ought to be granted. I reserved the right to object to this bill because it looked to me as though it were picking out one among several hundred—because I believe there are now several hundred in the State Department—and authorizing somebody to accept that gift and not giving the same authority to other people; and it looked like a reflection upon the other people, who did not get the authority. But I am not going to object any more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. P. H. UBERROTH AND GUNNER CARL JOHANNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1304) authorizing the Department of State to deliver to Capt. P. H. Uberroth, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, and Gunner Carl Johannson, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, watches tendered to them by the Canadian Government.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Capt. P. H. Uberroth, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, and Gunner Carl Johannson, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept watches tendered to them by the Canadian Government, through the Department of State of the United States, in recognition of their services in saving the lives of the crew of the wrecked British schooner S. A. Fownes on December 16, 1910.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN L. MAILE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13029) for the relief of John L. Maile.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. MANN. I object, but I will reserve my objection and let the bill be read.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, John L. Maile is a minister of the gospel, a splendid man, a good citizen, 70 or 71 years of age. He served for four years fighting for his country during the Civil War. His record was a most honorable one, and with permission I will read extracts from his letters, published in the report. They tell the whole story. They are from letters addressed to me, dated October 21, 1913. I read:

THE NEW OLIVET CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH,
Los Angeles, October 21, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM D. STEPHENS, M. C.,
Los Angeles, Cal.

DEAR SIR: As giving information pertinent to the inclosed request for congressional action, I respectfully submit the following statements illustrative of my services as a soldier of the Civil War:

From the engagement at Port Royal, S. C., on November 7, 1861, to the second day's fight in the Battle of the Wilderness on May 6, 1864, my regiment was in 21 battles. On account of being on detached duty I was absent from three of these conflicts.

In the East Tennessee campaign in 1863, and also in Mississippi, I was bearer of the regimental battle flag, a position at the front of the column and at the extreme right of the line of battle. This flag was a favorite target of the enemy, for it marked the position of the regiment to the Union commander.

In South Carolina I was for a time on special detail in the Naval Signal Corps, and while the regiment was at Annapolis I was a member of the provost guard at Gen. Burnside's headquarters.

When Col. Ely requested me to stand for examination for a commission as an officer I hesitated on account of incomplete education, having enlisted just past 17.

But I was given two weeks for study in tactics, and examination in history and general information was met by the results of previous reading and study.

My experience in five Confederate prisons was exceedingly severe, as indicated in my book entitled "Prison Life in Andersonville." It was Gen. Grant who said that the soldiers who suffered and died in the prisons as truly served their country in so doing as did those who gave up their life on the field of battle.

As compared with other nations, our Government has been exceedingly generous with its citizen soldiery. For one I sincerely appreciate all that has been done in the way of pensions and homes for the old veterans who are in need of such a place of care.

In asking for the fulfillment in my own case of the recommendation of a very able board of military examiners I feel that I am within the trend of action which has distinguished the careful and able work which is being performed by our Representatives in Congress who are especially interested in the survivors of the great Civil War.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN L. MAILE.

RECORD OF SERVICE.

On September 2, 1861, I enlisted in Company F, Eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered out on June 13, 1865. I served with my regiment in the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Virginia, Kentucky, Mississippi, Tennessee, and again in Virginia.

While my regiment was stationed at Annapolis, Md., in April, 1864, request was received from the Secretary of War that a member of this regiment stand for examination for a commission in the service of colored troops. Col. Ralph Ely, commander of the Eighth Michigan appointed John L. Maile to this opportunity.

On May 3, 1864, I passed the required examination before the military board of which Gen. Silas Casey, author of Casey's Tactics, was the president, at Washington, D. C.

The examination concluded, I was instructed by the board to return to my regiment and await orders.

Meanwhile my regiment, with the Ninth Army Corps, of which it was a part, had gone from Annapolis to the Rapidan River in Virginia in readiness for the coming great campaign as planned by Gen. Grant. On May 4, 1864, I rejoined my regiment at Rappahannock Station, and on May 6, in the Battle of the Wilderness, I, with a thousand others, was cut off and taken a prisoner.

Soon after my capture orders were received from the War Department at Washington, D. C., for me to proceed to Baltimore for muster in as a second lieutenant in the Twenty-eighth Regiment United States Colored Troops. Being a prisoner in the hands of the enemy, I, of course, could not comply.

My request, respectfully, is that Congress be asked to pass a resolution which shall be filed with the War Department bestowing upon me the rank of second lieutenant in accordance with the findings of the board of examination.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN L. MAILE.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Maile is entitled to a pension, ought to have one, but my impression is he is not drawing a pension. He is not asking for any bounty, for any back pay, or for any pensionable status. He has asked, under the wording of the act proposed, as amended by the committee, to be considered as having been a second lieutenant after his commission was sent to the field. It seems to me to be a gratification that we can well give to this old man. It is without any cost whatever to the Government and without despoiling the record in the least.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is not a case of granting a man a pension or a pensionable status. He has that now. He was mustered out, honorably discharged from service as a private from the company mentioned, June 13, 1865, in pursuance of orders from the department for a reduction of the Army. He was a private; he was mustered out as a private. It is true that very likely if he had not been in prison he would have received a commission as second lieutenant. That is a very unfortunate circumstance, but that is no excuse for our falsifying the records of the War Department and say that he was a second lieutenant when he was not a second lieutenant.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. There are lots of men in the Army who were worthy of being second lieutenants, who earned the place as far as service was concerned, but we can not give them title, because that is making a false record. The gentleman says it does not cost anything. It costs the truth to do it.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Chairman, I think I was right in my statement——

Mr. MANN. I did not deny that.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. I know the gentleman did not mean to challenge my statement. The commission actually went to the field to find the soldier. The soldier was in prison and could not be found and the commission was returned to headquarters, and we are not asking that any record be changed now. There is no falsification of any record whatever. It is only that hereafter the man be considered as having held a second lieutenantcy after having been examined and passed and his commission issued, but never delivered because the soldier was a prisoner of war. Nothing is to come from it except the gratification of an old man who has served this country well, not only in time of battle through four long years of war, but throughout the 50 years since the war as a remarkably worthy citizen of the United States. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt the bill will pass whenever it comes up for regular passage, but I had hoped it would pass to-night.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the bill says he shall be held as having the rate of second lieutenant. Some gentlemen may not care anything about the truth of history. Of course, history is very often incorrectly written, but this is deliberately falsifying it, and I will not do it, and I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

WILLIAM HAM.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11839) granting an honorable discharge to William Ham.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the records of the War Department in the case of William Ham, late of Company F, One hundred and sixty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, to be amended, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The substitute was read as follows:

Strike out all the matter just read from lines 3 to 17, inclusive, and insert the following:

That in the administration of the laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William Ham, who was a private in Company F, Eleventh Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 14th day of November, 1865: Provided, That no back pension, back pay, back allowances, or other emoluments shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to know the length of service performed by this man and the facts upon which this proposed relief is asked.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is all set forth in the report.

Mr. FARR. He served three years.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report has been printed for several months.

Mr. LANGLEY. I know that, but I have not read it. On what grounds is the bill based? Why was he not given a discharge?

Mr. FARR. He participated in a number of battles and was wounded.

Mr. LANGLEY. Of course, but what were the circumstances regarding his failure to get a discharge?

Mr. FARR. He had a little quarrel with a superior officer 50 years ago, and was court-martialed and was imprisoned, and has suffered a loss of $10 a month in pension ever since.

Mr. LANGLEY. All right; I will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of William Ham."

AUGUSTUS DUDLEY HUBBELL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13756) for the relief of Augustus Dudley Hubbell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing upon the rolls and records of the War Department against the name of Augustus Dudley Hubbell, late of Company C, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and to issue to said Augustus Dudley Hubbell a certificate of honorable discharge from said company and regiment.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That in the administration of the pension laws Augustus Dudley Hubbell shall be hereafter held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in Company C, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, on April 4, 1864: Provided, That no back pension, back pay, or back allowances shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN HEALY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12369) for the relief of John Healy.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws John Healy shall be hereafter held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in Company H, Fourteenth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, on August 15, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 8, after the word "no," insert the word "back."

Line 8, after the word "pension," insert the words "back pay, back allowances, or other emoluments."

Line 10, strike out the words "prior to" and insert the words "by virtue of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to know something about this case. I have not had a chance to examine the report. Whose bill is it, and what are the facts?

Mr. MANN. The bill was introduced by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY].

Mr. LANGLEY. I reserve the right to object until I hear some explanation of the bill. I have had a number of bills of this character, and I think I have presented some of the strongest cases ever presented to the Committee on Military Affairs. Yet I have been unable to get a single one of them before the House. I do not desire to object to anybody else's bill on that account, but I do want to know something about the facts in these other cases, how they manage to get in, and how they manage to get a report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. I will say that in this case the man enlisted in 1861 and served until 1865, about the time the war was over, when four or five of them dropped out. I think it was a case where possibly they came home and felt too good and got a little too much spirit.

Mr. LANGLEY. Of course that was an unusually long period of service and perhaps a pardonable cause under the circumstances, but the cases I have in mind had a sufficient length of service to make them equally meritorious from that viewpoint, and they had a much more justifiable reason for not returning. One of them was practically blind.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me, from my reading of this report, that it is one of the best cases I have been able to find.

Mr. MANN. This is a really meritorious case. Some of them are not.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says it is meritorious, I will withdraw the objection. It is such a rare occurrence for him to say that of this class of bills.

Mr. TAGGART. How long did this man serve?

Mr. FOSTER. Until September, 1865.

Mr. TAGGART. He is entitled to an honorable discharge without any action of Congress if he served until September, 1865, provided he served six months honorably before the 1st day of May, 1865.

Mr. FOSTER. He reenlisted.

Mr. MANN. He made application, which was denied on the ground that he did not complete his service, and that it was not established that he was prevented from completing it by reason of disability incurred in the line of duty.

Mr. FOSTER. His father died. He had a brother in the Navy.

Mr. LANGLEY. Most all of the cases I have had brought to my attention were cases of the kind referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]; that is, where the soldier could not prove that the disability preventing his return was due to the service.

Mr. MANN. I know nothing about it except what is stated in the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting in line 6, after the words "Company H," the words "First Battalion."

I will say to the gentleman that another amendment is needed to give a correct description of his service, according to the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 6, after the letter "H," insert the words "First Battalion."

Mr. HAY. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. MANN. His service is described in the bill as—

A private in Company H, Fourteenth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry.

It should read:

Company H, First Battalion, Fourteenth Regiment, United States Infantry.

It was not a volunteer regiment.

Mr. HAY. I do not think it is necessary to put in the battalion, because if he was a member of Company H, Fourteenth Infantry, that describes it sufficiently.

Mr. MANN. He was in Company H of the Second Battalion, and also in the First Battalion. He was discharged from Company H of the First Battalion. I think it is necessary to give a correct discription.

Mr. HAY. If he was a member of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment, I think that is sufficient.

Mr. MANN. I will read what the report says:

The records show, however, that one John Healey enlisted July 18, 1861, at Providence, R. I., and was assigned to Company H, Second Battalion, Fourteenth United States Infantry; that he was transferred to Company H, First Battalion, Fourteenth Infantry, April 30, 1862, and was honorably discharged February 15, 1864, as a private; that he reenlisted February 15, 1864, in the same company and regiment, and that he deserted August 15, 1865, at Hart Island, N. Y. He did not thereafter return to his company, although he owed service until February 14, 1867, or report his whereabouts or the cause of his absence to the military authorities of the United States.

Mr. HAY. That is correct; but I never knew that they had two Companies H in the same regiment. I think whoever drew that report was wrong.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the word "volunteer" in line 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Connecticut is not here. I do not suppose it makes much difference as to how the name is spelled, but in the bill it is spelled "Healy" two or three times and in the report it is spelled "Healey" twelve or fifteen times. I guess we can take chances on that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES V. WELLS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13373) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles V. Wells.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles V. Wells, late of Battery C, Fifth Regiment United States Artillery, and grant him an honorable discharge as of such service.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That in the administration of the pension laws or other laws conferring benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers of the Civil War, Charles V. Wells, formerly of Battery C, Fifth Regiment United States Artillery, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from said company and regiment on October 6, 1865: Provided, That no back pension, back pay, or back allowances shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Charles V. Wells."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the author of the bill or the chairman of the committee make some statement about the facts of this case, as to the length of service, the circumstances under which the man failed to get an honorable discharge, and so forth. The point I want to get at is what kind of a case you have to have in order to get it through the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. I will say that this man enlisted and served from July 21, 1861, to October 6, 1865.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not care how long he served. That does not reach the point I have in mind. I want to know why he is entitled to this special legislation.

Mr. TAGGART was recognized.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman from Kentucky will yield, are the cases that he presented to the Committee on Military Affairs soldiers who deserted before the war was over?

Mr. LANGLEY. I have not the floor; the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me from the report that this soldier would be entitled to an honorable discharge without the intervention of Congress. The report says:

It is shown by the records that Charles V. Wells was enrolled July 21, 1861, and was mustered into service July 28, 1861, as a private of Company C, Third Pennsylvania Reserves Infantry, to serve three years. He was discharged from that organization November 19, 1862, to enable him to enlist in Battery C, Fifth United States Artillery. He reenlisted in the last-mentioned organization February 13, 1864, for another term of three years, and he continued to serve until October 6, 1865, when he deserted while on furlough.

Mr. MANN. The report shows that The Adjutant General denied the application for an honorable discharge, and it shows that he deserted while on a furlough because he thought the war was ended.

Mr. TAGGART. Where does the report show that The Adjutant General denied the application?

Mr. MANN. At the bottom of the first page. That is the report of the War Department.

Mr. TAGGART. The report says that he left his command because he believed that the termination of the war also terminated his contract with the Government. If he left his command after the war—May, 1865—he would be entitled to an honorable discharge.

Mr. MANN. The War Department says not in the report. It says that the charge of desertion can be removed only on condition that it shall appear that at the time when he absented himself from his command he was suffering from wounds, injuries, or disease received or contracted in the line of duty, and that he was prevented from returning to his command by reason of such wounds, injuries, or disease before the expiration of his term of service.

The gentleman will remember that this is not a volunteer regiment. Lots of these men enlisted in the regular service. This was a case of enlistment in the regular service, where the man deserted because he thought the war was over.

Mr. TAGGART. The act of 1889 would provide for regular service, would it not?

Mr. HAY. I would say to the gentleman from Kansas that the War Department has ruled that way constantly, and he will find that in all these cases application has been made first to the War Department, and when that department turns it down they come to us. There would not be any purpose in coming to us if the War Department allowed it.

Mr. TAGGART. The report does not show the date on which he separated himself from the service, whether it was after 1865 or not.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I could not catch all that the gentleman from Kansas said, but as I understand it, the soldier had a disability which prevented his return to the service, and that disability was not contracted in the service and line of duty. Is that the case?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that this is a case where the man served four years, all through the war.

Mr. LANGLEY. It does not make any difference to me whether he served four or two or three years. That is not the point I am trying to get at.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, I think I can answer what he is after. The report shows that the man was ill and the doctor told him that he could get his discharge any time he pleased. As a matter of fact, he preferred to get a furlough, and did, but not feeling well, and thinking the war was over, he never returned to his command. That was in 1865.

Mr. LANGLEY. What does the gentleman think of a case like this? I am speaking now of one of my own cases. The soldier did not contract his disability in the service and in the line of duty, but he went home on a furlough, and after he got home he was attacked with disease of the eyes and became practically blind, and was absolutely unable because of that to return to his command, but he can not prove origin of the disease in the service because it did not so originate, and yet he was charged with desertion for not returning.

Mr. MANN. That sounds to me like a good case.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is what I think, but I have not been able to convince the Committee on Military Affairs that it is, and I have been seven or eight years in trying to do it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know the gentleman is an energetic gentleman, but has the gentleman ever appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs with that case?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's question is offensive, in view of what has already been said. I said that I have spent seven or eight years at it. I have appeared time and again before the subcommittee, and the last time I tried to appear before the full committee I could not get a hearing.

Mr. MANN. I am sure the gentleman will have it granted in the next Congress.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have been told in each Congress that I would get it in the next Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say it was very far from my purpose to be offensive. One could not be offensive to the gentleman, because he is always so genial.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question? How long has he been in the House?

Mr. LANGLEY. Not quite so long as the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I just wanted to make a comparison. I have been here for 18 years, and I never yet have been able to get a bill from the committee, and I have had one here all of that time; and I rather think the committee was right in not reporting it.

Mr. LANGLEY. But in my case I do not think the committee was right in not reporting it. My experience with the committee leads me to fear that if the gentleman stays here the balance of his life he will not get his bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. I object.

UNITED STATES REGISTRY OF BARK "SIMLA."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17613) authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the bark Simla to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

TEMPLIN MORRIS POTTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12486) for the relief of Templin Morris Potts, captain on the retired list of the United States Navy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CHARLES L. PRITCHARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17343) for the relief of Charles L. Pritchard.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of, or to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles L. Pritchard, of Front Royal, Va., the sum of $3,472.62, being the value of stamps and money taken from his custody as postmaster at Front Royal, Va., by burglars, on July 19, 1913.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES T. PETTY AND OTHERS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13388) for the relief of James T. Petty, Charles W. Church, and others, executors of Charles B. Church, deceased, Jesse B. Wilson, and George T. Dearing.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

GEORGE W. LALAND.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19497) to amend the military record of George W. Laland.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, George W. Laland, a resident of Illinois, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company A, Twelfth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, on the 7th day of April, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FREDERICK J. BIRKETT.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18173) to reinstate Frederick J. Birkett as third lieutenant in the United States Revenue-Cutter Service.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

WILLIAM G. KERCKHOFF.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5990) to authorize the sale and issuance of patent for certain lands to William G. Kerckhoff.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell and issue patent to William G. Kerckhoff for the following real property situated in the county of Los Angeles, State of California, more particularly described as follows:

Commencing at the quarter corner of section 30, township 2 north, range 7 west, this corner being the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of said section 30, running thence easterly along the north line of said southwest quarter 990 feet; thence at right angles south 330 feet; thence at right angles westerly 660 feet; thence at right angles south 330 feet; thence west at right angles 330 feet to the range lines between range 8 west and range 7 west, San Bernardino base and meridian; thence northerly 574.4 feet to the point of beginning, containing 10 acres of land; on the payment of the sum of $2.50 per acre.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ARTHUR J. FLOYD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5497) authorizing the issuance of patent to Arthur J. Floyd for section 31, township 22 north, range 22 west of the sixth principal meridian, in the State of Nebraska.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue patent to Arthur J. Floyd for section 31, in township 22 north, range 22 west of the sixth principal meridian, in the State of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PATENTS ISSUED TO CERTAIN INDIANS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19376) confirming patents heretofore issued to certain Indians in the State of Washington.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the patents heretofore issued in the name of Kami Sam, July 22, 1902, for the south half of the northeast quarter, lots 1 and 2, section 6, township 23 north, range 19 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Peter Benoy, February 25, 1905, for the southwest quarter section 3, township 23 north, range 19 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Anastus Yaksum, widow of Yaksum, February 3, 1908, for the west half of the northwest quarter and the west half of the southwest quarter, section 9, township 23 north, range 19 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Ellen Winnier, widow of Tom Winnier, August 1, 1904, for the northwest quarter of section 16, township 23 north, range 19 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Mary Batvia, October 1, 1903, for the west half of the southeast quarter and the south half of the northeast quarter, section 5, township 23 north, range 19 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of John Harmelt, April 14, 1909, for the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter, section 27, township 24 north, range 19 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Madeline, April 9, 1901, for the east half of the southwest quarter and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, section 14, township 24 north, range 18 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Dan Nason, August 1, 1904, for the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter, and lot 10, section 22, township 24 north, range 18 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of William Nason, August 1, 1904, for the northwest quarter section 26, township 24 north, range 18 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Tenas George, December 17, 1901, for lots 7 and 8, section 7, and lots 2, 3, 4, and 7, section 18, township 24 north, range 21 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Mary Ann, August 1, 1904, for the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and lots 2 and 4, section 26, township 24 north, range 18 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Mary Nason, August 1, 1904, for the south half of the northeast quarter and the north half of the southeast quarter, section 22, township 24 north, range 18 east of the Willamette meridian, all situated in the State of Washington, be, and the same are hereby, ratified and confirmed as fee-simple patents without restrictions against alienation as of their dates of issuance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GUSTAV HERTFELDER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1060) fixing the date of reenlistment of Gustav Hertfelder, first-class fireman, United States Navy.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter the reenlistment of Gustav Hertfelder, first-class fireman, United States Navy, as of October 18, 1909, in accordance with the provisions of section 16 of the act of March 3, 1899.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MATTHEW M'DONALD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11927) for the relief of Matthew McDonald.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Matthew McDonald shall be hereafter held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as second-class boy on the Moose, United States Navy, October, 1863: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out the word "military" in line 5, page, 1, and insert the word "naval," and strike out the word "October" in line 7 and insert the words "on the 20th day of August."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "no," strike out the remainder and insert "back pay, bounty, allowance, or other emolument shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act," so that the line as amended will read: "Provided, That no back pay, bounty, allowance, or emolument shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES V. WELLS.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 431 (H. R. 13373), a bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles V. Wells.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] asks unanimous consent to return to No. 431.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, since I objected to the consideration of that bill I have learned some facts regarding the case that I did not know at the time I made the objection. I do not desire to leave upon the mind of any Member of this House the impression that merely because I can not get through one of my own bills of the same kind, equally meritorious, I would object on that ground to somebody else's bill. I reserved the objection in order to get the facts of the case, as I had not had the opportunity to read the report. I really did not intend to insist upon the objection, but during the colloquy that followed I perhaps became a little bit provoked and irritated, and finally insisted upon it.

I should deeply regret the consciousness that I had done injustice to anybody, and especially to an old soldier. I felt when I made the objection, and I still feel, confident that I have had some cases pending before the Military Committee for years which possess the highest order of merit and which have been ignored. I do not desire to make the charge that I have been treated with gross unfairness by that committee. Perhaps in the rush of public business they may have unintentionally left upon me such an impression for the time being.

Mr. STAFFORD. The regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have a sincere and patriotic motive in making this statement, and I hope gentlemen who are interrupting me in this manner will realize that fact and let me finish my statement, which will be only a few sentences more. I am sure that if Members of the House had the time to read the evidence in the cases to which I have referred they would agree with me that they are cases in which relief should be granted by Congress. But I shall not take up your time further now. The people of my district realize that I am doing my best to serve them, and they have honored me with a seat in the next Congress. I give notice that if I do not get these cases through this Congress I shall bring them up again in the next Congress, and no case of less merit shall pass, if I can prevent it, until these are passed. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection to unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. The bill has been read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Charles V. Wells."

GEORGE RICHARDSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17842) for the relief of George Richardson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title of George Richardson in and to the northwest quarter of section 33, township 15, range 16, Noxubee County, Miss., as assignee of the conveyance of John Victor, be, and the same is hereby, quieted and confirmed, and patent therefor shall issue to the said George Richardson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ELLERY B. WILMAR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2668) for the relief of the heirs of Ellery B. Wilmar.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reinstate the homestead entry, designated at Oakland, Cal., as serial 03576, of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter and the west half of the northwest quarter of section 8, and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 5 of township 23 south, range 13 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, in the San Francisco land district, California, which was made December 15, 1909, by Ellery B. Wilmar, now deceased, and to cause patent thereon to issue to the legal heirs of said Wilmar upon proof of compliance by such heirs with the homestead laws in the matter of cultivation.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 6, by striking out the word "of" after the word "six" and inserting the word "embracing."

Amend, page 2, lines 2 and 3, by striking out the words "upon proof of compliance by such heirs with the homestead laws," and inserting "subject to compliance with the homestead laws."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REV. JOHN A. FERRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12896) to place Rev. John A. Ferry, captain, upon the unlimited retired list of the Army.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

FREDERICK J. BIRKETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 6011) to reinstate Frederick J. Birkett as first lieutenant of the United States Revenue-Cutter Service.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

MAJ. WILLIAM O. OWEN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5525) to authorize the President to appoint Maj. William O. Owen, United States Army, retired, a colonel on the active list of the Army.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if he has noticed the report on this bill?

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly. I never object to a bill without knowing something about it. I would not take that responsibility.

Mr. MURRAY. I presume, then, the gentleman is going to stay with it, so I will not make any statement.

Mr. MANN. Here is a bill which proposes to promote a man on the retired list from major to colonel, and it only provides that he shall take the examination of a lieutenant colonel. Think of that!

Mr. MURRAY. I am satisfied I could not convince the gentleman, so there is no use talking about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

WILLIAM W. FINEREN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15686) for the relief of William W. Fineren.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

JAMES F. GORMAN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16166) for the relief of James F. Gorman.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. VOLLMER. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. VOLLMER. Mr. Speaker, this is a very meritorious claim. I introduced the bill to give the man $5,000, which I think would not compensate him for the injuries he has sustained. Both the committee and the department report favorably on the claim. The Judge Advocate General expressly states that he considers it a meritorious claim. I have known the claimant personally for a great many years, and all that time I have known him to wear a bandage around his face, indicating that he has sustained such injuries as he claims. He assures me—and I believe him—that the amount allowed by the committee, $2,000, would not reimburse him for the amount of his doctors' bills. I know he has had several operations in the last three or four years, and I know he has suffered a great deal of pain.

Under the circumstances it seems to me it is a meritorious claim that ought to be allowed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to detain the House when it is trying to reach bills to which there is no objection. And I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that until the general compensation law was passed, only a few years ago, Congress invariably refused to pay compensation by special legislation to employees who were injured in the Government service. After the general compensation bill was passed the Committee on Claims reported a few bills in one Congress providing for payment in special cases. Those bills, with the exception of one or two, were not passed. I think that was in the Sixty-first Congress—not very long ago. In the last Congress, the Sixty-second, there were quite a number of these bills reported, and some were passed. Quite a number have been reported and passed in this Congress, special bills where the general compensation law did not apply, or going back prior to the date of the general compensation law. This bill goes back to an injury that occurred in 1877.

As far as I am concerned, I am unwilling to give unanimous consent to pass any bill for the relief of anybody for a personal injury that occurred so long ago. There have been thousands and thousands of injuries to Government employees since that time, and there are probably in the neighborhood of 500 or 1,000 cases a year now under the general compensation law. If we are going to pay compensation to everybody who has ever been injured in the Government service it ought to be done by general legislation. It is impossible for Congress to give consideration to separate bills for all the people who have been injured as far back as 1877. I appreciate the fact that that is not the fault of the man. That is the fault, if it be a fault, of the Government, which did not adopt the policy of giving any compensation until six or seven years ago. I am not willing to go back and take up all the cases since 1877 and sit here and figure them out, and I do not think it is the business of Congress to do it. If Congress wants to do it by general legislation, that is another thing. I am not willing to pass special bills by unanimous consent for cases that go back so far. That is the only objection I have.

Mr. VOLLMER. I will say that there have been quite a number of such bills passed.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There has been no bill passed going back anything like that far.

Mr. VOLLMER. I understand that within the past few months a bill has been passed which goes back to 1861.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. VOLLMER. I have just received that information.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman who gave the information is mistaken.

Mr. VOLLMER. Of course if the gentleman is determined to object there is no use to take the time of the House further.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

WILLIAM J. BLAKE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18474) for the relief of William J. Blake.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William J. Blake, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 as compensation for injuries to spine, through no negligence on his part, while being employed in the United States Navy Yard, Portsmouth, N. H., October 21, 1912.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 6 strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, supplementing what I have just said in reference to the general compensation law, the Committee on Claims is now being besieged for the consideration of bills that pay compensation in addition to the compensation provided by the general law. That compensation under the general law is limited to one year's pay. The Committee on Claims have reported quite a number of bills providing additional compensation above that allowed by the general law, private bills giving special consideration to particular cases.

Of course, if we do that for one case, we have got to do it for every case, unless there be special favoritism. I am unwilling to have special bills passed by Congress in every case where somebody is injured while in the Government service, because these bills would amount to thousands in the course of a year. This is one of those cases. It is a hard case. The compensation allowed under the general law is very meager. I am not willing to give my consent to pass such a bill by unanimous consent and enter upon the precedent of paying additional compensation where compensation has been made under the general law.

It so happens that this bill is the bill of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS]. There is no man in this House that I would go further for, at the risk of violating my conscience, than I would for the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS]. But I can not do it. I am going to object to all of these bills where they come up for unanimous consent, as long as I am a Member of the House. I do not make any criticism of the Committee on Claims, for I know the pressure that is brought to bear on the committee. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois to be intended as criticizing the Committee on Claims; but I wish to say, in justification of the action of the committee in reporting these bills, that the committee decided at the beginning of this Congress that we did not propose to be bound by the provisions of existing law. On a former occasion I undertook to point out the absurdity in which such a course might involve the committee. We decided that if we were going to consider these bills at all we were going to try and do justice, and that is the only criterion that the committee has consciously been governed by.

Now, here is a man that got a year's pay, $700, under the general law. His spine has been injured to the extent that the man is a helpless invalid for life. We could not agree to pay a man injured in this way $700. If we pay him anything, we should allow him a sum somewhat commensuate with the injury.

Now, the Government has entered on a new policy of dealing with its employees. But so long as the Claims Committee is dealing with these cases we do not intend to be governed strictly by existing law. It has been shown time and again that we can not follow the provisions of existing law and do justice in every case.

So long as we deal with the claims we propose to report an amount somewhat commensurate with the injury the party has received. We know of no other safe rule to be governed by. That is the principle upon which the committee has tried to act. It is to be devoutly hoped that some time Congress will take charge of this matter and pass a compensation law which is just and reasonable and will meet every emergency in which a man is injured. Mr. Speaker, if this Government is going to allow its employees compensation it should at least allow an amount which can not properly be ridiculed. Having that in mind, the Committee on Claims has tried to pursue a reasonable and just course in dealing with these matters. We could not follow the general law without doing injustice in particular cases. And so long as we deal with these cases at all we propose to try to do justice in the future as we have endeavored to do in the past.

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the first page of the report read in my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the first page of the report in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18474) for the relief of William J. Blake, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

In line 6 strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,000."

William J. Blake, aged 26 years, of Kittery, Me., was an employee at the Portsmouth Navy Yard on the 21st day of October, 1912. On that date while working in the caisson of the dry dock he fell, fracturing the eleventh and twelfth dorsal vertebræ, causing total paralysis of the lower limbs. For eight months following that time he was confined to the bed, done up in a plaster cast. In July, 1913, the cast was replaced with a leather jacket. He is now able to sit up and get about in a wheel chair, but with no prospects of the recovery of the use of his limbs. The accident was caused by falling a distance of about 15 feet and striking across a steel girder. His family consists of a wife and two small children, both under the age of 6 years. He has no income and no means of support for himself and family. In the summer of 1913 he was taken to the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, and an attempt was made to perform such an operation as would promote his recovery, but it was without success.

Further facts concerning the accident to the claimant are contained in the following summary of evidence in support of claim for compensation under the act of May 30, 1908, furnished the Hon. A. C. HINDS by the Department of Labor, as well as letter of the claimant, William J. Blake, and affidavits of his physicians, which are made a part of this report.

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Speaker, this is a very pitiful case, as the report shows, and I think it justifies the House in going to the limit. I hope the objection will not be made and that the House will vote this man this small compensation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

THOMAS P. DARR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16650) for the relief of Thomas P. Darr.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That $918.50, or so much thereof as may be found due the claimant, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the relief of Thomas P. Darr on account of services rendered as mail carrier from Gooding, Idaho, to Corral, Idaho, during the spring and summer of 1907, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the said amount to Thomas P. Darr, as full compensation for services rendered.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas P. Darr the sum of $830.37 on account of service rendered as mail carrier from Gooding, Idaho, to Corral, Idaho, during the spring and summer of 1907, this amount to be accepted by said Thomas P. Darr as full compensation for service rendered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS LANDRAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18038) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Louis Landram, administrator of William J. Landram, deceased.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman be good enough to tell on what he bases his objection to the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have read the report very carefully. There are a lot of errors in it—that is, a lot of contradictions—which I presume the gentleman has not noticed. The present claim is for the commissions for the years 1874 to 1879, inclusive, which were not included in the suit brought in the Court of Claims on account of an oversight on the part of one of Mr. Landram's attorneys. There was good reason for the oversight, I think, and it is possible that the House should, on proper consideration, pass the bill at some time when it can be properly considered. So far as I am concerned I do not think the bill ought to be passed at all. I have examined the matter.

Mr. HELM. Is it not possible the gentleman might be mistaken in that matter?

Mr. MANN. It is possible, of course.

Mr. HELM. Let me make a short statement. This collector was appointed in 1873 and served as such until 1884.

Mr. MANN. I have examined all of the facts in the case, as shown by the report. I have got it all marked up.

Mr. HELM. The point is this: That for the period of time when this man served as collector he was compensated after taking this case to the Court of Claims and from the Court of Claims he prosecuted it to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court of the United States adjudged it a valid, subsisting claim; but on account of an oversight which was, in good faith, made on the part of one of the attorneys representing the man, he failed to include a portion of the fees, all of which are acknowledged to be due by the department, and are of the same type and character as he was paid for. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] knows, as a matter of fact, that his attorney did not fail to include within the claim that was filed before the Court of Claims and was prosecuted to the Supreme Court of the United States these fees—if he knows that the attorney did not, in good faith, include them—then I am perfectly willing to quit.

If the gentleman knows that to be a fact, well and good; but if it is a fact that the attorney by oversight did fail to cover the entire time for which he was entitled to be compensated for fees which are of the precise character and kind that the Supreme Court said were justly due and unpaid, then it seems to me that the man having filed the claim in 1885, and having prosecuted it until 1902, he should now be entitled to receive this. He prosecuted the claim while it dragged its slow course through the Court of Claims, and its still slower course through the Supreme Court of the United States, and all of us know how dreadfully slow and snail-like is the pace that a claim goes through in those circumstances; and after being so finely ground both by the Court of Claims and by the Supreme Court, it does seem to me that the claim comes clean-handed to this body, and that the man ought to be compensated.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest to my friend from Kentucky that what I shall cite is an illustration, apparently, of the care with which both the court and the attorneys in this case gave consideration to the subject:

7. That on or about the 18th day of March, 1885, the claimant's decedent filed his petition in the Court of Claims, No. 14569, for commissions withheld from him on spirit stamps for the six years immediately preceding the filing of his petition, to wit, from July 1, 1879, to and ending June 30, 1884.

Now, when the court and the attorneys both figure that it is six years from July 1, 1879, to July 1, 1884, I think there is need of reconsideration. That is a mathematical error.

Mr. HELM. But that is simply a mouse track. It is immaterial; it does not cut any figure in the claim at all.

Mr. MANN. It does not cut any figure in the merits of the claim; but when that is repeated by the court several times and by the attorneys in the case it shows that no one had ever given consideration enough to it to figure out the length of time, something that a man ought to know instantly, but which apparently they do not yet know.

Mr. HELM. Was that a mistake of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. MANN. No; the Supreme Court does not make such mistakes.

Mr. HELM. What court made the mistake?

Mr. MANN. The Court of Claims.

Mr. HELM. Ought this man to be penalized for a little mistake like that.

Mr. MANN. And also the attorneys for the man who appeared before the Court of Claims.

Mr. HELM. Ought he to be penalized for a trivial mouse track of a mistake that the attorney made and for which he has been paid? He has been paid from 1879 until 1884, and the portion of the compensation that he wants is from 1873 to 1878.

If there is anything that appeals to the gentleman from Illinois, the man to whom this debt is so justly due is in very straitened circumstances and has been depending on this claim for years. It has been hanging up and shuttlecocked up and down in the Senate in different bills and almost in the act of being passed. It does seem to me that it is an equitable and just claim, and if the gentleman from Illinois knew the circumstances of the case I do not believe that he would insist upon objecting to the claim.

Mr. MANN. This man held office from July 1, 1873, to July 4, 1885, and was perfectly satisfied to hold the office and take the pay. After he was kicked out of office, then he wanted to get a great deal more pay, and I have no sympathy with him, as far as the equity is concerned.

Mr. HELM. The man has long since died.

Mr. MANN. If he is entitled to it legally, he gets it.

Mr. HELM. The man has long since died, and this is his only surviving son.

Mr. MANN. Then there is less reason for passing it. Certainly his son did not earn it. The man was glad to hold the job. He is a Republican and was glad to hold the job, like many others in Kentucky, and knew what he was getting. After he got through holding the job, when Mr. Cleveland came in, he struck some bright attorney who told him that he was entitled to some more money and went into the Court of Claims and got all he could get, barring the statute of limitation.

Mr. HELM. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Yes; he got what he could get under the law, and then having gotten that much he wants us to waive the statute of limitation. Now, morally he was not entitled to a cent at any time. He knew what he was getting while in office. He was satisfied with what he was getting while he was in office. He wanted to keep the office and quit because the Democratic administration came in and fired him. Now, many a man would like to hold office for 12 years——

Mr. HELM. I want to beg and plead with the gentleman as earnestly as I can because my heart is in it for this man who needs it awfully badly——

Mr. MANN. He does not need it half as much as the fellows who have to pay it.

Mr. HELM. This collector was in the same shape as the Members of Congress would be who get $7,500 salary, and also get stationery and some mileage. If we had overlooked our mileage and had died and our heirs would come in and want that mileage or that stationery, notwithstanding we had received $7,500——

Mr. MANN. That is a good illustration.

Mr. HELM. For 18 or 20 years——

Mr. MANN. That is a good illustration. I am entitled to mileage under the law from Congress several years ago. The law gave me mileage and I never got it, and if sometime some of my relatives or heirs should come before Congress and ask for that money I hope to God they will be turned down cold. I am not asking for it and they are not entitled to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HELM. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. I will have to object.

DOMMICK TAHENY AND JOHN W. MORTIMER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1058) for the relief of Dommick Taheny and John W. Mortimer.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LYMAN D. DRAKE, JR.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15168) for the relief of Lyman D. Drake, jr.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Lyman D. Drake, jr., of Corpus Christi, Tex., the sum of $10,000, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, for personal injuries received while in the employ of and working upon the Panama Railroad and in connection with that service and in the employ of the Panama Canal Commission as brakeman upon the Panama Railroad.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$1,102.50."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. This man under the compensation law would be entitled to have received $1,042.50. I do not recall how the committee reached the $1,102.50. The compensation law would have given $1,042.50.

Mr. GARNER. I do not know myself.

Mr. MANN. If that is satisfactory to the gentleman, why——

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman himself has made the calculation, that certainly must be correct.

Mr. MANN. I made the calculation.

Mr. GARNER. The Clerk of the committee said he got $105 a month.

Mr. MANN. That is right. But he got some of this money.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, he did?

Mr. POU. He got over $45.

Mr. GARNER. I am willing that he should receive what is the usual amount under the compensation act. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the amount "$1,102.50" and insert "$1,042.50."

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out "$1,102.50" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,042.50."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, commencing in line 7, after the word "of," the following language: "and working upon the Panama Railroad and in connection with that service and in the employ of." I want to give a correct description here.

Mr. GARNER. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "of," strike out the following language: "And working upon the Panama Railroad and in connection with that service and in the employ of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the word "Panama," in line 9, and insert the word "Isthmian"; and strike out all of the bill after the word "Commission" and insert in lieu thereof "in the capacity of trainman." This man was a trainman on the Isthmian Canal and not on the Panama Railroad.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the word "Panama" and insert the word "Isthmian"; and strike out after the word "Commission" the words "as brakeman upon the Panama Railroad" and insert the words "in the capacity of trainman."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGIA RAILROAD & BANKING CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 926) for the relief of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Co.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,888.68 to the Georgia Railroad & Banking Co., formerly called the Georgia Railroad Co., for the balance due it for the transportation of the United States mails under contract prior to May 31, 1861, on routes Nos. 6136, 6143, and 6144, Georgia, said balance having been found due by the Auditor for the Post Office Department and reported to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury in Document No. 297, first session, Fifty-ninth Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I read this report, it is based entirely on the fact that the records of the Confederacy which came into the control of the Government showed that this railroad company had received the full quota of payment from the Confederacy for services that had been performed prior to the outbreak of the Civil War, and, further, that those records were rather mutilated and not complete. Now, I wish to inquire whether this railroad company itself—because this report does not show anything to that effect—has ever made any affidavit showing that they really were not paid the full amount, or whether this is a matter that is in the hands of some claims attorney. The committee report indicates that they are merely acting upon some partial Confederate report showing that this railroad company way back in the war times received thousands upon thousands of dollars for this claim, and this mutilated record shows that they did not receive some $4,000, which is proposed to be appropriated in this bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will find on page 4 of the report the affidavit of a man who claims he was cashier of the Georgia Railroad & Banking Co., who states that "the said records failed to show that said company ever received from any source the balance of $4,880.68 shown to be due the said railroad company in said Document No. 92," and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do not those records refer to the records of the Confederacy?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. Those are the records of the company. He testifies that the cashier of the company and the records show that that money was never received.

Mr. STAFFORD. I had read most of the report, but I must confess that I had overlooked that paragraph that the gentleman refers to. That answers the question whether there ought not to be some proof from the claimants to the effect that they had not received the full amount.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN TRANSPORTATION CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5695) for the relief of the Southern Transportation Co.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Southern Transportation Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., the sum of $5,556.70, to reimburse the said company for the repairs, expenses, and demurrage in connection with the barge Antietam, owned by said company, on account of damage to said barge by collision with U. S. lightship No. 89, which amount is hereby appropriated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PAY INSPECTOR F. T. ARMS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3525) for the relief of Pay Inspector F. T. Arms, United States Navy.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to F. T. Arms, of the navy yard at Portsmouth, N. H., a pay inspector in the United States Navy, the sum of $955.20, to reimburse him for payments made as paymaster in the Navy, as shown by his official accounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE E. LERRIGO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3419) admitting to citizenship and fully naturalizing George Edward Lerrigo, of the city of Topeka, in the State of Kansas.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That George Edward Lerrigo, the son of an American citizen, of the city of Topeka, in Shawnee County, State of Kansas, is hereby admitted and declared to be a citizen of the United States of America, and is fully naturalized as such citizen for all purposes from and after the taking effect of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. This is a special bill to grant a man citizenship. I think it is a meritorious case. I had some consideration of this bill last winter, or at some other time since this Congress met—winters and summers have run together, you know. I also had another case a good deal like it, and I took them up with some members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and asked them if that committee was willing to report any of these bills at all.

They had passed one once before—a very peculiar case. The members of the committee told me that they would not favorably report this bill. It was a House bill then, I think, and they said they would not report the other bills which some of my constituents wanted reported. I see they have now reported the Senate bill. I have no objection to it, though I wish they had not put me in the embarrassing position of telling certain people that after investigation I was informed that the committee would not report any bill like that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman believe this is an earnest of their intention to give consideration in the near future to the bills in which the gentleman is interested?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. I have forgotten what the bill was. I never introduced any bill, in fact.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I do not recall any bill coming from the gentleman from Illinois which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. MANN. I did not introduce the bill. If I used the word "bill," I was mistaken. It was a case. I laid the papers before certain members of the Committee on Immigration, and had an investigation made of the matter.

Mr. MOORE. I will say to the gentleman that there was a great deal of doubt in the committee about reporting any of these bills.

Mr. MANN. I have no inclination to criticize the committee.

Mr. MOORE. I simply rose to say that I did not recall any bill of the kind introduced by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I did not introduce any bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN CALVIN LEONARD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18174) to transfer Capt. John Calvin Leonard from the retired to the active list of the United States Navy.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

S. W. LANGHORNE ET AL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2334) for the relief of S. W. Langhorne and the legal representatives of H. S. Howell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to S. W. Langhorne and the legal representatives of H. S. Howell, of Helena, Mont., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,568, and said amount of $1,568 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, being the amount paid by them for rent of the building used by the United States for a land office at Helena, Mont., from November, 1885, up to and including June, 1900, a period of 56 months, at $28 per month.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "nineteen hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "eighteen hundred and ninety."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

STEAMER "GENERAL GARRETSON."

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21126) to authorize the change of name of the steamer General Garretson to S. H. Robbins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon application of the owner, the Wilson Transit Co., of Mentor, Ohio, to change the name of the steamer General Garretson, official No. 203974, to the S. H. Robbins.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

A. W. SUDDUTH.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12075) to correct the military record of A. W. Sudduth.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of A. W. Sudduth, late of Company K, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Artillery, and to issue to him an honorable discharge from said service.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That in the administration of the pension laws and laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, A. W. Sudduth, late of Company K, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on June 16, 1865: Provided, That no back pay or other allowance or emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL JORDAN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18884) for the relief of Daniel Jordan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Daniel Jordan shall hereafter be held and considered to have been in the military service of the United States as a private in Company F, Eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Infantry, and Battery C, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, from April 23, 1861, to July 20, 1865, and to have been honorably discharged as such on the latter date.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "date," insert:

"Provided, That no back pay, back pension, or other emolument or allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ALFRED S. LEWIS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1377) for the relief of Alfred S. Lewis.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Alfred S. Lewis shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a first lieutenant of Company H, Eighteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES A. SPOTTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5092) for the relief of Charles A. Spotts.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the homestead entry of Charles A. Spotts on Farm Unit L, or the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section No. 2, in township No. 20, north of range No. 21, west of the Montana principal meridian, made under the act of April 23, 1904 (33 U. S. Stat. L., 302), as amended by the act of May 29, 1908 (35 U. S. Stat L., 448), is hereby validated, subject to future compliance with the law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN A. RYAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15666) for the relief of John A. Ryan.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John A. Ryan, who was permanently disabled while engaged in the employment of the United States Government at the Philadelphia post office, in the State of Pennsylvania, the sum of $15,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all of said bill after the word "appropriated," in line 5, and add the following: "$190.79, for the relief of John A. Ryan, of Philadelphia, Pa., on account of injuries received by him while in the discharge of his duties as a clerk in the United States post office at Philadelphia, Pa., in July, 1912."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee, what is the committee's policy in regard to reimbursement for an injury where the employee is negligent? It appears in this case, from the meager report from the Post Office Department, that the injury was partly due to the claimant's own negligence. The First Assistant Postmaster General, in his letter, refers to a provision that we adopted last year in the Post Office appropriation bill, but he leaves off of his citation that provision of the law which states that no compensation shall be paid where the employee is negligent. What is the policy of the committee in regard to reimbursing people if injured through their own negligence?

Mr. POU. The custom of the committee heretofore has been to examine into that matter, and if the injury was brought about by the negligent act of the employee to turn down the proposition for compensation. In other words, we have tried as near as we could to pursue the policy that a public-service corporation would be liable under like circumstances, and we do not think the Government ought to hide behind any technical defense. Whether we have succeeded or not, I do not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman knows that in many workmen's compensation acts passed in the States they compensate for injuries that have been received or have arisen through the negligence of the employees. I did not know whether it was the intention of the committee to go as far as that or not.

Mr. POU. We have resolved the doubt against the Government where it appears that the employee himself was not guilty of gross negligence. In other words, if it was a pure accident and was not brought upon the employee by his own gross negligence, the committee does not think the Government ought to exclude a man from the provisions of the compensation act.

Mr. STAFFORD. I quite agree with the attitude of the committee in not depriving the man of the compensation.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. I had an extremely pathetic letter from this man to-day, indicating that his injury is permanent. His salary is only $600 a year. The report from the department indicates that the injury was partly due to Mr. Ryan's own negligence, but he was in the discharge of his duty as a clerk. The man is permanently injured, and the amount allowed him is an extremely small amount. I do not see anything here to indicate what the negligence was.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in the report.

Mr. MOORE. The letter from the Assistant Postmaster does not show it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the letter from the claimant indicate what the negligence consisted of?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; I have not the letter with me; I did not know the case was coming up. The statement in the letter was one of distress, loss due to sickness and pain resulting from the accident, all of which indicated that he was permanently injured. Now, you allow him $190 for an injury of that kind, which is a very small amount. I do not want to run counter to the policy of the committee, but it seems to me that there is little to show that the man was negligent, and it does show that he was permanently injured.

Mr. MANN. I understand that the man is at work now for the Government and draws full pay.

Mr. MOORE. I do not know about that.

Mr. MANN. He was paid for all the time he was absent.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to direct the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the report from the Assistant Postmaster General, who says that at the time of the accident he was receiving a salary of $600, and as a result of the disability incurred was absent for 114½ days, without pay, from July 11. The natural inference is that thereafter he was able to resume work.

Mr. MOORE. That is what he is being paid for—the absent time.

Mr. MANN. That is all.

Mr. MOORE. If that is the policy of the committee, I will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the first word. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] just said that if it was the policy of the committee to do so-and-so he would not object. I do not know how we can always ascertain what is the policy of the committee. I am speaking now not very seriously, and I hope gentlemen will not get very excited about it. The other day the Committee on Claims reported on a bill which was introduced to cover an injury where the injury was not the negligence of the employee, and they reported it adversely upon the ground that they would not report favorably any bill for injuries to post-office employees that were not covered by the general law, and, of course, they would not report those.

They reported a letter from the Postmaster General stating that the Post Office Department, in view of the fact that Congress had to pass a general law on the subject, was opposed to the passage of any private bills for compensation to any employees in the Post Office Department, whether the injuries occurred prior to the passage of the general law or not. That action was taken by the committee, based on the letter of the Postmaster General, on one day. The next day the committee had before it the report of the First Assistant Postmaster General recommending the passage of a bill, and the committee reported that favorably. I do not know how my friend from Pennsylvania will learn the policy of the committee or the policy of the Post Office Department. One day the committee accepts the recommendation of the Postmaster General that no private bills be passed relating to employees of the Post Office Department and the next day the committee accepts the recommendation of the First Assistant Postmaster General that a special bill be passed. I hope my friend will not take this as being at all offensive, because it is not. I think it is a joke.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I have so repeatedly stated here that, so far as I knew, the committee could not be governed by any fixed policy that it seems almost superfluous to again repeat it.

Mr. MANN. It is superfluous to repeat it; but in view of the fact that the committee just reported a bill adversely and laid it on the table, I thought it worth while repeating it.

Mr. POU. That is very true. It is not worth while to repeat it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] can take isolated cases that any committee of the House having so many bills as the Committee on Claims has and point out apparent inconsistencies. If the committee is going to undertake to act on these cases at all, there is but one rule that I know of that can govern its action properly, and that is to constitute itself a forum, a jury, and try to do justice in every particular case. That is what the committee has done. We have not taken any orders from the Postmaster General or from the Assistant Postmaster General. I would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the influence of a member of his party on the subcommittees of the Committee on Claims goes just as far as the word or influence of any gentleman on this side.

Mr. MANN. I can not see what that has to do with it.

Mr. POU. I want to say this: We take up these questions without regard. The question in the consideration of the matters is what gentleman on the committee is willing to do the work of investigation. I have no doubt that we have made mistakes. I have no doubt that we have involved ourselves in apparent inconsistencies, but we try to do right as far as we can, and that is all I have to say in respect to any of these criticisms.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I must confess it is rather inconceivable to me just how it is possible for the committee one day to adopt one policy as a committee policy and the next day to adopt a directly opposite policy. I think the Committee on Claims has reported adversely, to lay upon the table, one bill in this Congress. There may have been some others, though I do not recall them. That bill was reported the other day, and I intended to bring it up here, but have not done so.

Mr. POU. Oh, there have been at least half a dozen, I would say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Possibly. I do not recall them. Certainly there has been but one at this session of Congress. I take it that the committee acts on these bills—that it is not just some member of the committee—though perhaps that may be a violent presumption on my part. But here the committee reported that a bill be laid on the table because the Postmaster General was opposed to any of these special bills in the Post Office Department.

That action was taken one day. Now, if a court would do that—try a case one day because of the general policy announced, and the next day should have another case and should decide it the other way—we would think the court was careless, although I think that has been done even by a court.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH A. JENNINGS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19325) for the relief of Joseph A. Jennings.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOHN BURROWS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17122) for the relief of John Burrows.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Burrows, of New Orleans, La., out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,000, to compensate him for injuries received while in the employ of the Government on the Panama Canal.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Line 6, strike out "$6,000" and insert "$1,433.33."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLOTTE M. JOHNSTON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20800) for the relief of Charlotte M. Johnston.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 to Charlotte M. Johnston, mother of Frank Volney Johnston, postmaster at Tecate, Cal., border line of Mexico, who was killed in the discharge of his duty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN TOWING & LIGHTERING CO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17174) to pay the claim of the American Towing & Lightering Co. for damages to its tug Buccaneer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $275 to the American Towing & Lightering Co., owner of the tug Buccaneer, in full compensation for its claim for damages sustained by said tug being fouled by the United States revenue launch Gypsy while said Buccaneer was made fast to its wharf in the harbor of Baltimore city.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

COL. RICHARD H. WILSON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16896) for the relief of Col. Richard H. Wilson, United States Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to credit to the accounts of Capt. Charles W. Castle, paymaster, the sum of $7,181.64, and that Col. Richard H. Wilson, Fourteenth Infantry, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, exonerated from all responsibility for the loss of the said sum at Fort William Henry Harrison, Mont., on or about May 16, 1912.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRYAN. I hope the RECORD will show that Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and myself are here and very earnest in our support of this bill, and I am particularly interested in the next bill.

W. F. CRAWFORD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21077) for the relief of W. F. Crawford.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to W. F. Crawford of Bremerton, Wash., who was injured November 17, 1906, at the navy yard, Puget Sound, while at work on board the battleship Wisconsin, by falling to the berth deck of said battleship, the sum of $1,017.25 for the relief of the said W. F. Crawford.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this man would be entitled under the compensation law, if that covered it, to $330.88. Is the gentleman in charge of the bill willing to accept that amount?

Mr. BRYAN. Is the gentleman going to leave the 88 cents on?

Mr. MANN. Every cent that should go to the man I should like to give.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course we will be glad to accept the $330 rather than have the bill objected to.

Mr. MANN. I will have to object to it unless it is reduced to that amount.

Mr. BRYAN. I will accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman state the amendment?

Mr. POU. The committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. That is what I meant.

Mr. POU. I understand the position the gentleman is placed in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, in line 10, "$1,017.25" and insert in lieu thereof "$330.88."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 10, strike out "$1,017.25" and insert "$330.88."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ARTHUR W. FOWLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18197) for the relief of Arthur W. Fowler.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to Arthur W. Fowler, or to his executors or administrators, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages for the loss of his means of livelihood resulting from serious physical injuries received by him while employed as an electrician's helper in the United States Department of Agriculture, at Washington City, in the District of Columbia, and for physical and mental suffering, as well as all other damages occasioned by an accident on October 8, 1908, while employed in said department, occasioned by the breaking of the limb of a tree upon which he was standing in the line of his duty, by reason of which he has been incapacitated for work at his trade as a telephone cable splicer, and said injuries being caused without any negligence on the part of the said Arthur W. Fowler; said money to be paid under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 3, by striking out "$10,000," and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FRANK H. WALKER AND FRANK E. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution (H. Res. 720) for the relief of Frank H. Walker and Frank E. Smith.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

[H. Res. 720.]

Resolved, That the bill H. R. 19399, for the relief of Frank H. Walker and Frank E. Smith, with the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for the findings of facts and conclusions of law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOE DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13700) for the relief of Joe Davis.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Joe Davis the sum of $1,500, in full compensation for injuries received by him on September 8, 1910, while in the performance of his duties as a powder man and engaged in blasting in connection with the construction of the Celilo Canal, Columbia River improvement, in Wasco County, Oreg.

With a committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to object.

Mr. SINNOTT. I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection until I can make a statement.

Mr. MANN. I will withhold it.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that has received careful attention from the committee, but by some inadvertence of the printer there was omitted an affidavit from the injured person of date March 2, 1914.

I know that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has announced his intention to object to all bills of this kind where the person injured has had the benefit of the compensation act, but I sincerely trust that the gentleman from Illinois will change his attitude, particularly in regard to this bill. I believe this is a most exceptional, meritorious, and deserving case. This is the case of a poor, ignorant, illiterate Slavonian, who was ordered by a foreman, at the risk of losing his job, to charge a hole for blasting. The hole was hot, and when the powder was put in it exploded. It tore off the man's arm, destroyed his eye, crushed in his skull, and he is practically helpless. He is dependent now upon the charity of his friends. The allowance of the committee is small, even niggardly, and I do not think that this great Government should be placed in this indifferent, heartless, and callous attitude toward human suffering and mutilation. The blood of the workingman and his limbs are a part of the cost of production, and they ought to be paid for, and this man should not be thrown upon the charity of the world, crippled and maimed by the carelessness and the negligence of this Government.

I sincerely trust that the gentleman from Illinois will withhold his objection and not object to this bill, but let us consider it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I told the gentleman, both publicly and privately, that I was going to object to this bill, and I told him the reason why. The man has been paid compensation under the general law. The gentleman makes a very pretty speech for a jury, but not for statesmen. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. SINNOTT. Just a moment, Mr. Speaker. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to this feature of the case: This man was paid under the compensation act the miserly and inadequate sum of $720; of this sum he was compelled to pay out $285 for hospital fees and medical attendance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

PETER M'KAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2589) for the relief of Peter McKay.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Peter McKay, or his legal representatives, the sum of $2,500 as full compensation for permanent injuries received by the said McKay on the 5th day of May, 1904, at Fort Worden, in the State of Washington, by being struck with a large piece of log hurled by the explosion of an excessive blast of powder discharged without warning by employees of the United States Government engaged in clearing lands at said Fort Worden under the direction and control of the United States Government.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 6, by striking out "$2,500" and inserting "$1,500."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, my friend from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]—and he is one of the dearest friends I have—has besought me in every way possible, trying to reach both my reason and my heart. Well, he reaches my heart, but the reason is all against him, both on this bill and the next one. Now, of course, I will reserve an objection, but that will probably prevent somebody else having a bill passed that ought to be passed. I am going to object to this.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman withhold his objection one minute?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this is the claim of Peter McKay. It has been before Congress for several years. I happen to know Mr. McKay well, and he has come to me personally many times about it. Of course it comes under the rule the gentleman from Illinois has laid down, and he is going to object. I ask to extend my remarks by printing the first portion of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Does the gentleman object to my extending my remarks?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. I do not object to the gentleman extending his remarks. I beg the pardon of the Chair.

Mr. BRYAN. I am glad the gentleman withdraws that objection, because we all think this is a meritorious claim.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The report referred to by Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2589) for the relief of Peter McKay, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

In line 6 strike out the figures "2,500" and substitute in lieu thereof the figures "1,500."

The Senate Report No. 871, Sixty-third Congress, third session, together with two affidavits and a letter from the War Department, are appended hereto and made a part of this report.

A bill for the relief of this man passed the Senate in both the Sixtieth and Sixty-first Congresses.

[Senate Report No. 871, Sixty-third Congress, third session.]

"The Committee on Claims, having had under consideration the bill (S. 2589) for the relief of Peter McKay, reports the same back to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass amended as follows:

"In line 6 strike out '5,000' and insert in lieu thereof '$2,500.'

"This claim has been before the Committee on Claims on two previous occasions. A similar bill was favorably reported and passed by the Senate during the Sixtieth Congress and again during the Sixty-first Congress. On March 27, 1908, this committee, in favorably reporting to the Senate a similar bill for the relief of Mr. McKay, said:

"'The Committee on Claims, having had under consideration the bill (S. 2743) for the relief of Peter McKay, report the same back to the Senate with the recommendation that it (with an amendment striking out the words "four thousand dollars" in the sixth line and inserting in lieu thereof "two thousand four hundred dollars") do pass, for reasons as follows:

"'Peter McKay, a resident of the city of Seattle, Wash., is the head of a family consisting of a wife and four daughters largely dependent upon him for support.

"'On the 5th of May, 1904, he was at work for the United States Government in the War Department, at Fort Worden, Wash., as a carpenter, engaged in building a searchlight cover. No one except a man by the name of Howard was working with McKay. At the close of the day McKay and Howard quit work and, as was their custom, started for what is known as the bunk house. While they were walking along the road engaged in conversation they were in a position to hear any alarm or warning. In order to reach the bunk house they were compelled to pass a place where the Government force were engaged in clearing for the purpose of making an excavation for the embrasures of 10-inch guns. As they passed a turn in the road immediately before reaching the place where the clearing was being done they heard some one yell, and immediately thereafter a blast exploded. Upon hearing the yell they made an effort to reach a place of safety, but the timber and earth flew through the air by reason of the explosion, and while McKay was crouched behind a stump to save himself a large log which had been thrown into the air by the explosion fell upon his leg and broke it, and it became necessary to amputate it.

"'No warning was given McKay that an explosion was to take place. He was walking along a road that he was accustomed to walk to put his tools away. He was not a fellow servant of the men engaged in making the excavation. By their failure to give him notice of the intended blasting, the other employees of the Government were guilty of gross negligence; therefore he sustained his injury as a result of the negligence of the employees of the Government. Had McKay been employed by an individual or a company he could have maintained an action against his employer upon the same state of facts.'

"In addition to the foregoing, the proof on file discloses that Mr. McKay is a temperate man of industrious habits, but because of the aforesaid injury has been unable to perform, with any degree of satisfaction to an employer, manual labor—the only employment for which he is by education fitted. That at the time of the accident he possessed a home and a reasonable amount of other property, but because of his inability to work and earn a living for himself and those dependent upon him, he has been compelled to part with all his property, and at the age of 65 years, with a wife 64 years of age and feeble in health dependent upon him, is reduced to poverty and faces the necessity of seeking aid from the local authorities. Clearly, justice in this instance has been too long delayed."

SIMON M. PRESTON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 691) for the relief of Simon M. Preston.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. This is the case of a gentleman who is now 93 years old, and it seems to me the claim ought to be allowed; but I have reasoned with my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as best I could, and he is obdurate. In order to show the interest and the belief that the Washington delegation have in this claim, I wish to state that my distinguished colleagues, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. BRYAN, and myself have stayed here now, until toward the hour of midnight, in the hope that the gentleman from Illinois might relent at the last moment and let this very meritorious claim pass. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting the first part of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report referred to is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 691) for the relief of Simon M. Preston, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate Report No. 1319, Sixty-second Congress, third session, copies of letters written by the claimant to Hon. Samuel H. Piles, United States Senator, also a letter written by Horace Preston to Hon. John M. Gearin, United States Senator, and copies of the correspondence between Collector Preston and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at the time of the defalcation, are appended hereto as a part of this report.

[Senate Report No. 1319, Sixty-second Congress, third session.]

"The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4957) for the relief of Simon M. Preston, late collector of internal revenue for the district of Mississippi, reports as follows:

"That it appears that Simon M. Preston was collector of internal revenue and also stamp agent for the first collection district of Mississippi from June 1, 1869, to May 22, 1873; that it was necessary for him to have deputy collectors; that one D. C. Kearns, who was highly recommended, was appointed deputy collector and entered into bonds, with sureties at the time deemed good, for the faithful discharge of his duties; that said Kearns continued to act as deputy collector until the 1st of March, 1871, when it was discovered that he, the said Kearns, had embezzled moneys collected by him for the United States and was a defaulter for the sum of $6,400, for which amount said collector, Simon M. Preston, was bound to the Government and for which he stood debtor to the Government in his account; that the said collector caused the said Kearns to be indicted and convicted and fined $5,836.38, which was the amount of his unpaid defalcations, and sentenced to be imprisoned for 12 months; that the said Kearns was soon after pardoned by the President of the United States and relieved from said fine and imprisonment; that the said Kearns and the said sureties were irresponsible, and there was no means of getting the amount embezzled by him; that the pardon and release of said Kearns removed all chances of compelling restoration from him, and the said collector, Simon M. Preston, was obliged to make good to the Government the defalcation of said Kearns, whereby great injustice was done him.

"It further appears that said collector, Simon M. Preston, was a stranger in Mississippi when he was appointed collector there and did not know and was unable to find out the financial responsibilities of said Kearns's bondsmen. These bondsmen were all men of apparently good reputation and prominent in the citizenship of Mississippi.

"It also appears that as a result of the suit brought by said Preston against the sureties of said Kearns there could not be recovered the amount of said defalcations, the balance being the amount claimed in this bill, viz, $5,836.38.

"It further appears that the statute under which said Kearns was tried and convicted provided that in case of conviction the defendant should not only be imprisoned, but he should be fined the amount of his defalcation. He was convicted and fined according to statute and sent to prison; but soon thereafter Gov. Ames, an ambitious statesman of Mississippi, listened to the requests of the influential friends of Kearns and urged upon President Grant the pardon of Kearns. It seems quite clear that President Grant consented to do this with the understanding and upon the consideration that the amount of Kearns's defalcation should be made good. The President was informed that this had been done, and there seems to be no doubt but that the President believed that Kearns and his friends had repaid the amount stolen, whereas the fact is that Preston himself had paid the money to the Government. The claimant, Preston, protested against the pardon of Kearns until the latter repaid to Preston the amount of money that he, Preston, had paid to the Government on account of the wrongdoing of Kearns. It appears that certain influential friends of Kearns were at the time of the pardon making arrangements to refund to Preston the amount he had been obliged to pay for his defaulting deputy, but the hasty pardon by the President prevented the consummation of this.

"We do not believe that Mr. Preston has any legal claim against the Government, but we do believe that he has an equitable claim due to the fact that by the action of the President in granting a pardon the claimant was denied the right which the statute evidently contemplated when it required as a part of the penalty the imposition of a fine equal to the amount of the defalcation.

"We therefore report the bill with the recommendation that it do pass."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

TERESA GIROLAMI.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3925) for the relief of Teresa Girolami.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,200 to Teresa Girolami, widow of Ettore Girolami, late an engineer in the United States Immigration Service, who lost his life in the discharge of his duty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

AUSTIN G. TAINTER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17964) for the relief of Austin G. Tainter.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

REMAINS OF THE LATE ROBERT CALDWELL CULBERTSON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20702) authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Robert A. Culbertson from Woodlawn Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Rocky Spring Cemetery, Chambersburg, Pa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the health officer of the District of Columbia be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Robert A. Culberson from Woodlawn Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Rocky Spring Cemetery, Chambersburg, Pa.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 5, strike out "A. Culberson" and insert "Caldwell Culbertson."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no objection to the bill. I am just wondering why it is necessary to pass it.

Mr. MANN. There is no law which authorizes the issuing of this permit. We have passed several of these bills at this session of Congress, usually on District day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the title was amended to read: "A bill authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late Robert Caldwell Culbertson from Woodlawn Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Rocky Spring Cemetery, Chambersburg, Pa."

AMATO CASTELLANO AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16777) for the relief of Amato Castellano, Libero Baranello, and Michele Baranello.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Amato Castellano, Libero Baranello, and Michele Baranello, all of Brooklyn, N. Y., the sum of $2,033.30, being the amount heretofore paid into the Treasury of the United States in settlement of their certain bail bond in the case of United States against Carmana Lobosco, convicted in the United States Circuit Court for the Eastern District of New York, and thereafter, while a fugitive from justice, rearrested through the efforts of said sureties.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 7 strike out the figures "$2,033.30" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM HENSLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13421) for the relief of William Hensley.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

MRS. JOSEPH CAMERON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15934) for the relief of Mrs. Joseph Cameron.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mrs. Joseph Cameron, widow of Joseph Cameron, the sum of $2,500, for physical and personal injuries sustained by said Joseph Cameron while in the employ of the United States Government near Minnehaha Falls, Mississippi River, in the State of Minnesota, and while he was working on Government Dam No. 1, on August 9, 1907.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 5, strike out the figures "$2,500" and substitute in lieu thereof the figures "$242."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FRANK HENRY ROGERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20439) for the relief of the heirs of the late Frank Henry Rogers.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of the late Frank Henry Rogers, who died from injuries received in the performance of his duties as an assistant superintendent of construction under the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, while engaged in inspection work on the Federal building at Bellaire, Ohio, the sum of $5,000.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 10, strike out the figures "$5,000," and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,500."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, if the gentleman will agree to change that amount to $2,190, which is a year's salary, I will not object.

Mr. POU. We will accept that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk calls attention to the fact that there is an error in the enacting clause.

Mr. POU. I move to strike out the word "Resolved," and insert in lieu thereof the words "Be it enacted."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "Resolved," in line 1, and insert the words "Be it enacted."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the committee amendment by changing the figures "$2,500" to "$2,190."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the committee amendment by striking out "$2,500," and inserting "$2,190."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

NABOR AND VICTORIA LEON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7043) for the relief of Nabor and Victoria Leon.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $780, and said sum of $780 is hereby appropriated, to be paid in such portions and under such regulations as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe to Nabor Leon and Victoria Leon, being, respectively, the father and mother of Rumaldo Leon, an employee of the United States, who was drowned in the course of his employment on construction work in the reclamation of arid lands at Granite Reef, on Salt River, Maricopa County, Ariz., on February 17, 1909, such sum being the amount to which the above relatives would have been entitled under the provisions of the act of Congress of May 30, 1908, but which they did not receive because the required affidavit of claim was not filed on their behalf within 90 days after the death, as required by section 4 of the said act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EVA G. BOND AND DAISY E. JACKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16594) for the relief of Eva G. Bond and Daisy E. Jackson, sole heirs of the late Warren F. Jackson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Eva G. Bond and Daisy E. Jackson, sole heirs of the late Warren F. Jackson, $266.27, for services rendered in carrying mail on route No. 8198, Louisiana, from January 1, 1861, to May 31, 1861.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] that it would be wise now to ask unanimous consent to move to reconsider the vote by which the several bills were passed and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the several votes by which the several bills were passed and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to the fact that it is now half past 11 o'clock.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the order of the House, the hour of half past 11 having arrived, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 11, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting an item of legislation with the suggestion that it be incorporated in section 78 of House bill 15902, entitled "An act to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications," pending in the Senate (H. Doc. No. 1586); to the Committee on Printing and ordered to be printed.

2. Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Kent Island Narrows, Md. (H. Doc. No. 1587); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20894) to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1393), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DUPRÉ, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 284) giving the consent of the United States for the State of Louisiana to institute suit against the United States in the Supreme Court of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1394), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STOUT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20498) to validate title to certain town sites in the State of Montana, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1395), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. SHERWOOD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 6980) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1390), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 7213) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1391), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 7402) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1392), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 11, 1915.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast made life exceeding precious by giving Thy life to the life of men. We have been called into union with the Divine. We are coworkers together with God not only because we can cooperate with God, but we can be coordinated with Thy life and Thy great purpose. We seek as the supreme end of life to know Thy will, and we ask for the grace that Thou alone canst give to us that we may do Thy will. We have not been put under the thralldom of the order of nature whose eternal note is recurrence; we have been given the power of the spirit which calls us ever onward and upward in the eternal progress of life. May we hold to the divine principle and seek to follow the guidance of the living God. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, February 5, 1915.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection to dispensing with the further reading of the Journal. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the Journal was resumed and concluded.

Mr. McCUMBER and Mr. SAULSBURY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I ask to be excused from further service on the——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us first settle the question on the approval of the Journal.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to be heard upon that question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before the Journal is approved, I think there is one matter in it which needs explanation. It needs explanation not only to set the occupant of the chair at the time in a proper light, but also myself. I therefore wish to very concisely state the conditions under which one of the rulings stated in the Journal was made.

I noticed in the press yesterday that it was alleged that, while the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] was in the chair, I had been taken off my feet in debate. Mr. President, that is not true. I was not taken off my feet in debate. When I yielded to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], I yielded to him without the reservation that I was yielding only for a question. My yielding was simply in these words:

I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

The Chair had a right to assume, as I did assume, that when the Senator from Illinois was recognized and I had yielded in that manner, I did not intend to proceed; and that is true. I did not intend to proceed any further; I intended that the Senator from Illinois should go on and make his address. As soon as the Senator from Illinois had begun his statement I added:

I yield the floor.

In whatever form that may be found in the RECORD those are the actual facts. So far as I was personally concerned, I had intended to yield the floor at that time, and the Senator from Tennessee, then in the chair, was justified in assuming, so far as I was personally concerned, that I had so intended.

The point of order that I made was, after the Senator from Illinois had been recognized and had spoken half a sentence, that he had the same right to retain his place upon the floor that I had, and that he could not be taken off the floor by the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. If anyone was taken off his feet at all, it was not myself, because I intended to yield at that time. I thought, Mr. President, that this statement ought to be made to clear the record.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, I was the occupant of the chair at the time the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] yielded the floor. The Chair did not recognize the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] except, as the Chair at first thought, for a question. When the Chair ascertained that it was the purpose of the Senator from North Dakota, as he has explained, to yield the floor, the Chair then recognized the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], who rose to a point of order. The point of order was that the Senator from North Dakota could not farm out the floor by yielding it to another Senator for a speech. I believe that that principle is well recognized, and, being in the chair, I sustained the point of order.

The question then was whom the Chair would recognize. As the transcript of the RECORD will show, the Chair did not recognize the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], because the Senator from North Carolina, after making his point of order, stated that he yielded to the Senator from Missouri, but the Chair made the following statement:

The question before the Senate is, first, the proposition of instructions to the committee.

The Senator from Missouri then stated:

Mr. President, has the Senator from North Dakota yielded the floor?

The Presiding Officer stated further:

If no one is going to proceed——

And was then about to state the question, when the Senator from Missouri said:

If he has—

Referring to the Senator from North Dakota—

I ask for recognition.

The Chair thereupon, instead of putting the pending question, recognized the Senator from Missouri. The Chair had never recognized the Senator from Illinois for the purpose of addressing the Senate other than when he asked the Senator from North Dakota if he yielded to the Senator from Illinois for a question, as the Chair thought, when the Senator from Illinois rose.

On the question of the appeal from the decision of the Chair on the question as to whom the Chair would recognize, the Chair declined to allow an appeal, because it is well recognized, under the rules of the Senate and under Jefferson's Manual, that there can be no appeal from the decision of the Chair as to which Senator is entitled to recognition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any further objection to the approval of the Journal or any correction proposed?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Chair recognize me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. For the purpose of correcting the Journal, yes; if not, no.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what I rose for, Mr. President.

I should like to have that portion of the Journal read which refers to the notice given by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] of an amendment proposing a change of the rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the portion of the Journal referred to.

The Secretary read as follows:

Pending further debate, Mr. WILLIAMS gave notice of an amendment intended to be proposed to Rule XXII of the Senate, as follows:

"Insert after the words 'to lay on the table,' in Rule XXII, the following:

"'Any Senator arising in his place and asserting that in his opinion an attempt is being made on the floor of the Senate to obstruct, hinder, or delay the right of the Senate to proceed to a vote, the Chair shall, without permitting any debate thereon, put the question to the Senate, "Is it the sense of the Senate that an attempt is being made to obstruct, hinder, or delay a vote?" And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative, then it shall be in order, to the exclusion of the consideration of all other questions, for any Senator to move to fix a time for voting on the pending bill or resolution and all amendments thereto, and the said motion shall be decided without debate: Provided, however, That the time fixed in said motion for taking the vote on the pending bill or resolution and all amendments thereto shall be at least two calendar days after the day on which said motion is made.'"

Pending further debate, on motion of Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., that the Senate adjourn——

Mr. SMOOT. That is all I desire to have read at this time.

The Journal is not complete in the statement that when the Senator from Mississippi gave notice of the proposed amendment to the rules I objected to the giving of the notice. As the RECORD will show, I objected upon the ground that it was after 2 o'clock, and that after 2 o'clock no morning business could be transacted, unless by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Where is the RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. I will call the attention of the presiding officer to page 3340 of the RECORD, and I will read it——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, then there is no dispute about that fact.

Mr. SMOOT. I beg pardon; I did not understand the remark of the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say there is no dispute about that fact.

Mr. SMOOT. I want the Journal to show that I objected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Journal ought also to show that when the Senator from Utah contended it was out of order I contended that it was not, and the Presiding Officer, whoever was in the chair at the time, said the protest would be noted, so that the matter had to come up later.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will pardon me, the Senator from Utah will observe that at a subsequent time I made a similar objection, and the Chair sustained the objection I made, which appears in the Journal.

Mr. SMOOT. That appears in the RECORD on page 3375, and the Journal is correct upon that point; but it is not complete, Mr. President, on the question which I have now brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. President, after the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] said that he would offer the notice, I said:

Mr. President, I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah object to receiving the amendment at this time?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the notice.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Secretary to return it to me. I shall myself read it, thus giving the notice under the rules requiring 24 hours.

Then he read the notice, after which the following occurred:

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I give that notice under the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection, of course, to the Senator giving it—

I said "reading it," and the RECORD is wrong in that respect, because I said, "I have no objection to the Senator reading it," not "giving it"— but I object to its being offered at this time. It is after 2 o'clock, and I also call attention to the fact that some six hours ago——

Then the Senator from Mississippi interrupted:

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a question of the highest privilege to offer a motion to amend the rules.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah make a point of order?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I object to the introduction of the notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice has been given to the Senate, but the effect of the notice will be for consideration at a future time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not offered a motion. I have given notice that I would offer it, and what the Senator is referring to concerns a motion.

Mr. SMOOT. The rules provide that the motion shall be in writing and shall go to the desk, and it must be in order before it can be presented. Already we are working on the legislative day of February 5; it is after 2 o'clock, and the unfinished business is before the Senate. There can be nothing offered, no bill or conference report or otherwise, unless by unanimous consent, and I object to the offering of this notice.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not offered as a motion.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a notice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is noted.

Mr. SMOOT. Is the objection sustained, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is nothing to which the objection is directed. The Senator from Mississippi has read the notice for the information of the Senate, and that is everything which has thus far transpired.

Mr. SMOOT. And that is all.

That is the RECORD, Mr. President, as it appears here, and there is nothing there to show that the Senator from Mississippi had authority to offer it. I objected to the notice being given at that time, and I think, Mr. President, the Chair sustained the objection. Certainly, under every ruling of the Chair in the past that I know anything of, the Senator had no right to offer that notice at that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There does not seem to have been any ruling, however.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I took it for granted, Mr. President, from what the Presiding Officer said, that the notice was not offered in the regular order, because the Senator read it himself. There was no objection to his reading it as a part of his speech, as I stated, but he certainly did not have the right under the rules to offer it except in its regular order, as the rules require.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To take up that matter is not now in order. If the Senator from Utah wishes to move to amend the Journal by having the Journal show that he did make the objection, I think the Journal ought to be amended to show it. I am perfectly willing to have the Journal amended to show it. After we are through with the Journal I shall rise to a question of parliamentary inquiry. We can then settle the dispute between us, and my conduct will be governed accordingly.

I am perfectly willing—and I think the Journal ought to be corrected, as a matter of fact, to show that the Senator from Utah did make the objection upon the ground that it was after the morning hour.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire that the Journal shall be corrected, by showing the fact that I did object to its introduction at that time, and the reasons why.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Journal may be corrected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise to a correction of the Journal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I rise to a further correction of the Journal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I likewise gave a notice of a proposed amendment to the rules, and sent it to the desk and had it read. A point of order was made against it, which was not ruled upon. The Journal shows that the point of order was sustained. In that respect the Journal is inaccurate, and I move to strike out the following words from the Journal:

The Presiding Officer sustained the question of order.

I call attention now to the RECORD, page 3375:

Mr. REED. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MCCUMBER. For a question, so that I do not lose the floor; that is all.

Mr. REED. That is understood. I ask to have read to the Senate, to go into the RECORD, what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read.

Thereupon the notice was read.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that that can not be received under existing circumstances.

Mr. REED. I will amend by inserting, after "February 19," the figures "1915."

Mr. GALLINGER. I raise the point of order against its reception, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from North Dakota yielded to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GALLINGER. But it is after 2 o'clock.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I yielded for nothing that would take me off the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. No business can be received under existing conditions, and I desire to say it is the duty of the Chair, under the rule, to enforce it without attention being called to it. It is after 2 o'clock of the legislative day of February 5, and neither a notice nor any other business can be received or transacted by the Senate without unanimous consent. I call attention——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had in mind whether unanimous consent was given or not when the Senator from Missouri presented it.

Mr. GALLINGER. There was no evidence given of the notice and he knew nothing as to what it was.

Mr. REED. It is merely a question of notice which is now presented to the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. REED. The question whether it is legally or properly a notice is to be settled when we come to a consideration of the rule.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the rule provides that a Senator shall not be interrupted for any such purpose, and it is the duty of the Chair, without any Senator calling it to the attention of the Chair, to enforce the rule.

Mr. REED. I have not yielded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor. The Chair had a right to ask if unanimous consent was given.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. Did the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota yielded on condition that he was not yielding the floor.

Mr. STONE. I raise the question of order that the Senator can not yield the floor for the introduction of new business on any condition.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have raised the same point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the very point I made.

Mr. STONE. I now ask for the recognition of the Chair to take the floor in my own right.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I have not yielded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair said the Senator from North Dakota did not yield the floor.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I did not yield, and I stated that I would not yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Official Reporter to read what transpired at the time the junior Senator from Missouri made the request of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. STONE. I do not press it further. I withdraw it.

Mr. REED. I want to say to the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Just a moment. The Official Reporter will read.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is withdrawn.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I understand it is withdrawn, and it is not necessary for the reporter to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the junior Senator from Missouri withdrawn his request?

Mr. REED. I did not withdraw my notice, but my colleague withdrew his request, because I stated to him what I had said to the Senator from North Dakota, that I would not take him off his feet.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right. Now, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice has been read, and it will go into the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has not a right to give the notice, and I make the point of order that it is not in order to present it at the present time.

Mr. MCCUMBER resumed his speech.

So, Mr. President, there was absolutely no ruling on the point of order. The notice was read to the Senate, and it appears in the RECORD, and the question as to whether or not it was properly given is one to be hereafter passed upon. Therefore I move to strike out of the minutes the words:

The Presiding Officer sustained the question of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. A careful reading of the RECORD sustains the position the Senator from Missouri takes this morning. I had supposed that the point was sustained by the Presiding Officer. That was my impression at the time.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I was in the chair at the time, and I did decide the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator did decide the point of order?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I sustained the point of order, and so instructed the Journal clerk.

Mr. GALLINGER. I so understood, Mr. President. I am glad to have the Senator from Tennessee verify my recollection of it, but, unfortunately, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD does not show that to have been the fact. I was so positive it was the fact that I was very much surprised when the Senator from Missouri read the RECORD.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Tennessee has confused this proposition with some other. I distinctly had in mind, when I offered this motion, that a point of order would be made against it. I distinctly had in mind that I intended to prevent a ruling upon that point of order, so that the questions could all be brought up together. I stood very close to the desk, and I went through with this proposition, and every word that was said that was audible to me appears in the RECORD, and the RECORD stands here as a verity.

What the Senator from Tennessee has in mind, I think, is that he sustained the right of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to keep the floor. There was a dispute. The Senator will remember that my colleague [Mr. STONE] came into the Chamber while the matter I was presenting was under discussion, and claimed the right to the floor upon the ground that the Senator from North Dakota had yielded, and that led to some colloquy back and forth. That was at this exact time, as the RECORD shows. So I insist that my motion to correct the RECORD ought to prevail, and then the question of the ruling can be settled later on.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Tennessee, who was in the chair, and inasmuch as it confirms my recollection of the matter, I hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. The Official Reporters at that time were, naturally, having a great deal of difficulty in taking down everything that transpired. The attitude of the Chair was that the notice of the Senator from Missouri had been read, and the question was whether or not it would be received by the Senate as a formal notice. After several collateral questions had arisen, the Senator from New Hampshire made the point of order that it could not be received. The Chair sustained the point of order, and, as he thought, in an audible tone. The Journal Clerk then turned and asked whether he was correct in putting down the fact that the point of order had been sustained, and the Chair so instructed the Journal Clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to correct the Journal. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. SMOOT called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THORNTON (when Mr. RANSDELL's name was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague, the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and to say that he is paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WEEKS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BRADY. I wish to inquire if the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. BRADY. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call resulted—yeas 17, nays 66, as follows:

YEAS—17.

Chilton	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Walsh

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the motion to correct the Journal, made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the yeas are 17 and the nays are 66; so the Journal stands in that particular as read.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply want to say a single word. I do not think the recollection of a man who happens to be in the chair ought to be any stronger than the recollection of a man who has proposed the motion and is watching the proceedings, when that Senator is backed by the solemn record taken in shorthand. The shorthand record ought to be followed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, let us have the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the approval of the Journal. There being no further errors to point out, the Journal will stand approved as read, subject to future correction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2334) for the relief of S. W. Langhorne and the legal representatives of H. S. Howell, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has been recognized.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WILLIAMS. To ask a question, but for nothing else.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to make an inquiry about the message just received from the House of Representatives. I did not hear very well the number of a bill filed. I should like to inquire if House bill 16896 is included in the bills?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yielded for an inquiry, and I thought the Senator rose to make an inquiry. Yielding for an inquiry at the desk might involve a different question. The Senator can make that inquiry later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is among the bills received.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me long enough to ask for the immediate consideration of that bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I will not.

Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry and with a view of obtaining a parliamentary determination of the question which was raised yesterday by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. There is no dispute about the facts, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, we can not hear what is being said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will suspend until there can be order in the Chamber.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am sure that is my fault. I always start off in a low voice. If the Senator had waited a moment I think he would have got it. I repeat, Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry and obtaining a parliamentary determination by the Senate of the question at issue raised by the objection made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] upon yesterday to a notice which I proposed to give to change the rule. There is no dispute about the facts at all. I had the floor in my own right, unlike the case of the Senator from Missouri, where the Chair sustained the objection. Having the floor in my own right, I said that I proposed to give notice under the rule for a motion to change Rule XXII, giving that notice in writing in the manner demanded by Rule XL of the Senate. That rule reads as follows:

No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice in writing, specifying precisely the rule or part proposed to be suspended, modified, or amended, and the purpose thereof.

This is the only thing in the rules of the Senate which relates to the subject of a notice to amend the rules of the Senate. The purpose of the rule, in the light of which the rule is to be construed, is that a question of changing the rules of the Senate shall not come up for consideration until Senators have had an opportunity to read the proposed change in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is not a motion, it is not a resolution, it is not legislative in its character in any degree; it is a notice, and it is not a notice to be received but a notice to be given.

There is no method provided wherein the Senate receives or refuses to receive the notice. There is no vote of the Senate involved in the proposition. You have the right to give the notice, and no vote comes up at all, except when a motion later on is made that the motion to amend shall be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts, who did not hear me a moment ago. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] made the objection upon the ground that the morning hour had expired, so it follows that in his opinion notices for a change in the rules ought to be considered in the morning hour.

When you turn to Rule VII of the Senate it says what business shall be considered in the morning hour and the order in which it shall be considered. First—

The presentation of petitions and memorials.

This notice is neither a petition nor a memorial.

Reports of standing and select committees.

This is not a report of any sort of a committee.

The introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

This is neither a bill nor a joint resolution nor the introduction of one, but a notice under Rule XL, a mere administrative act, not a legislative act at all, the object of which is to give Senators an opportunity to know the nature of the proposed change before they consent to send it to the committee or to take any other action upon it.

Concurrent and other resolutions.

All of which shall be received and disposed of in such order, unless unanimous consent shall be otherwise given.

Mr. President, there is not a rule of the Senate which confines the giving of a notice to change the rules of this body to the morning hour. Of course, when a Senator rises and proposes to make a report or to introduce a bill, except such bills as are permitted to be handed in at the desk by a general rule, or to present a memorial or a petition, the rule requiring that to be done in the morning hour is operative unless unanimous consent can be obtained to present either one of them out of order after the time fixed by the rules of the Senate when they shall be presented.

The mistake in the mind of the Senator from Utah is in regarding this notice as a legislative act. The notice is not a legislative act. It is not even a resolution; it is not a bill; it is not anything except a compliance with an act which the rule requires shall be taken before a motion to amend the rules shall be considered or referred.

I contend, Mr. President, that the point of order made by the Senator, to wit, that the notice could not be received at that time, was not well taken, because he put it upon the ground—and it is the only ground on which he can place it, and that ground is not a good one—that it was after the morning hour.

Now, let me go on with the facts, Mr. President, for they are important. I had the floor in my own right. The notice was read. It was read by me. The rules do not require that the notice shall be read by the Secretary. There is no rule of this body which says so. In fact, it is very doubtful as to whether it is necessary that it should be read at all. The rule merely requires that the notice shall be given in writing; but as there is no way of conveying to the Senate the substance of a notice given in writing except by reading, it follows, I think, that it must be read by somebody. It is not like a bill or a joint resolution, where the rules require that it shall be read by the Secretary, altogether three times, and all that. Rule XL says nothing except that this notice shall be given.

No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be in order except on one day's notice in writing, specifying precisely the rule or part proposed to be suspended, modified, or amended.

That is the only limitation upon the power to give notice to change the rules of this body. Why is it the only limitation? Because it is necessarily a matter of the highest privilege to submit to any legislative body a proposition to change the rules whereunder it does business, so much so that the committee on rules in most bodies has special privileges, and a report from that committee to change the rules of the body has precedence over nearly all other sorts of business.

Mr. President, I contend that this notice was given in writing, as required by the rule, specifying the rule to be changed; that it was read, so that the Senate might know that it had been given. The reading is not the essence of it; the giving in writing is of the essence, and the reading is mere testimony to the fact that the notice in writing was given; that is all.

I contend, moreover, and there is no dispute about that, the Chair did not decide the point of order made by the Senator from Utah, but expressly said that that would receive consideration at a future time. I am not giving the exact language of the Chair, but that was the substance of it. Was it not? I appeal to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I will give the exact wording of the Presiding Officer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, give it to me.

Mr. ROOT. On what page?

Mr. SMOOT. On page 3758 of the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is nothing to which the objection is directed. The Senator from Mississippi has read the notice for the information of the Senate, and that is everything which has thus far transpired.

Mr. SMOOT. And that is all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, later, the Chair says something about the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. It must be before that. I will read all the Chair said.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right, when you get it. I will go ahead, and you can read it later.

The Chair said nothing is before the Senate for consideration; the Senator from Mississippi has read the notice. For what?

For the information of the Senate. The sole object of reading a notice to amend the rules is for the information of the Senate. If this had been a resolution or a bill when it is read merely for information it is, of course, not a reading for consideration by the Senate of the bill itself, but the sole object of reading this notice is the information of the Senate.

This notice was given in writing, as required by the rule, and it was read for the only purpose for which this sort of paper can be read, to wit, for the information of the Senate, because the consideration of it does not come up until 24 hours afterwards, and can not come up. Of course the Chair was correct in that, and the Chair was correct later in stating that that would be a matter of future consideration; that is to say, the point of order made by the Senator and what I said not in the shape of argument, that it was a matter of high privilege.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there is no general rule among the Senate rules governing what are called notices. Ordinary notices, like notices of a speech or notice that a Senator intends to call up or move to take up a bill are mere matters of information; they have no binding effect whatever. There being no general rule as to notices we must judge this upon the rule which establishes it. The other notices have no parliamentary standing whatsoever. This notice has a parliamentary standing because it is included in a rule. The rule requires that the notice shall be given in writing. I will read the language.

> Except on one day's notice in writing, specifying precisely—

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, stop there. Was it not in writing?

Mr. LODGE. I was going to touch on that. I think it was not. The mere reading by a Senator in his place does not constitute the notice in writing required by the rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Let me finish. For the Senate to take official notice and have parliamentary possession of a notice in writing it must come into the possession of the Senate. It must be formally received as a House bill is received, and it is not received until it is laid before the Senate. This notice, as I understand, was not filed at the desk and has never been received by the Senate. This notice is an integral part of legislative action. You can not put it on the ground that it is a mere notice. It is a part of the procedure for changing the rules. It is established by the Senate and is an inseparable portion of the procedure for changing the rules. It is not a mere notice of no binding parliamentary force.

I have not looked at the RECORD, but I believe it was sent to the desk; but it was not read from the desk, but was returned. Is that correct?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Mississippi took it back.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Mississippi went to the desk and took the resolution back, and it was not read from the desk. Therefore it has never been in the possession of the Senate. It has never been received by the Senate. The mere reading of it and having it printed in the RECORD is not a notice under the rule. The notice, to have a parliamentary standing, must be in possession of the Senate formally, as a bill is put formally in possession of the Senate. That has never occurred to this notice, and I repeat it is an integral part of the legislation proposed, which is a change of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah. On what page is it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. On page 3758.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Utah will pardon me a moment, I want to correct an error made by the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator says the notice was not sent to the desk. Here is what happened. The notice was sent to the desk.

Mr. LODGE. I said so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a moment.

Mr. LODGE. I said it was sent to the desk.

Mr. WILIAMS. The Presiding Officer ordered the Secretary to read it. You will find it on page 3758 of the RECORD of February 9:

> The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the notice.
> Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Secretary to return it to me. I shall myself read it, thus giving the notice.

So there was the order of the Chair to read the notice, and the only thing that took place at all was that the reading was done, and although the Chair had ordered the Secretary to read it, I read it; nobody objecting, it must have been done, of course, by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. Allow me to correct the Senator from Mississippi. The Senator from Mississippi, at the conclusion of his remarks upon that day, made this statement:

> Mr. President, I now offer the following notice of a motion to amend the rules, to go over for 24 hours under the rule.
> Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I object.
> Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that it be read.

Then the Presiding Officer said:

> Does the Senator from Utah object to receiving the notice at this time?
> Mr. SMOOT. I do.
> Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

Then the Presiding Officer interrupted the Senator from New York:

> The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the notice.

I was going to object to that, but the Senator from Mississippi rose and said:

> I ask the Secretary to return it to me. I shall myself read it, thus giving the notice under the rules requiring 24 hours.

He read the notice, and I immediately said:

> I have no objection, of course, to the Senator reading it, but I object to its being offered at this time. It is after 2 o'clock; and I also call attention to the fact that some six hours ago——

Then the Senator from Mississippi interrupted me again.

Mr. President, the notice has never been printed, and it has never been laid upon the desks of Senators, as it would have been if it had been presented to the Senate.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to a further expression, which is necessary to complete the statement?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise to make an inquiry and not to interrupt. I wish to ascertain whether the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is still holding the floor or whether the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has the floor?

Mr. LODGE. No; I am not holding the floor. I rose to obtain recognition, and I shall wait until opportunity offers.

Mr. ROOT. The conclusion of the whole matter referred to by the Senator from Utah was in these words:

> The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is nothing to which the objection is directed. The Senator from Mississippi has read the notice for the information of the Senate, and that is everything which has thus far transpired.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Then I said immediately after that:

> And that is all.

I was content, Mr. President, as the objector, if that was the situation in the Senate. I had no objection whatever to the Senator reading the notice as a part of his speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg pardon; that was not all the Presiding Officer said. Upon the same page, and just above it, the Senator will find that the Presiding Officer used this language:

> The notice has been given to the Senate, but the effect of the notice will be for consideration at a future time.

Then the Chair later added what the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] has just stated.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but he added that after I made this statement:

> The rules provide that the motion shall be in writing, and shall go to the desk, and it must be in order before it can be presented. Already we are working on the legislative day of February 5; it is after 2 o'clock and the unfinished business is before the Senate. There can be nothing offered, no bill or conference report or otherwise, unless by unanimous consent, and I object to the offering of this notice.

Then the Presiding Officer made this statement:

> The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is nothing to which the objection is directed. The Senator from Mississippi has read the notice for the information of the Senate and that is everything which has thus far transpired.
> Mr. SMOOT. And that is all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I now ask for a ruling by the Chair. I want a ruling for this reason: I am very doubtful if a notice of this sort can be given during the morning hour, because the rules enumerate just the things which can be done during the morning hour, and this is not one of them. If it can not be done during the morning hour, and can not be done after the moring hour, it can not be done at all. I therefore ask for a ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator from Mississippi, I will say that if there had not been unfinished business, of course the notice could have been presented after the morning hour; but we were on the unfinished business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the point; and I ask for a ruling of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a rule of the Senate to the effect that a Senator upon the floor can not be taken off his feet for such a purpose as this, or for any other purpose—making a report or introducing a bill or a resolution. As the Chair understands, the Senator from Mississippi had the floor in his own right. The Chair does not see how, except by the exercise of a very refined technicality, there is the slightest doubt in the minds of Senators that the Senator from Mississippi had reduced to writing and read and left upon the Secretary's table this notice. The Chair accordingly rules that the Senator from Mississippi has complied with all the requirements of the law with reference to notice to be given.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I now ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SMOOT. On that ruling I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the request for the yeas and nays seconded?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I withdraw the appeal.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand, the Senator from Mississippi asks to have the notice referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair lays before the Senate a notice, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1915.

MR. PRESIDENT: I very respectfully move that the honorable Committee on Rules be discharged from further consideration of S. Res. 283, proposing an amendment to Rule XIX of the Standing Rules of the Senate and proposing cloture.

ROBERT L. OWEN.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over one day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It goes over under the rule. The Chair lays before the Senate a notice, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the United States Senate:

Pursuant to the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice that I propose the following amendment to the Standing Rules of the Senate: Add at the end of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate the following:

"Not later than the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. of the calendar day February 19, 1915, all debate upon Senate bill No. 6856 shall cease, and at the time aforesaid the Senate shall proceed to vote upon said bill and all amendments thereto without further debate. The final vote upon said bill shall be taken not later than 5 o'clock p. m. of said date.

"The foregoing proceedings shall have precedence over all other motions whatsoever."

I will move the adoption of said amendment as soon as permitted by the rules of the Senate so to do.

The purpose of said proposed amendment is to terminate the obstructive tactics now being pursued with reference to the above-named bill and to cause a vote to be had thereupon at the time above specified.

JAS. A. REED.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The notice will go over.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, one moment. I make the point of order on the notice that has been read that it is obviously and on its face not an amendment to the standing rules of the Senate. The rules of the Senate are standing rules, and to be an amendment to the rules the amendment must be general in its character, like the amendment just offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. This proposition carries on its face the statement that it terminates on February 19; that it deals with a special bill. It can not, therefore, be a standing rule of the Senate. This proposed amendment is a special order, which it is perfectly proper to offer; but I make the point of order that it is not and can not be an amendment to the standing rules of the Senate, because it expires by its own limitation on the 19th of February. The standing rules of the Senate, as the term implies, are general and continuous rules, while this is limited to a particular case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think he is called upon now to decide that question. The proposition is presented, and assumes to be a notice to amend the rules of the Senate. It goes over for a day. When it comes up it will then be for the Senate to determine whether or not it is an amendment of the rules. At the present time the Chair does not feel called upon to decide that question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are petitions in order, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not yet. The Chair has a few matters on the table which he desires to lay before the Senate.

The Chair has received copies of the telegrams introduced by the Senator from Missouri, and will therefore not lay them before the Senate.

PUBLIC PRINTING ANND BINDING (H. DOC. NO. 1586).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, suggesting certain amendments to be included in the bill to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and distribution of Government publications, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PURCHASE OF ARMY SUPPLIES (S. DOC. NO. 940).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, suggesting certain proposed changes to be made in the Army appropriation bill relative to the purchase or manufacture of stores or material by the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 939).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting estimates of appropriations for contingent expenses, office of the secretary of the Territory of Alaska, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusion filed by the court in the following causes:

The cause of Esther E. Hale, widow of Christopher J. Hale, v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 943); and

The cause of Lydia E. Butler, widow of George A. Butler, v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 942).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution of the Senate of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, SENATE CHAMBER,
Sacramento, Cal., January 30, 1915.

Resolution by Senator Kehoe.

Whereas the State of California is most splendidly endowed with rivers and harbors, the improvement of which would have a marked effect upon not only the development of this Commonwealth, but of the entire United States; and

Whereas it is highly desirable, if not essential, to wise national legislation and appropriation on rivers and harbors, that the congressional Committee on Rivers and Harbors acquire intimate and personal knowledge of conditions and possibilities with respect to California's rivers and harbors: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the State of California respectfully requests and urges Congress of the United States to empower and authorize its Rivers and Harbors Committee to visit the State of California with the express purpose of personally inspecting all of its harbors and its navigable rivers: And be it further

Resolved, That the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Congress be invited, and the invitation is hereby issued, to visit the State of California for such purpose: And be it further

Resolved, That the president of the senate be authorized to appoint a legislative reception and entertainment committee, to be composed of not less than one member from each congressional district of the State of California to be visited by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Congress: And be it further

Resolved, That the president of the senate and the speaker of the assembly, the State engineer and the chairman of the State board of control, be ex officio members of said committee: And be it further

Resolved, That said legislative reception and entertainment committee be authorized to make all arrangements with respect to the itinerary of the visiting committee of Congress: And be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be immediately forwarded to the Presiding Officers of both Houses of the National Congress.

Attest:

EDWIN F. SMITH, Secretary of Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[House concurrent resolution No. 4. By Lemon and McCollister.]

House concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to pass the Sheppard-Hobson resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to prohibit the manufacture, sale, transportation, exportation, and importation of intoxicating liquors.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and the same is hereby, earnestly memorialized and requested to pass the Sheppard-Hobson resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to prohibit the manufacture, sale, transportation, exportation, and importation of intoxicating liquors at the earliest date possible.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, properly certified, be forwarded at once to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate, also a copy to each of Oklahoma's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Passed the house of representatives the 18th day of January, 1915.

A. MCCRORY,
Speaker of House of Representatives.

Passed the senate the 21st day of January, 1915.

M. E. TRAPP,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of house concurrent resolution No. 4.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF COLORADO,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Colorado, ss:

I, John E. Ramer, secretary of state of the State of Colorado, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of the house joint memorial No. 1, by Mr. Dunklee, Rocky Mountain National Park (forest reserves and forestry), which was filed in this office the 3d day of February, A. D. 1915, at 3.10 o'clock p. m., and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Colorado at the city of Denver this 4th day of February, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.]

JNO. E. RAMER, Secretary of State.
By GEORGE M. WILLIAMS, Deputy.

[House joint memorial No. 1, by Mr. Dunklee.]

House joint memorial No. 1. Rocky Mountain National Park (forest reserves and forestry).

To Hon. WOODROW WILSON, President United States of America, and the Congress of the United States:

Resolved, By the house of representatives of the Twentieth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, the senate concurring, that the bill for the establishment of the Rocky Mountain National Park in Colorado that has passed the United States Senate and is now pending in the National House of Representatives be now favorably acted upon and approved by the President of the United States.

The Yellowstone National Park has its "Old Faithful," the Yosemite Valley its "El Capitan," the proposed Rocky Mountain park has "Longs Peak," over 14,000 feet in height, with marvelous canyons, precipitous walls, and dashing waterfalls, while the whole region is one of beauty and grandeur of ever-changing color.

This proposed park is unsurpassed in beauty by any other national park and far more accessible to the great centers of population. Further, it is of the greatest importance to the State and Nation to secure this as a park, and it should be established as such by the passage of the bill now pending in the national House of Representatives. Let the Nation then forever preserve this beautiful and remarkable scenic region for the perpetual use and pleasure of the people.

Further resolved, That this memorial be entered in the records of the general assembly and copies thereof forwarded by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, to the United States National House of Representatives, and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

PHILIP B. STEWART,
Speaker House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Nebraska, which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution on irrigation.

Whereas a controversy has arisen between the citizens of Colorado, Wyoming, and also the Reclamation Service of the United States, and the citizens of Nebraska with reference to the control of the waters in the interstate streams; and

Whereas the State of Colorado is claiming to own and control all of the waters of the Republican and Platte Rivers that head in Colorado and pass through the State of Nebraska, and is depriving the citizens of Nebraska of their just rights to the use of the water for irrigation and other purposes in Nebraska, and subsequent appropriators of waters in Colorado have made the South Platte River dry, and deprived the Nebraska citizens of the use of its waters; and

Whereas there is a suit pending in the Federal court between the citizens of Nebraska and the State of Colorado over the rights of Nebraska citizens on the Republican River, and there is also pending in the Federal courts a suit involving the rights of Colorado to take the waters of the North Platte River which head in Colorado; and

Whereas the State of Nebraska ought to protect the rights of its citizens to the waters of the river in Nebraska as against the Federal Government and against the States of Colorado and Wyoming: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska in session assembled, That the attorney general of the State of Nebraska is hereby requested and directed to bring an action in Federal court against the State of Colorado and its officials to protect the rights of the Nebraska citizens on the South Platte River. He is further requested and directed to intervene on behalf of the State of Nebraska in the suits pending in the Federal court involving the rights of the State of Nebraska and its people in the waters of the Republican and North Platte Rivers; and be it further

Resolved, That the attorney general of the State of Nebraska is hereby requested and directed to protect in the courts the rights of citizens of the State of Nebraska to the waters of the Pathfinder Reservoir on the North Platte River; and be it further

Resolved, That in order to accomplish this need the Federal Congress be, and it is hereby, urged and requested to pass Senate joint resolution No. 180, introduced by Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, conferring upon the State of Nebraska the right to bring an action in the court against the Federal Reclamation Service in order to have adjudicated in the courts the rights of the citizens of the State of Nebraska to the surplus waters of the Pathfinder Reservoir; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to Senators NORRIS and HITCHCOCK and to the Congressmen from Nebraska, and that copies of this resolution be also forwarded to the United States Senate and the Federal Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Washington, which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial No. 5.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, do most respectfully represent and petition:

Whereas in order to secure the exploration and development of coal and oil resources it is necessary that leases be executed by the State of Washington, granting authority to its lessees to explore such coal and oil resources and to extract the same from its lands, and to use so much of the surface as may be necessary therefor upon the payment of a proper rental or royalty; and

Whereas by the terms of the act of Congress approved February 22, 1889, providing for the formation of constitutions and State governments for the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington, and the admission thereof into the Union, and making donations of public lands to such States, it was provided that the lands so donated and granted may be leased for periods of not more than five years in quantities not exceeding one section to any one person or company: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington do request the Congress of the United States to so amend the aforesaid act of February 22, 1889, as to permit the said several States, including the State of Washington, by its proper officers, to execute leases for the exploration and extraction of the aforesaid minerals which may be contained upon or beneath the surface of any of said granted lands, together with the right to use so much of the surface of said lands as may be necessary therefor, and for such periods of time as may be determined by or under the legislative authority of said States.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forthwith transmitted to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on Public Lands, the Secretary of the Interior, and to each Member of the Washington delegation in Congress.

Passed the senate February 1, 1915.
Passed the house February 5, 1915.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented resolutions of the Senate of the State of Missouri, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MISSOURI SENATE,
Jefferson City, Mo., February 5, 1915.

Mr. PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE IN CONGRESS:

I am instructed by the Senate of Missouri to inform you that the senate has taken up and adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas the frequent floods of the Mississippi River, caused by waters from 31 States, embracing more than 41 per cent of the total area of the United States, result in great loss of human lives in portions of the States of Illinois, Tennessee, Kentucky, Mississippi, Missouri, Arkansas, and Louisiana, and large money losses, not only in such afflicted territory but in other portions of the Nation; and

"Whereas it has been declared by every member of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army who has dealt with such floods, by the Mississippi River Commission, and by other commissions appointed by Congress, that such floods can be prevented at a reasonable cost; and

"Whereas the work of such flood prevention has been going on for many years in the least economical way, and over two-thirds of its cost has been borne by the damaged sections, who can no longer cope with this giant problem without effective aid from the National Government; and

"Whereas all political parties have declared in their campaign platforms that flood control of the Mississippi River is a national duty: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Missouri, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to fulfill this national duty at its next session and to enact such legislation as shall provide a separate and comprehensive plan for the prevention of such floods without delay; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States."

Respectfully,

W. A. NORMAN,
Secretary Missouri State Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented the petition of Nathaniel Bacon, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to limit the property that any one person may acquire by gift or inheritance in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the memorial of Wesley Salmons and sundry other citizens of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the exclusion of certain matter from the mail, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Evangelical Church of Peace, at Schleswig, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to enable the President of the United States to lay an embargo upon all contraband of war, excepting foodstuffs alone, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have had a great many letters and numerous telegrams concerning an item in the Post Office appropriation bill. I ask that the telegram I send to the desk may be read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, as follows:

[Telegram.]

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., February 11, 1915.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.:

All railway postal clerks in New Hampshire respectfully ask you to oppose the change from annual to biennial promotions for men of this service.

GEORGE W. GRAY,
President Portsmouth Branch, Railway Mail Association.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a memorial of Mount Washington Lodge, No. 276, International Association of Machinists, of Concord, N. H., remonstrating against any change being made in the present locomotive boiler inspection laws, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Merchants' Association, of Berlin, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to place a tax on firms conducting a mail-order business, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented memorials of sundry citizens of Nebraska, remonstrating against the exclusion of certain matter from the mail, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee presented petitions of sundry citizens of Tennessee, praying for the passage of the so-called omnibus claims bill, which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I present certain letters and resolutions relating to the pending shipping bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, February 4, 1915.

Hon. JAMES A. O'GORMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SENATOR: We venture to express to you in this way our admiration of your action toward defeat of the so-called ship-purchase bill. Without exception, so far as we can ascertain, the exporting houses, who, of all business men, are most deeply interested in ships to carry American merchandise, are opposed to the measure proposed. Let us express the hope that you will succeed in decisively preventing such dangerous legislation.

Very respectfully,

CHINA & JAPAN TRADING CO. (LTD.),

Resolutions.

Whereas many nations are now engaged in a most disastrous war and are drawing, directly or indirectly, large supplies of arms and munitions of war from the United States of America; and

Whereas this war material obtained in the United States tends to multiply the loss of life, already appalling, and to cause an immense destruction of property, that is bringing nations to desolation and tends to prolong the war; and

Whereas we, on the one hand, from our hearts lift up our voices in prayer for peace and contribute to the relief of those who have been maimed and made destitute by the war, on the other hand are aiding in war and augmenting the struggle by sending our military stores to the battle fields of Europe; and

Whereas our Government has proclaimed strict neutrality, thus assuring the American citizens of all nationalities and the belligerent nations that our own acts shall break no bonds of friendship with the countries with whom we are at peace and create no discord among our citizens here by discriminating against their native land; and

Whereas this country has recognized the right of our Government to withhold war supplies from contending armies by laying an embargo upon munitions of war when the feeble armies of Mexico were arrayed against each other, nevertheless we now offer our limitless supplies to the belligerents of Europe; and

Whereas Great Britain has prohibited the importation of foodstuffs into Belgium, except such as are under the care of the Red Cross: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, citizens of St. Paul and Minneapolis in mass meeting assembled, hereby declare that it is the imperative duty of the Congress of the United States to pass the necessary laws forthwith that will enable the President of these United States to lay an embargo upon all contraband of war, saving and excepting foodstuffs alone, and thereby withdraw from the contending powers all aid and assistance of the Republic; be it further

Resolved, That we are in strict sympathy with the Christian endeavor of our Nation to appeal to the God of all nations that peace may come, and that we reject as hypocrisy and national sacrilege the commercial spirit of our country that is answering our supplications for peace by sending the instruments of destruction and death to the armies of Europe; and be it further

Resolved, That we urge upon our Government that it use its good offices to induce the Government of Great Britain to permit the importation of foodstuffs from neutral countries to Belgium's starving multitudes; and be it further

Resolved, That we call upon our fellow citizens everywhere to join with us in enforcing that strict American neutrality which will be exactly impartial in the treatment of the belligerents and that will withhold American resources from promoting destruction and slaughter among the nations of Europe; and be it further

Resolved, That the chairman of this mass meeting appoint a legislative committee to promote the enactment of a law that will place all such power in the hands of the President, and that a copy of these resolutions be placed by this committee so appointed in the hands of every Congressman, Senator, and Cabinet officer of these United States.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., January 20, 1915.

Hon. JAMES A. O'GORMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: As business men and citizens of the United States with neutral tendencies in the present European conflict, but stanch lovers of our own constitutional and international rights and of the rights of weaker countries under our protection, namely, the Monroe doctrine, both in our internal and foreign business relations.

As our representative, how long is our Government and that part of it which should demand and if necessary enforce our indisputable neutral rights (with some respect for our interpretation of what our United States rights are) in its marine ownership and all its business affairs, both foreign and internal, stand by and let a foreign country dictate to our Government how our Government should be conducted—financially, internally, and foreign?

How long is our Government to allow ships of war of foreign countries to infringe on our neutral shores and shores of weaker neutral countries, as the many incidents complained of by neutral shippers, such as Capt. Anderson, off the New Jersey coast, and the Metophan and China, whom we guaranteed to protect? How long is our Government to allow foreign naval officers to board neutral ships of countries not active in this war, and cleared to neutral countries, and confiscate material and mail to and from neutral countries and to and from the United States for American citizens and American business men? We look to you as our representative to raise your voice in protest to this inactivity on the part of our Government in not enforcing our absolute rights, and not what a foreign country thinks our rights are. We also ask you to give your support to an American merchant marine—if not by private capital, then by the United States Government—as soon as possible to aid our merchants to ship and, if necessary, with protection their goods. Our business in the country is being paralyzed for want of ships to carry our manufactured goods, products, and foodstuffs, as you know; or why the war tax, which we resent? Why not an export tax?

Awaiting your favorable reply, we are your constituents, and respectfully submit our indorsements:

Mr. JAMES. I have a telegram from the president of the Louisville Branch of the Railway Mail Association, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, as follows:

LOUISVILLE, KY., February 10, 1915.

Hon. O. M. JAMES, Washington, D. C.:

Two hundred railway postal clerks of Louisville respectfully ask you to oppose the change from annual to biennial promotions for the men of this service.

JOHN M. COOMBS,
President Louisville Branch Railway Mail Association.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Salt Lake City, Utah, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BURTON presented memorials of sundry citizens of Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of liquor in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation for the purpose of taxing those engaged in the mail-order business, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NELSON. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Bendixen offers the following resolution:

"Whereas it has been proposed and is being urged from various sources that the Congress of the United States place an embargo on the exportation of agricultural products; and

"Whereas this is not being urged on the ground of any shortage or prospective shortage of such products, but on the ground that prices have recently advanced somewhat, especially on cereal products; and

"Whereas such embargo would be unjust and unfair to the agricultural interests of this State, in that it would deprive such interests of the advantages and benefits derived from the demand from foreign nations for these products; and

"Whereas the agricultural interests of this Nation by Federal legislation have been placed in direct competition with the same interests of other nations, they are justly entitled to all the advantages of an open world market; and

"Whereas the State of Minnesota is preeminently an agricultural State and would suffer greatly from such embargo, and all its business interests would be seriously affected by the injury that would logically and necessarily follow such embargo: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Minnesota House of Representatives, the senate concurring, earnestly and emphatically request the Representatives in Congress and United States Senators from this State to use their influence and vote to defeat any measure proposing such embargo; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house and the secretary of the senate be, and hereby are, instructed to forward a copy of these resolutions to each of the Representatives in Congress and each Senator from this State."

Mr. NELSON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of Local Branch, Brotherhood of Boiler Makers, of St. Paul, Minn., remonstrating against any change in the present locomotive boiler inspection laws, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of Local Branch, Minnesota Dairymen's Association, of Nicollet, Minn., remonstrating against any change in the present oleomargarine law, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KENYON. I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of Iowa, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to investigate the origin of foot-and-mouth disease.

Whereas the recent outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease has occasioned to the citizens of this State loss aggregating many thousands of dollars; and

Whereas it is believed to have been transmitted to the live stock in this State through the Union Stock Yards, in Chicago, Ill.: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized and requested to institute an investigation of the Union Stock Yards, of Chicago, Ill., with the view of determining—

First. The origin of the said disease known as foot-and-mouth disease;

Second. The methods employed in disposing of stock found in said yards to be infected therewith;

Third. As to whether or not there is segregation of the diseased animals and whether or not the same are separated from those not infected with such disease;

Fourth. As to the relative cost to the consumer of feed furnished or other services rendered to the patrons of said yards; and Fifth. That the said Congress take such action as may, in its judgment, be deemed necessary to prevent a recurrence of such outbreak of said disease.

Be it further resolved, That the Iowa Senators and Iowa Members of Congress be requested to support measures looking toward such investigation and favor legislation that may be designed to remedy such evil.

Be it further resolved, That copy of this resolution be transmitted to each Iowa Senator and each Iowa Member of Congress, and that a copy of the same be transmitted to His Excellency Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States.

W. L. HARDING,
President of the Senate.
W. I. ATKINSON,
Speaker of the House.

I hereby certify that this concurrent resolution originated in the senate.

THOMAS WATTERS, Jr.,
Secretary of the Senate.

Introduced and adopted by the senate January 30, 1915.
House concurred February 2, 1915.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a telegram from the secretary of the Farmers and Grain Dealers' Association of North Dakota. It is very brief, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Telegram.]

SHERWOOD, N. DAK., February 3, 1915.

Senator GRONNA, Washington, D. C.:

Our association protests on any embargo on exports of farm products, especially grain.

A. A. LANE,
Secretary Farmers and Grain Dealers' Association of North Dakota.

Mr. NORRIS. I present a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution on irrigation.

Whereas a controversy has arisen between the citizens of Colorado, Wyoming, and also the Reclamation Service of the United States, and the citizens of Nebraska, with reference to the control of the waters in the interstate streams; and

Whereas the State of Colorado is claiming to own and control all of the waters of the Republican and Platte Rivers that head in Colorado and pass through the State of Nebraska, and is depriving the citizens of Nebraska of their just rights to the use of the water for irrigation and other purposes in Nebraska, and subsequent appropriators of waters in Colorado have made the South Platte River dry and deprived the Nebraska citizens of the use of its waters; and

Whereas there is a suit pending in the Federal court between the citizens of Nebraska and the State of Colorado over the rights of Nebraska citizens on the Republican River, and there is also pending in the Federal courts a suit involving the rights of Colorado to take the waters of the North Platte River which head in Colorado; and

Whereas the State of Nebraska ought to protect the rights of its citizens to the waters of the river in Nebraska as against the Federal Government and against the States of Colorado and Wyoming: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska in session assembled, That the attorney general of the State of Nebraska is hereby requested and directed to bring an action in Federal court against the State of Colorado and its officials to protect the rights of the Nebraska citizens on the South Platte River. He is further requested and directed to intervene on behalf of the State of Nebraska in the suits pending in the Federal court involving the rights of the State of Nebraska and its people in the waters of the Republican and North Platte Rivers; and be it further

Resolved, That the attorney general of the State of Nebraska is hereby requested and directed to protect in the courts the rights of citizens of the State of Nebraska to the waters of the Pathfinder Reservoir on the North Platte River; and be it further

Resolved, That in order to accomplish this need the Federal Congress be, and it is hereby, urged and requested to pass Senate joint resolution No. 180, introduced by Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, conferring upon the State of Nebraska the right to bring an action in the court against the Federal Reclamation Service in order to have adjudicated in the courts the rights of the citizens of the State of Nebraska to the surplus waters of the Pathfinder Reservoir; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to Senators NORRIS and HITCHCOCK and to the Congressmen from Nebraska, and that copies of this resolution be also forwarded to the United States Senate and the Federal Congress.

SCOTT REYNOLDS.
F. E. STEARNS.
W. M. STEBBINS.
M. A. HOSTETLER.
J. E. HARRIS.
SAMUEL M. PATTERSON.

The above and foregoing resolution was duly passed by the house of representatives this 3d day of February, 1915.

G. W. POTTS, Chief Clerk.

Mr. PENROSE presented petitions of sundry citizens of Ephrata, Pa., praying for the continuance of free rural delivery, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington, requesting legislation permitting that State to lease coal lands granted to the State by the United States on terms to be fixed by the legislature of the State. I ask that the memorial may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial No. 5.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, do most respectfully represent and petition:

Whereas in order to secure the exploration and development of coal and oil resources it is necessary that leases be executed by the State of Washington granting authority to its lessees to explore such coal and oil resources and to extract the same from its lands, and to use so much of the surface as may be necessary therefor, upon the payment of a proper rental or royalty; and

Whereas by the terms of the act of Congress approved February 22, 1889, providing for the formation of constitutions and State governments for the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington, and the admission thereof into the Union, and making donations of public lands to such States, it was provided that the lands so donated and granted may be leased for periods of not more than five years, in quantities not exceeding one section to any one person or company: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington do request the Congress of the United States to so amend the aforesaid act of February 22, 1889, as to permit the said several States, including the State of Washington, by its proper officers, to execute leases for the exploration and extraction of the aforesaid minerals which may be contained upon or beneath the surface of any of said granted lands, together with the right to use so much of the surface of said lands as may be necessary therefor, and for such periods of time as may be determined by or under the legislative authority of said States;

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forthwith transmitted to the presiding officer of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on Public Lands, the Secretary of the Interior, and to each Member of the Washington delegation in Congress.

Passed the senate February 1, 1915.
Passed the house February 5, 1915.

Mr. BRISTOW presented petitions of sundry citizens of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Kansas, remonstrating against the curtailing of the freedom of the press, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Kansas City, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to civil-service employees, which were referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Coffeyville, Kans., remonstrating against any change in the present locomotive boiler-inspection laws, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MYERS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Montana, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WEEKS presented a petition of the City Council of Salem, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Holyoke, Boston, Everett, Medford, and Cambridge, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Arlington Heights, Holyoke, and North Andover, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a petition of sundry citizens of South Norwalk, Conn., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PITTMAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Gardnerville, Nev., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the exportation of ammunition, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20643) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 971) thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20347) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 972) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. DU PONT. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16713) for the relief of Samson Davis, to submit an adverse report (No. 976) thereon, and I ask that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 3) for the relief of Fred White, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 975) thereon.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5850) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 973) thereon.

Mr. CHILTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 17097) to fix the salary of the auditor of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 974) thereon.

Mr. KERN. From the Committee on Privileges and Elections I report back favorably with amendments Senate resolution 455, providing for an investigation relating to the nomination and election of United States Senators in the States of Pennsylvania and Illinois, and I submit a report (No. 979) thereon. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.

Mr. CULBERSON. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 18783) to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building and site at St. Petersburg, Fla., and I submit a report (No. 977) thereon. I call the attention of the junior Senator from Florida to the report.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. This bill was prepared and presented by the department. The department has asked authority to increase the limit of cost by $35,000. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think I shall not object to the consideration of the bill; but I simply want to say to the Senate that I think there ought to be a time set apart, and that early, to take up the calendar to consider bills to which there is no objection. There are about 200 of them on the calendar, and I think an early date ought to be set aside by the Senate to take them up for consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is quite correct, Mr. President, and it ought to be done. This is a House bill, I will say.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, that being an emergency measure, I shall not object.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUWANEE RIVER BRIDGE, FLORIDA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 7555) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Suwanee River, in the State of Florida, and I submit a report (No. 978) thereon. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to the report.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JERSEY CITY, N. J.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9584) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to sell the present old post office and the site thereof in the city of Jersey City, N. J., and I respectfully ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. I will say that it is quite necessary that action should be taken as promptly as possible, that the proper length of time for advertisement may be given in order to seek purchasers for the site.

Mr. SMOOT. If this is an emergency measure, I shall not object.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Does the Senator from Utah object?

Mr. SMOOT. No; not if it is an emergency matter.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is an emergency matter. It is of prime necessity now——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no objection.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes upon the completion of the new Federal building at Jersey City, N. J., and its occupancy by the United States, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to offer at public sale, after proper advertisement, the present old post office and site and to sell the same to the highest and best bidder, to execute a quitclaim deed to the purchaser thereof, and to deposit the proceeds of said sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt, and that the property shall not be sold for less than the sum of $25,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF SEALSKINS.

Mr. THORNTON. On behalf of the Committee on Fisheries I desire to report back favorably and without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 391) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to postpone the sale of fur-seal skins now in the possession of the Government until such time as, in his discretion, he may deem such sale advisable; and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration, as it is an emergency measure. I desire to state, for the benefit of any Senator who might otherwise object, that it is identical with Senate joint resolution 214, which was passed on December 21 last.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the object of the joint resolution?

Mr. THORNTON. The object of it is to allow the Secretary of Commerce to defer the annual sale of sealskins, because if it should be made at this time it would result in considerable loss of revenue to the Government, on account of the exigencies arising from the European war.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the bill ought to go to the calendar, and I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the calendar.

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the calendar for consideration Senate bill 6854, to incorporate the Boy Scouts of America, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I object, Mr. President. It is 4 minutes of 2 o'clock now, and the morning business has not been completed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, this bill being one for benevolent purposes, and the incorporators being now in session in the city of Washington, I move that the Senate take up the bill and consider it, in order that they may be organized and proceed immediately with their benevolent work.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is not closed.

Mr. ROOT. Regular order!

Mr. PENROSE. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order, as morning business is not closed. Bills and joint resolutions are next in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I introduce a bill, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

The bill (S. 7599) providing free passage through the Panama Canal for American ships was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every ship flying the American flag and entitled to American registry, whether engaged in domestic or foreign commerce, shall be entitled at all times to free passage through the Panama Canal. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the completion of the post-office building at Portland, Oreg., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 21318), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 to be used in cooperative work in the State of Oregon in connection with the destruction of jack rabbits, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 20415), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment relative to the granting of indefinite leave of absence to employees in the Postal Service who have served for a period of 25 years, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19906), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the construction, repair, and maintenance of mail roads in the Territory of Alaska from $125,000 to $200,000, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 20347), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURTON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $800 for the installation of mail chutes in the public building at Cleveland, Ohio, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 21318), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Senate to pay officers and employees of the Senate borne on the roll known as the soldiers' roll, etc., a sum sufficient to make their compensation at the rate of $1,440 each per annum, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 21318), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 for the erection of a Navajo national monument in the State of Arizona, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 21318), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRONNA submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the improvement of the game preserve in Sullys Hill National Park, in the State of North Dakota, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 20415), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the control of diseases of forest and ornamental trees and shrubs, etc., from $47,350 to $69,510, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 20415), which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KENYON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $6,000 to enable the Department of Labor to make an investigation as to the cost of living of wage earners in the District of Columbia exclusive of Government employees, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 19909), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. REED submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the Assistant Sergeant at Arms of the United States Senate from $2,500 per annum to $3,500, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 19909), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $9,000 to provide a harbor boat for the Revenue-Cutter Service to replace the Hartley at San Francisco, Cal., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 21318), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ASHURST submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 to be expended in the erection of a headquarters building at the Grand Canyon National Monument, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 20415), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment authorizing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to investigate claims and negotiate agreements with any tribe or bands of Indians for the final adjudication and settlement of claims and payments of such tribes or bands against the United States, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20150), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BORAH submitted an amendment providing that no part of the appropriations made in the Post Office appropriation bill shall be available for the salary or pay of any official, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the Postal Service who makes or causes to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device for the study of the movements of any such employees, intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19906), which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATER POWER.

Mr. BORAH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16673) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. BORAH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15799) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

OIL AND GAS LANDS.

Mr. STERLING submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16136) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the pending shipping bill (S. 6856), which I ask may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"SECTION 1. The President is authorized and directed to expend a sum not exceeding $50,000,000 for the construction of ships in American shipyards, preference being given to navy yards, and to operate said ships on such lines of trade, coastwise or foreign, as he may select, under such terms and regulations as he may determine: Provided, That such ships shall be constructed, as far as practicable, so as to be adapted for service both as naval auxiliaries and as merchant ships.

"SEC. 2. The President may sell the bonds of the United States authorized for the construction of the Panama Canal, not to exceed the amount of $50,000,000, for the purposes of this act."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

DISTRICT EXCISE BOARD.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I ask to be excused from service on the special committee to investigate excise conditions in the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the request of the Senator from Delaware granted? The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator is excused.

Now, the Chair asks the Senate that the Chair be relieved from futher duty in filling vacancies in the committee. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Chair is relieved from further obligation——

Mr. SHEPPARD. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection. The Chair will request the Senator from Texas to find some Senator who will serve on the committee.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall endeavor to do so, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will appoint any Senator the Senator from Texas can get to serve.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I desire to give notice of an amendment of and proposed change in the standing rules of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the notice to the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. GORE gives notice, under Senate Rule XL, of his intention to offer an amendment to the standing rules of the Senate, as follows, to wit:

Amend Rule V by adding the following language:

"Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present and objection is made for that cause, unless the Senate shall adjourn, there shall be a call of the Senate, and the Sergeant at Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent Members, and the yeas and nays on the pending question shall at the same time be considered as ordered. The Secretary shall call the roll, and each Member as he answers to his name may vote on the pending question; and, after the roll call is completed, each Member arrested shall be brought by the Sergeant at Arms before the Senate, whereupon he shall be noted as present, discharged from arrest, and given an opportunity to vote, and his vote shall be recorded. If those voting on the question and those who are present and decline to vote shall, together, make a majority of the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall declare that a quorum is constituted and the pending question shall be decided as the majority of those voting shall appear. And thereupon further proceedings under the call shall be considered as dispensed with. At any time after the roll call has been completed, the Presiding Officer may entertain a motion to adjourn, if seconded by a majority of those present, to be ascertained by actual count by the Presiding Officer; and if the Senate adjourns, all proceedings under this section shall be vacated."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The notice will go over.

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL PEACE CONFERENCE.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on to-morrow, February 12, after the routine business of the Senate, if we have a morning hour, and if not, as soon after 1 o'clock as I can secure recognition, I shall address the Senate briefly on Senate joint resolution 234, authorizing the President of the United States to convey to all neutral nations the desire of the Government for an international conference for the purpose of promoting by cooperation and through its friendly offices the early cessation of hostilities and the establishment of peace among the warring nations of Europe, and for other purposes.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Wednesday next, February 17, 1915, after the transaction of the routine morning business, if we have a morning hour, I shall, if opportunity offers, address the Senate on some practical questions relating to the American merchant marine and the shipping industry of the United States. I might add that this will be a discussion of the issue that is now before the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE.

Mr. GORE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 539), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-third Congress to employ a stenographer, at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had or may have been had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee; and the expense thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

NEW YORK STATE BAR ASSOCIATION (S. DOC. NO. 941).

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have a copy of the report of the committee on duty of courts to refuse to execute statutes in contravention of the fundamental law presented at the thirty-eighth annual meeting of the New York State Bar Association held at the city of Buffalo on the 22d and 23d of January, 1915. I ask that it may be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

COL. RICHARD H. WILSON.

The bill (H. R. 16896) for the relief of Col. Richard H. Wilson, United States Army, was read twice by its title.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, this bill is identical with Senate bill 662, a copy of which I hold in my hand, and which passed the Senate on July 10, 1913. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill may be substituted for the Senate bill, and that it may be considered at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Washington a question. I suppose the Senate bill is in the custody of the House of Representatives, and therefore the House bill can not well be substituted for the Senate bill. The Senator can ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill. Does the Senator know why the House laid aside a Senate bill and passed a bill of its own covering the same matter?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know. I have copies of both bills here.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 16896, for the relief of Col. Richard H. Wilson, United States Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to credit to the accounts of Capt. Charles W. Castle, paymaster, the sum of $7,181.64, and that Col. Richard H. Wilson, Fourteenth Infantry, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, exonerated from all responsibility for the loss of the said sum at Fort William Henry Harrison, Mont., on or about May 16, 1912.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

S. W. LANGHORNE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2334) for the relief of S. W. Langhorne and the legal representatives of H. S. Howell, which was, in lines 12 and 13, to strike out "1900" and insert "1890."

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 6856.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—NAVAL EXPENDITURES.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. For a second time, without a scintilla of truth to back him, George von L. Meyer, former Secretary of the Navy, and at one time Postmaster General under President Roosevelt, has slandered me grossly.

In the New York Sun of Monday, February 8, appears an editorial, "Waste in naval expenditures," which I send to the desk and ask to have inserted in the RECORD. In order to be perfectly fair and just to both the Sun and Mr. Meyer, I also ask to have inserted his article, which appeared in the North American Review of February.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TILLMAN. In order that the Senate may understand what I am quarreling about I presume that the editorial from the New York Sun of the 8th instant had better be read, and I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SAULSBURY in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Editorial from the New York Sun of Monday, Feb. 8, 1915.]

WASTE IN NAVAL EXPENDITURES.

In an article in the North American Review for February dealing with naval expenditures ex-Secretary George von L. Meyer says that "until within a few years no naval appropriation could pass the Senate which did not meet the sanction of both a northern and a southern Senator, each of whom was a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs." The northern Senator is dead; the southern Senator survives, Mr. TILLMAN, of South Carolina. These Senators in obtaining appropriations to be expended in their States were responsible for a good deal of waste. Take the Frenchmans Bay coaling station in Maine. It is now dismantled, having been "practically unused." Its cost was $624,650, of which $24,650, far above the assessed valuation, went for the site, and $600,000 for development and maintenance. A good deal of money has been sunk in the Portsmouth Navy Yard, which could long ago have been dispensed with. After a dock costing $1,122,800 was built, it was discovered that to use the dock for the larger ships of the Navy $745,300 must be spent to blast away rock in the channel. In 15 years an outlay of $10,857,603 was made upon the Portsmouth Navy Yard—and the adequate Boston yard was less than 70 miles away.

Senator TILLMAN, of South Carolina, is associated with the development of the naval station at Port Royal and Charleston, both of which represent a considerable amount of money thrown away. With the aid of the Maine Senator Mr. TILLMAN kept the appropriations going, reciprocity being the rule between them. The site of the Port Royal station, which is a joke in the Navy, cost $5,000, but $2,275,000 was spent upon Port Royal before it was abandoned. "Extravagant waste," Mr. Meyer calls it. In 1901, with the sympathy of the Maine Senator, a naval station was established at Charleston. Mr. TILLMAN was reelected in 1901. With the valuable Norfolk Navy Yard and base at Hampton Roads, the Charleston station was obviously superfluous. A dry dock was built at Charleston costing $1,250,000; intended for battleships, it is fit only for gunboats and destroyers. No less than $5,000,000 was "sunk" at Charleston.

A Louisiana Representative, now deceased, who was a member of the House Naval Committee, was the "good angel" of the New Orleans yard, "located 100 miles up the river and with a floating dock of no service to dreadnaughts." That "needless and useless station" swallowed more than $2,000,000. Up to 1910 the Pensacola yard cost the country $12,200,000, "with little return in the way of output." On the Pacific coast the Mare Island Navy Yard at San Francisco is famous for having absorbed $35,000,000 since 1850, although in the last eight years, for lack of water, no capital ship could be berthed there. The Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS, Senator from California since 1893 and a veteran of the Naval Committee, has been the "good angel" of the Mare Island yard for many years.

When Mr. Meyer was Secretary of the Navy he took the responsibility of "practically closing" the naval stations at New Orleans, Pensacola, San Juan, Port Royal, Sacketts Harbor, Culebra, and Cavite. Secretary Daniels has reopened Pensacola and New Orleans. Pointing out that the United States has more than twice as many first-class navy yards as Great Britain, Mr. Meyer urges a reduction of the number to the actual strategic needs of the service, and he also makes these recommendations: A special committee to investigate conditions in the Navy, a general staff, a national council of defense, and the budget form for appropriations.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, a brief statement of the facts is all I care to present here. To quote our old friend Prince Hal:

Mark now, how a plain tale shall put you down.

The Port Royal Station was authorized by law in 1883 at the instance of my predecessor, Senator M. C. Butler, and the dry dock was built before I became Senator. The impression which Mr. Meyer sought to convey was that I alone was responsible for the Port Royal Naval Station.

When I was elected to the Senate I chose the Committee on Naval Affairs, among others, as one upon which I desired to serve. I have been on it ever since, and am now its chairman.

The Sun has been considered one of our most reliable newspapers; and when it editorially makes glaring misstatements of fact, as in this instance, I feel compelled to correct them. The editorial was a comment on Mr. Meyer's article in the North American Review.

The Sun mentions me by name, but does not say who the "northern Senator" is, merely saying he is "dead." I am surprised that paper keeps so badly posted. Eugene Hale, of Maine, formerly Senator and chairman of the Naval Committee, is not "dead" at all. He can speak for himself about Frenchmans Bay, as can Mr. PERKINS about Mare Island.

I take occasion to say here and now there never was any understanding or dickering between Senator Hale and myself about Charleston and Frenchmans Bay. He was too great a power in Congress to make it necessary for him to resort to any such trades; and I have sought to obtain only a reasonable amount of the taxes the South pays into the Treasury to build up a southern navy yard. And I thank God I am not narrow enough or so sectional in my desires to wish to see any great naval establishment where it is not necessary that there should be one. Not possessing Mr. Meyer's knowledge of "strategy," I never could understand why Guantanamo, which is not on the mainland, and can not be reached by railroad from the United States, should have been developed at the expense of Charleston. Should war come and we lose command of the sea, necessarily our fleet would have to go to some southern harbor like Pensacola or Charleston for supplies and repairs. Pensacola can be shelled from the open sea, but the Charleston Navy Yard is too far inland to be in danger.

The Sun says again:

Senator TILLMAN, of South Carolina, is associated with the development of the naval stations at Port Royal and Charleston, both of which represent a considerable amount of money thrown away. With the aid of the Maine Senator Mr. TILLMAN kept the appropriations going, reciprocity being the rule between them. The site of the Port Royal Station, which is a joke in the Navy, cost $5,000, but $2,275,000 was spent upon Port Royal before it was abandoned.

It has not been abandoned at all, but is still maintained, not as a naval station, for the dock has decayed, but the Navy Department still utilizes the costly brick buildings as disciplinary barracks. They are too valuable to be turned over to the bats and owls. That policy could emanate only from a wise and thrifty man like Meyer or a sectional partisan as the Sun has shown itself to be in this matter. I am endeavoring to have the Port Royal yard used as a recruiting station for the Marine Corps. The health and other advantages possessed by that whole region point to it as being superbly suited for this purpose. It is warm enough during all the winter to drill out of doors on land or sea, and not hot enough during the summer to cause very much discomfort.

The Sun again says:

In 1901, with the sympathy of the Maine Senator, a naval station was established at Charleston.

This is true. Senator Hale was broad enough to see and realize that the South had some rights to development and the expenditure of a share of the taxes it paid.

Then the Sun says:

The dock at Charleston is fit only for gunboats and destroyers.

I want to say, and I am responsible for it because it is true, the dock at Charleston can dock a battleship now, for there is ample water from the jetties up the Cooper River to the dry dock for that purpose, the only thing now necessary being to dredge out a sharp bend in the Cooper River, estimated by the Army engineers to cost $175,000.

This item has not been put in the "pork barrel" bill in the House—the river and harbor bill—and I expect to ask the Senate to amend the bill, if we get that bill up for consideration here, to include this item. It is forty times more valuable and of more use to the whole country than the little dry creeks they are pumping water in in the West. With this improvement the heaviest battleship can steam from the ocean into the Charleston Dry Dock without the aid of tugs at mean low tide. And yet they say we have no water on Charleston Bar. They are liars.

The Sun says:

With the valuable Norfolk Navy Yard and base at Hampton the Charleston Station was obviously superfluous.

And yet the Sun never omits to stress the special importance and necessity of the navy yard at Philadelphia, only 231 miles from New York, while Boston and Portsmouth are both much nearer to New York than is Charleston to Hampton Roads. If one-tenth of the money had been spent on the approaches to the Charleston Navy Yard and the yard itself as has been expended at Portsmouth and League Island, that yard would be as accessible as either. Mr. Meyer never thought it was "extravagant waste" to spend money on League Island, though he did find fault with the expenditure to blast the rock at the entrance of Portsmouth Harbor. Why he should grudge the pittance, by comparison, necessary to care for and develop the Charleston Yard is difficult to understand. Charleston Harbor is the only really good and commodious one between Norfolk and Key West. The commerce of the Cooper River would well warrant the expenditure of the $175,000 needed to dredge the point off of a shoal now jutting into the channel.

For the information of those who may be inclined to give an ear to the statements of Mr. Meyer, I herewith append a statement giving a comparison of the amounts expended by the Government on northern and southern yards since 1896, when I became a Member of this body, during which time Mr. Meyer and the Sun charged me with having logrolled to build up navy yards in the South. Men can not understand figures when they are read, but I hope every Senator here will do me the honor to read this in to-morrow morning's RECORD. It shows that during the time I have been in the Senate $120,000,000 have been spent on six northern yards, while during that whole time when Mr. Meyer says I was robbing the Treasury only $20,000,000 have been spent in the whole South, where there are also six.

I present a statement of expenditures for the period 1896 to 1914 (fiscal years), inclusive, at the navy yards listed below for improvements (buildings, public works, machinery) and maintenance:

NORTHERN YARDS, INCLUDING NORFOLK.

Yards.	Improvements.	Maintenance.	Total.
Portsmouth, N. H.	$7,808,171.87	$5,648,012.64	$13,456,184.51
Boston, Mass.	9,130,941.71	11,049,174.76	20,180,116.47
New York, N. Y.	17,553,986.32	25,963,890.72	43,517,877.04
Philadelphia, Pa.	10,437,878.84	9,778,933.65	20,216,812.49
Norfolk, Va.	11,004,857.23	13,174,199.77	24,179,057.00
Total	55,935,835.97	65,614,211.54	121,550,047.51

SOUTHERN YARDS, INCLUDING GULF PORTS.

Charleston, S. C.	$4,344,475.80	$1,383,211.59	$5,727,687.39
Port Royal, S. C.	1,010,798.50	1,337,435.26	2,348,233.76
Pensacola, Fla.	1,795,553.96	2,626,299.08	4,421,853.04
New Orleans, La.	2,668,610.50	704,002.67	3,372,613.17
Key West, Fla.	2,598,632.30	1,979,722.75	4,578,355.05
Total	12,418,271.06	8,030,672.35	20,448,742.39

These figures prove conclusively whether or not the southern Senators, the "good angels," as the Sun calls them, have been milking the Public Treasury for sectional benefit.

In this connection I ask to have read a copy of a letter furnished me by ex-Senator William E. Chandler, written to Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS, which illuminates the whole naval situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 8, 1915.

Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your letter of the 3d instant, allow me to write a few words in addition to my letters of January 15 and February 1.

If we ignorantly and foolishly make haste to increase the number of our old-fashioned battleships and the quantity of our obsolete naval instruments and munitions of war, there will be danger that we shall equally foolishly make haste to use them by unnecessarily making war against somebody. A naval officer whom I well knew told me he hoped that our pugnacious Admiral Robley D. Evans would bring on a war with Chile. To my dissent he replied by asking me if I had not been in favor of building a new and strong navy, and upon my replying in the affirmative he said, "Then you ought to be in favor of using it." That is apt to be too much the feeling of our Army and Navy officers. That the privates and their families have that intense desire is not sure.

It is unpleasant to read in the Washington Post of the 5th ex-Secretary von L. Meyer's article headed "Navy weak because politicians waste funds and facts kept from public, former Secretary Meyer points out, urging a national council of defense." If this attack upon his own political party by the ex-Secretary can possibly be justified, there can be no doubt that the Secretary himself, who retired from the department on March 4, 1913, is quite as much to blame for it as any other human being.

But possibly his obligations to the Navy League of the United States, of which he has become the leading and one of the most wealthy and powerful directors, have compelled him to compose and publish his philippic against politicians. There are evidences that the league has taken charge of the present pressure through the newspapers and the Congress for hasty and unwise construction of more battleships.

As well as the Navy League publication of November 14, 1914, there has been published in Washington the Advocate of Peace of February, 1915. It would be profitable for citizens who read one of these magazines to read the other also and keep their heads level on the question of American war policies.

The Advocate of Peace, in an article by Louis P. Lochner headed "Wanted, aggressive pacificism," repeats what Norman Angell has said about the German Navy League, as follows:

"When Admiral Tirpitz decided that Germany was to have a great navy he knew that the first thing to do was to create a public opinion; and he promptly started the German Navy League, saw that it was subsidized, inspired patriotic writers, entertained professors, made friends with the newspaper men, had the Krupps buy up a newspaper or two; so that in less than 10 years German opinion had formulated its demand for a great navy, and, of course, the Government had to be guided by so definitely expressed a national demand. When orders are slack at Krupps there is no difficulty in arranging that the French agents of that enterprising firm shall circulate in French newspapers statements as to the impending increase of French armaments, which are promptly reproduced—with a new coat of paint—in the German press. In England we have not one navy league, but at least two. When our great soldiers want conscription they do not wait for public opinion; they make it. Lord Roberts, earl and field marshal, takes the stump, addressing great public audiences, is most efficiently stage-managed, and for 10 years the organization which he patronizes has been industriously at work."

It is to be feared that the American Navy League will be pressed into the service of war very much after the fashion of the German Navy League, and that Secretary George von L. Meyer will be the leader, having for his aids Beekman Winthrop, Horace L. Satterlee, Richmond P. Hobson, and Augustus P. Gardner, with Treasurer Glover close at hand.

It will be enlightening to read Mr. Meyer's specifications showing the "Navy weak because politicians waste funds, and facts kept from the public."

After condemning various appropriations for navy yards and stations, and saying that they could never have passed except by the cooperation of two Senators, one a northerner and the other a southerner—not venturing to give the name of either—he urges action as follows:

1. The increase of the number of officers and men in the Navy—18,556 men, and also 922 line officers in addition to the 3,388 existing officers.

2. A special committee to investigate the conditions in the Navy, to see "to what extent political influences have misdirected the appropriations during the last 25 years," presumably thus to help ex-Secretary Meyer's political party.

3. A special committee of Army and Navy experts to recommend the abolishment of surplus naval stations.

4. Congress to inaugurate a national council of defense, such as the naval officers and the Navy League and Messrs. HOBSON and GARDNER are demanding.

5. Congress to establish a general staff in the Navy.

6. An English budget system.

7. That all these things shall be done before the 4th of March, 1915, so that all the above six indispensable movements for "reforms and changes may be made at once."

If all the six above proceedings now urged by Mr. Meyer are indispensable to the public welfare, no one is to be condemned more because they have not been adopted than he is. From March 16, 1909, to March 4, 1913, he was Secretary of the Navy. He had previously studied great subjects as ambassador to Italy in 1900, to Russia in 1905; as Postmaster General in 1907; always a director of the Navy League. What was he doing all this time? Was he a failure? Was he a politician?

Rear Admiral Knight also, as well as Mr. Meyer, knows exactly what should be done, and frankly tells what he must have in his speech on January 25 before the Efficiency Club of New York City:

(1) A new bill reorganizing the Navy personnel; (2) another reorganizing the department; (3) the council of aids; (4) the General Board and (5) the War College to be recognized by law; but these being insufficient, they are to have added (6) "a division of strategy and operations," and over all (7) a "council of national defense," with the President of the United States at its head, "for the creation of which council a bill is already before Congress." Undoubtedly, when that council meets the Secretary and Assistant Secretary of the Navy will be allowed to sit in the background on stools and take orders—with the permission of their "subordinate" organizations, which have been put over them, and of the Navy League.

Yours, truly,

W. E. CHANDLER.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I ask to have read the letter written by ex-Senator William E. Chandler to Senator PERKINS, February 1. It is very instructive and illuminating.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 1, 1915.

United States Senator GEORGE C. PERKINS.

MY DEAR SENATOR PERKINS: It was not expected by me that my letter to you of January 15 on naval questions would be read to "the most distinguished legislative body in the world," as Vice President Stevenson proudly called it. In view of such honorable mention of the letter a review thereof has been made which increases rather than diminishes my conviction of the correctness of the opinions expressed therein.

First. The Republicans can make no good points against the Democratic Party on account of delays in naval construction or neglects in naval management.

Second. We should make haste slowly in ordering new constructions; especially should we not now authorize $15,000,000 "replacement" battleships to supersede the famous Oregon and the Indiana, Massachusetts, Kentucky, and Kearsarge, which by being called "replaced" are to be condemned as obsolete.

Third. We should not overcome the two comparatively powerless civilians—the Secretary and Assistant Secretary—sitting in the Navy Department, feebly facing the 3,385 uniformed naval officers, by putting over the two civilians any more councils of war or boards of control than now exist.

Fourth. We should always bear in mind the taxpayers of the country, now being overwhelmed by a weight of taxation imposed in a time of present and prospective peace by all the numerous methods which the ingenuity of man can devise—district, town, ward, city, county, State, and National.

It may be true that the Democratic abandonment of campaign promises and the plunging into vast expenditures and voluminous taxation have made certain the defeat of the Democratic Party in 1916, but Republicans should not on that account take part in the oppressive wrongdoing.

To realize how little need there is of putting any more guides in charge of the two civilians nominally controlling the Navy Department, will you please turn to the Congressional Directory of January, 1915, page 262, and see what follows the first two names—those of Secretary Daniels and Assistant Secretary Franklin D. Roosevelt—in the form of a list of assistants to instruct them and help them conduct the Navy of a peaceful Republic.

They are (1) an aid for operations who is a rear admiral, with 4 assistant aids; (6) more aids—an aid for the Marine Corps, 1 for personnel, 1 for material, with 4 assistants, 1 for education, 2 directors of the navy yards, and an aid for the Secretary; (17) the Admiral of the Navy, with 2 assistants; (20) director of the Office of Naval Intelligence, with 7 assistants; (28) Bureau of Navigation, with 6 assistants; (35) hydrographic officer, with 4 assistants; (40) Bureau of Yards and Docks, with 5 assistants; (46) Bureau of Ordnance, with 14 assistants; (61) Bureau of Construction and Repair, with 8 assistants; (70) Bureau of Steam Engineering, with 15 assistants; (86) Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, with 6 assistants; (93) Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, with 5 assistants; (99) office of Judge Advocate General, with 9 naval officers as assistants; (109) commandant of the navy yard, with 18 assistants; (128) various officers on duty numbering 24; (153) the General Board, headed by the Admiral of the Navy, with 3 rear admirals and 6 captains as members and 6 other officers to help them; (169) an inspecting board of 6 officers; (176) a general inspector; (177) a naval examining board of 5 officers; (182) a retiring board and medical examining board, with 10 officers; (192) marine headquarters, with 8 officers; (202) Quartermaster's Department, with 4 officers; and (206) a marine barracks, with 4 officers, all making about 210 officers, practically all of them engaged in the business of advising the 2 civilians who are at the head of the list, while Congressman GARDNER is insisting that in addition there shall be created outside boards and councillors of great pretensions and overpowering influence for the same purpose.

It is not to be overlooked, the overwhelming fact that to advise and direct the two civilians there is always at hand the Congress, with its broad power of investigation by committees, which should not be surrendered to any extent by the creation of outside councils of national defense. If the two civilian secretaries and their commander in chief want more advice than they obtain from the 3,388 naval officers with their organizations hereinabove alluded to, their natural reliance should be upon Congress and its committees, and it is the height of folly for Congress to evade its duty and shift its burden upon new organizations with high-sounding names.

THE NAVY LEAGUE.

It must further be borne in mind, in considering the influences which can be exerted to make a nation like ours sufficiently militaristic, that there are other potential agencies than merely the President, the Congress, with its committees, and the Navy Department, with its 3,388 officers commissioned for life, having many suborganizations running up to the General Board and its president, the Admiral of the Navy, the hero of Manila Bay in 1898.

That additional organization is "The Navy League of the United States," 609 Southern Building, Washington, which publishes the monthly called The Navy, and which in its November number utters "A peremptory warning" to the Nation, demanding greater preparedness of the Navy of the Republic against "the criminal negligence of its own officials."

The officers of the Navy League, as shown by the November number, are among the most honored and the most influencial of our citizens.

Horace Porter is president, Charles C. Glover is treasurer, Robert M. Thompson is chairman of the executive committee, and other well-known names follow, including William A. Clark, of Montana, George v. L. Meyer, J. P. Morgan, John C. O'Laughlin, and Beckman Winthrop, while Herbert L. Satterlee is the lawyer of the league.

This number of The Navy contains a complete answer to "The Three Men Behind the Guns" of Rev. Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York City, who lately unkindly preached that the Governments of Christendom have fallen into the clutches of a triumvirate consisting of (1) the military specialist, (2) the military contractor, and (3) the Navy League advocate. The number, under the head of "The Illusions of a Pacificist," concludes its exposure of the worthlessness of the illusions by asserting that "Dr. Jefferson's opinions are no better than his information"; indeed, that the latter is "actually a mass of misinformation."

The league article goes on to show that it is not intended that our projected council of national defense shall be headed by a military specialist, but that "the general expression of Army and Navy officers has been that the council should consist of the President of the United States (presiding); the Secretaries of State, War, and Navy; the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on Appropriations, Foreign Affairs, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs; the Chief of the General Staff of the Army; an officer of the Navy; and the presidents of the Army and the Navy War Colleges."

THE GERMAN NAVY LEAGUE.

It must be apparent to every lover of his country and friend and admirer of its Navy that there need be in the United States no more than the existing boards of advisers so long as the Navy League exists and the magazine The Navy is published. Its prototype is the German Navy League, which has given such success and fame to the Germany Navy. To be sure, our league is not yet so large and so multiform in its agencies as the German organization, but it can be easily made so. The November number says of our American league:

THE MEMBERSHIP OF THE LEAGUE.

"April 1, 1909, there were on the books of the league the names of 4,500 members. There are now on the books of the league 6,837 members. * * * The time is now ripe for a popular movement that will greatly add to our numbers the coming year. * * * Never was there greater need of patriotic education as to the reasons for maintaining a strong Navy. Dr. Edward Brock, of Boston, who is well informed regarding the Navy, will visit the various cities of the country this winter, giving his stereopticon lectures before clubs, patriotic societies, and miscellaneous organizations for the purpose of building up the league membership. It is thought that many organizations will be willing to join the league in a body as corporate members. Each organization will be expected to appoint a Navy League committee and arrange for at least one patriotic meeting each year. Committees will also cooperate with the league in the distribution of pamphlets and building up the membership. The Washington Leading Men's Association, which has a membership of 500, has been asked to join the league as a body, it being understood that their members will be considered corporate members."

Frederick William Wile, the Berlin correspondent of the London Daily Mail and the New York Times, in his wonderful book, written in Berlin in May, 1913, the Bobbs Merrill Co., Indianapolis, publishers, entitled "The Men Around the Kaiser: The Makers of Modern Germany," tells us of the size at that date of the German Navy League:

"To-day the league's membership is approaching 1,250,000. Over 3,500 local branches are scattered throughout the country. No hamlet, no matter how tiny or remote from the seaboard, is left uncanvassed.

"The league's invested fortune is nearly $100,000. Its annual income from membership subscriptions is $87,500. It earns another $35,000 from advertisements in the league's excellent official organ, Die Flotte—mostly the announcements of the shipbuilders and gunmakers whose dividends are born in the league's sleepless propaganda. Close to $125,000 a year is spent in preaching the big-navy gospel. Die Flotte spreads it broadcast to 360,000 Germans, at home and abroad, from month to month."

The amazing history of the league is fully told by Mr. Wile in his sixteenth chapter, which is headed "Admiral Von Koester." No more useful study can be made than of his picture of the Deutscher Flotten-Verein.

1. HOW QUICKLY THE REICHSTAG VOTED $100,000,000 FOR THE GERMAN NAVY.

In the early days of March, 1909, a phenomenon unprecedented in the world's parliamentary history took place in the Reichstag. German naval estimates aggregating, roundly, $100,000,000, the heaviest on record, were passed without a dissenting voice or syllable of debate. Funds for the laying down of three superdreadnaughts, a battle cruiser, and a complementary squadron of smaller cruisers, torpedo boats, and submarines, and for the fixed charges of naval upkeep, were voted without a murmur of disapproval or discussion.

2. THE AMAZING PROPAGANDA OF THE GERMAN NAVY LEAGUE DID IT.

It suggests a fascinating psychological study to examine the causes which induce tax-burdened Germany, already saddled with a colossal army budget, which amounts for 1913 to $500,000,000, to shoulder uncomplainingly naval expenditure which has risen from $30,000,000 in 1898 to $116,750,000 in 1913. The explanation is not far to seek. In the amazing propaganda carried on by the German Navy League lies the secret of the conversion of the nation once known as the land of thinkers and poets into a race of naval enthusiasts. It is the Navy League—no mere pusillanimous coterie of armchair admirals who adopt resolutions and banquet annually, but a militant phalanx of a million practical patriots—which has driven the doctrine of sea power so deep into the German marrow that it has become a religion.

3. ADMIRAL VON KOESTER, NEXT TO THE EMPEROR, REORGANIZED THE FLOTTEN VEREIN.

Such crusades in all ages have had outstanding generalissimos. Admiral von Koester, the grand old man of the German fleet, is the personality which has made the Navy League pulsate with life and fruitful energy. A sailor for 50 years, with the highest honors of the service to his credit, he became its president six years ago at a critical juncture. Fanatical methods of a predecessor in office had brought the organization to the brink of disintegration. The imperial admiralty was face to face with a calamity. The break-up of the Navy League threatened danger to the whole future of German naval policy. Koester had just relinquished the commandership in chief of the high-seas fleet with the rank of grand admiral, which corresponds to the highest rank in the army, that of a field marshal. Though the privileges and emoluments of the retired list were his due, he much preferred to remain at work. No field of usefulness at the moment compared in importance with the task of keeping intact the machinery of the Navy League. He shouldered it. The executive gifts which had distinguished his entire career speedily enabled him to restore harmony in the league's warring ranks. On the wave of enthusiasm which accompanied the dawn of the dreadnaught era, the Flotten Verein was launched on a new career of prosperity and power.

4. THE KAISER CALLED TO ARMS, VON TIRPITZ MANAGED THE PARTY POLITICS, THE NAVY LEAGUE KEPT THE CONSCIENCE OF THE COUNTRY AWAKE.

It was the Kaiser who proclaimed, at the birth of the new century, that "Germany's future lay upon the water"; that a mighty fleet was a "bitter necessity"; that "the ocean was essential to Germany's greatness"; that "the trident must be in Michel's hand"; that "the more Germans who went to sea, the better for the Fatherland"; and the other epigrammatic ukases which fired Teuton imaginations with visions of admiralty. It was von Tirpitz who piloted ever-recurring programs through the tortuous waters of party politics. But it is the Navy League which has kept the conscience of the country awake, which has aroused the nation's fears and fanned its passions as occasion demanded. "Record" naval estimates disturb the equanimity of the average German no more than budgets for the State railways. The agitation for naval expansion waged in Germany during the past 15 years is peerless among campaigns of education in our time.

5. HOW THE COUNTRY WAS AROUSED—THE FARMERS, THE MOUNTAINEERS, THE MILL HANDS, THE PEASANTS, THE LANDLUBBERS, LURED BY THE NAVY LEAGUE.

Glib-tongued orators, whose fervor sometimes triumphs over the truth, drive it home at countless meetings in village, town, and city. Twenty cinema-picture apparatuses, owned by the league, are kept moving across the country, telling in the convincing language of the film the stories and the glories of the fleet. During the summer holidays thousands of school-children and teachers are brought to the ports, war harbors, and dockyards to see the navy at work and in the making, that each may go home a missionary in the holy cause. Still other excursions are organized for members of the league as a means of training them to become agitators. The league lays special stress on educating children and people from remote inland regions. The men and women of Hamburg and Bremen, of Danzig and Stettin, in whose nostrils the salt of the sea has lodged since the cradle, need no persuasion. It is the farmers of east and west Prussia, the mountaineers of Bavaria, the mill hands of Rhineland and Westphalia, the peasants of Saxony, the landlubbers of the cities, whom the navy league systematically lures to the North Sea and the Baltic, and sends back to workaday existences confirmed enthusiasts. They have made privileged inspections of the floating fortresses which belch broadsides calculable only in tons, and believe for evermore in the "bitter need" of might at sea.

6. HOW THE LEAGUE CONTROLS POLITICAL CRISES—"ITS HAND IS SELDOM DISCLOSED, BUT ITS INFLUENCE IS EASILY RECOGNIZED."

When great political crises, like Morocco, arise, the navy league puts on extra coats of war paint. Its hand is seldom disclosed, but its influence is easily recognized. No one at such times can place his finger on the point where the "inspiration" of the league begins and ends, but there is far too much homogeneity and synchronism about the press and pamphlet campaigns which rage at psychological moments to entitle them to be considered either spontaneous or sporadic. If public opinion is excited or excitable, as it was after Agadir, the league's benchmen proceed to excite it still more. The slogan of "The fatherland in danger!" is vociferously hoisted to the ramparts. The bookshop windows fill up, as if by magic, with inflammatory prints depicting Germany on the threshhold of catastrophe. Brochures clamoring for fresh dreadnaughts rain on offenseless members of Parliament. "England the Foe." "Perfidious Albion." "The Coming War." "The British Peril." "England's Plan to Fall on Us in 1911."—a random and slender selection of titles from the literature which paved the way for the latest, but probably not the last, great increase in the German fleet. Nobody subscribes more unreservedly to the doctrine that the end justifies the means than the Deutscher Flotten-Verein.

7. VON KOESTER PLAYS THE RÔLE OF AGITATOR AT NAVY LEAGUE MEETINGS.

One of the mildest-eyed and gentlest of men is the presiding genius over this mighty engine of publicity. * * * Like every other man in the Kaiser's fleet, von Koester is a profound admirer of British naval traditions and an advocate of cordial relations with the mistress of the sea; but he believes that genuine international friendships rests on mutual esteem. Unprovided with imposing strength at sea, he declares, Germany can never command adequate respect from a naval power. This is the line von Koester espouses eloquently when he himself plays the rôle of agitator at important Navy League meetings throughout the country. He particularly combats the theory that Germany has armed in stealth or gone beyond the limits originally contemplated by her naval law. "We have always laid our cards on the table," is one of his favorite assertions. At present the Navy League's "program" is the creation of a flying squadron of battle cruisers for service in foreign waters in order that the Kaiser's flag may be able to assert itself on short notice wherever and whenever German over-sea interests are menaced or attacked.

I hope you will excuse me for giving you at such great length sketches of the American and Germanic Navy Leagues. When the first of these has been carried to the size and power and wisdom of the German one there will be no need of governing the two civilian Secretaries in our Navy Department and their present assistants and instructors by any councils of national defense. For that duty the Navy League will be sufficient until the Secretaries go out of power on March 3, 1917. Meantime, there is no common sense, and it will be a monumental mistake, in forcing them into beginning the construction of more "replacement battleships."

We are now building the following: The Arizona, California, Idaho, Mississippi, Nevada, Oklahoma, and Pennsylvania; the contract price for them, not including armor or armament, is six millions each for the Nevada and Oklahoma and seven millions for each of the other five, making forty-seven millions for the hulls and as much more for the armor and the armament, as will make the total cost reach $100,000,000. The times of completion of the ships vary from December, 1915, to December, 1917. Is there any doubt that we ought not to authorize, not the planning but the contracting, for the construction of more battleships without learning what the present European war will teach us about armored vessels, Zeppelins, aeroplanes, and submarines? Until we learn all the facts, the Navy League and Congressmen HOBSON and GARDNER can be trusted to keep sufficiently alive militarism in the United States.

Very truly, yours, WM. E. CHANDLER.

ARE NAVAL EXPENDITURES WASTED?

[By George von L. Meyer, former Secretary of the Navy.]

The public demand for the facts with respect to the preparedness of the Navy to-day grows out of a popular desire to be sure that we are getting our money's worth for money expended. The people can not pass intelligently upon the question of the size of the Navy until they know its condition, its organization as it now exists, whether it is being administered efficiently and economically, and what methods have been employed as to the making and using of the appropriations.

Our naval appropriation for 1914 was $140,000,000: that of Germany, $120,000,000. The total appropriation for our Navy from 1900 to 1914, inclusive, amounted to $1,656,000,000, while the appropriation during the same period for Germany's navy was $1,137,000,000, showing that the American Navy during 15 years has cost 45 per cent more than the Kaiser's navy. Yet to-day Germany's navy is more powerful than ours. The difference during those years represents the cost of two battleships annually for 15 years.

United within a few years no naval appropriation could pass the Senate which did not meet the sanction of both a northern and southern Senator, each of whom was a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. It is interesting, in consequence, to analyze some of the appropriations between 1895 and 1910.

In 1899 a site was purchased in Frenchmans Bay, Me., at a cost of $24,650—far above the assessed valuation—and later an additional amount of $600,000 was expended to obtain there an absolutely unnecessary coaling station, which has since been dismantled, as it was practically unused.

At the Portsmouth Navy Yard, so called, in Kittery, Me., a dock was built at an expense of $1,122,800, and later it was found necessary to blast away rock in the channel in order to reach the dock, at an additional expense of $745,300.

Between 1895 and 1910 improvements, machinery, repairs, and maintenance in the yard amounted to $10,857,693, although there was a large navy yard within 70 miles.

On the other hand, at Port Royal, S. C., a dock was built, at the insistence of the southern Senator, at a cost of $450,000, which proved useless, and, although the original cost of the site was but $5,000, it was not abandoned as a naval base until $2,275,000 had been expended.

Not the least daunted by this extravagant waste, the same Senator determined to have a share of the naval melon for his State, so, with the assistance of the northern Senator, he obtained the establishment of another naval station at Charleston, S. C., in 1901. There was no strategic value thus accomplished, nor was it necessary, with the Norfolk Navy Yard located at Hampton Roads. The $5,000,000 which has been squandered at Charleston includes a dry dock built for battleships, costing $1,250,000, but which experience shows can only be used by torpedo destroyers and gunboats. The $5,000,000 could have been employed to great advantage at the Norfolk Navy Yard, where the battleship fleet generally assembles. A portion even could have been used wisely at Key West, Fla., a supplementary base of real strategic value for torpedoes and submarines—a protection to the Gulf of Mexico and the mouth of the Mississippi River—and on account of its geographical situation. Key West would serve as a base of supplies to the fleet in the Caribbean Sea.

The purpose of the navy yards is to keep the fleet in efficient condition. Their location should be determined by strategic conditions, their number by the actual needs of the fleet. The maintenance of navy yards which do not contribute to battle efficiency is a great source of waste.

The United States has over twice as many first-class navy yards as Great Britain, with a navy more than double the size of ours, and more than three times as many as Germany, whose navy is larger than that of the United States.

The total cost of navy yards up to June 30, 1910, with land, public works, improvements, machinery, and maintenance, including repairs, amounts to $320,600,000, as seen by the footnote on the following table:

Statement showing date of establishment; original cost of site; expenditures for buildings, public works, and improvements; machinery installed in the various buildings; and cost of maintenance of the several navy yards and stations to June 30, 1910; also the average yearly cost of maintenance for five years.

Stations.	Date of establishment.	Original cost of site.	Total expenditures for buildings, public works, improvements, and machinery installed in the various buildings. [4] Expenditure fiscal year 1910, $2,107.91.

Overburdened with a superfluous number of navy yards distributed along the Atlantic coast from Maine to Louisiana, in 1910 I recommended that Congress give up and dispose of naval stations at New Orleans, Pensacola, San Juan, Port Royal, New London, Sacketts Harbor (N. Y.), Culebra, and Cavite, none of which was a first-class station. The average yearly cost of maintaining these stations between 1905 and 1910 was $1,672,675, and very little useful work had been performed at any of them. Later I practically closed them, but could not abolish or dispose of them, no action having been taken by Congress. Pensacola and New Orleans have since been reopened by my successor.

The interests of the country and the interests of the Navy would be best served by one first-class naval base with sufficient anchorage for the entire fleet, north of the Delaware, equipped for docking, repairing, etc., and another station of equal capacity at Norfolk, in Chesapeake Bay, with Guantanamo, Cuba, to serve as the winter-station rendezvous.

On the Pacific coast we are fortunate in having only two naval stations, one at Bremerton, on Puget Sound, established in 1891, with ample depth of water, costing to date about $9,000,000; and the other at Mare Island, established in 1850, some 30 miles from the harbor of San Francisco, with inadequate depth and width of water along its water front. The total costs, with maintenance and repairs, have amounted to $35,000,000, and, on account of insufficient depth of water, none of the battleships built in the last eight years could have been berthed there.

Arrangements were entered into some time ago, and have lately been consummated, by which the Navy will have the use of a thousand-foot dock to be built at Hunters Point by a private corporation, the Government making an annual payment of $50,000. With the completion of this great dock the fleet will not have to depend entirely on Puget Sound. Later there will be additional facilities in Hawaii, when the Pearl Harbor Dock is finished.

The situation of the naval base near San Francisco is as follows:

We have the Mare Island Navy Yard at Vallejo, with use of a future battleship dock at Hunters Point, near San Francisco, a coaling station on an island in the bay, and a training station on still another. It has been well understood for years that the California Senator on the Naval Committee would not consent to the abandonment of the Mare Island, suited to its requirements when first selected, in 1850, but absolutely unsuited to Navy requirements after battleships became a feature.

The New Orleans yard, located 100 miles up the river, and with a floating dock of no service to dreadnaughts, its capacity being limited to 16,000 tons as a maximum, was furbished up for a while with modern shop buildings and incompleted streets in order to appease a Louisiana Congressman, a member of the Naval Committee, since deceased. The amount expended on that needless and useless station was over $2,000,000.

The Pensacola Navy Yard, originally a military reservation, had cost the United States Government, up to 1910, $12,200,000, with little return in the way of output.

The fundamental cause of excessive expenditures is due to the fact that appropriations are not made with the sole view of the battle efficiency of the fleet (which is the Navy) and its military requirements. Politics and logrolling, as I have shown, have entered into the making of appropriations by Congress.

A more recent case is the training station outside of Chicago, established in 1905. The original site was a gift, but $3,646,000 has been expended, buildings erected on a lavish scale, quite unnecessary and not suitable, due to the zeal of a Congressman of the district, a member of the Naval Committee. One-half the amount would have more than met the requirements and have been better adapted to what a training station should be.

For an example as to the present lack of efficiency, in a hearing at Washington, December 9, 1914, Admiral Fletcher is asked:

"Mr. ROBERTS (member of the Naval Committee). Here is a statement reciting reasons why the submarines are in such bad condition: 'The fault has been that no one in the department has been charged with the direct responsibility of keeping submarines in constant repair.' Do you know anything about that? Is it a fact that there is no one in the department especially charged with looking after submarines and keeping them in repair?

"Admiral FLETCHER. No; I know nothing of that kind.

"Mr. ROBERTS. Then, if there is such a lack of care with submarines as set forth in this article, there is no one in the Navy Department who is responsible for it?

"Admiral FLETCHER. Yes."

When Commander Sterling made the report on the unsatisfactory condition of the submarines, if Secretary Daniels had not abolished the aid for inspection he could have sent for the aid, turned the report over to him for investigation, the findings to be made direct to the Secretary. The next move would have been to call together the chiefs of bureau concerned and thrash the matter out before the aids, in conjunction with the bureau chiefs, either in the presence of the Secretary or brought to him for final decision after conclusion had been reached. This was not done, the aid for inspection having been abolished, but Commander Sterling was reprimanded by the Secretary.

The organization of aids to the Secretary, consisting of an aid for operations, for personnel, for material, and for inspection, making a council of four responsible expert advisers, was turned over to the present head of the Navy. This has been disrupted and no established system has taken its place. In case of a crisis business would be congested, confusion would reign, discredit to the Navy would follow, with possible disgrace to the country.

Building battleships without an adequate force of men is equal to wasting money; only 10 ships of the first line and 11 of the second, according to the Navy Department, can be placed in full commission for service, due to a shortage of men and officers.

To provide a proper complement for all vessels of the Navy which could still be made useful would require an additional force of 18,556 men and 933 line officers, according to the testimony of Admiral Badger before the Naval Committee December 8, 1914.

That we have not been getting proper return for money expended in the Navy is not known to the majority of our people, nor is it realized to what extent political influences have misdirected the appropriations during the past 25 years. The remedy will only come from absolute publicity.

Let a special committee be appointed to investigate the conditions in the Navy.

Let a special committee of military experts from the Army and Navy be appointed to recommend what naval stations shall be abolished and sold and if any shall be established to take their places.

Let Congress inaugurate a national council of defense made up of Members of the Cabinet, Senate, and House, with the Chiefs of Staff from the Army and Navy, that more efficient cooperation may be obtained between the executive and legislative branches of the Government in respect to military requirements.

Let Congress establish a general staff in the Navy.

Let appropriations be made in budget form on a plan of expenditures proposed by the department.

Let action be taken by this Congress in order that necessary reforms and changes may be made at once, as it is now recognized that the Navy should be the strong right arm of the Government and one of the vital factors in the national strength.

GEORGE V. L. MEYER.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6856) to authorize the United States, acting through a shipping board, to subscribe to the capital stock of a corporation to be organized under the laws of the United States or of a State thereof or of the District of Columbia, to purchase, construct, equip, maintain, and operate merchant vessels in the foreign trade of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have desired, when opportunity offered, to say something about the international aspects presented by this bill; but I confess that it is rather depressing to be called upon to speak in regard to a bill which is dead. The bill now before the Senate, whatever the fate of a future one may be, is dead. A funeral oration over a departed subject for which I have neither admiration nor respect is not to my taste, nor have I the talent for it.

I say the bill is dead, and I ask the attention of the Senate for one moment to what has occurred. We had a bill presented. In a few days we had a substitute. and the first bill died. Then we had, after a week of debate carried on by Senators on this side, another substitute, the work of the Democratic caucus, and the first substitute died by the hands of its friends. Then came the third; and that, in turn, was killed by a proposition to amend it through the medium of a motion to recommit with instructions in the nature of amendments. And now as to this last bill, with the restoratives administered in the form of amendments, it has been demonstrated that there is not a real majority for it in the Senate. It has been demonstrated on more than one vote.

Mr. President, a great deal has been said about a filibuster. We discussed this bill through long hours of the day——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LODGE. I yield for a question. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. GORE. I should like to propound a question. The Senator states that a majority of the Senate are against the pending bill. I was wondering whether the Senator would be willing to fix a day and hour on which to vote on the bill?

Mr. LODGE. On this bill?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LODGE. As it now is?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not care to vote on a dead bill.

Mr. GORE. It might possibly be resurrected, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. Well, the sooner you resurrect it the better.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. In view of the statement of the Senator that a majority are against this bill, I desire to ask the Senator if he will agree right now to take a vote upon the motion, which is the pending motion, to recommit with instructions? Then we will determine whether or not there is a majority against it.

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President; I agree to nothing about this bill, except that it is bad.

Mr. GALLINGER. And dead.

Mr. LODGE. And dead.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; but I am sorry my harmless remarks have caused this excitement. If I can I will answer the Senator's question with pleasure.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator will recall that the substitute which was offered to the original bill was pressed for consideration and for a vote, and the yeas and nays have been ordered on that substitute. That, I believe, the Senator says is dead. Will the Senator be willing to test that by a vote in response to the ordering of the yeas and nays?

Mr. LODGE. The first substitute was killed by yourselves; you killed it by offering another substitute.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator be willing by a vote to bury the substitute which he says is dead?

Mr. LODGE. This bill may be walking about unburied. [Laughter.] I do not say that it is not, but I say it is dead; and everybody knows it is dead.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to ask the Senator if he would be willing to bury it by a vote?

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President; I prefer to adopt other methods.

Now, Mr. President, I spoke of the filibuster, as it is called. Through long hours of many days we on this side discussed it honestly, and I think vigorously, and then a movement in the nature of a filibuster was introduced against fair discussion of the bill by forcing us to sit all night, when intelligent discussion of any measure is extremely difficult.

I am not going to repeat what has been said by the Senator from New York and the Senator from California—much better than I can say it—to the effect that any method of obstruction was legitimate in view of the methods which have been employed to force this legislation through the Senate. But I wish to call attention to the fact, and it is the undoubted fact, that there never has been a real majority for this bill at any moment in this body. There may have been a coerced majority of one or two at odd times, but there never has been a real, genuine, honest majority for this bill at any moment.

I have watched proceedings in the Senate for a good many years. I never have seen what is called a filibuster successful except in the very closing hours of a short session, when time made it possible to defeat, perhaps, some objectionable provision in an appropriation bill. At all other times, when there was a real, genuine majority heartily in favor, as individuals, of a measure, it never has failed to come to a vote and be passed.

The fact is, Mr. President, the support of this bill is largely artificial, and that is where the weakness of the bill arises. The men in this Senate and in the House who are called upon to vote and carry this bill have not it at heart, any of them, as the Democratic Party, for example, had the reduction of the tariff at heart. That was a real party measure, upon which they agreed. This bill has been put upon us from outside. I am not referring now to the stimulus which has come from the interests of great banking houses and ship companies, both foreign and domestic, in favor of the bill. There you will find, perhaps, the reason for the absolute unwillingness to put in a prohibition of the purchase of belligerent-owned ships, which I believe a majority of both Houses to-day thinks would be a proper thing to do in the present condition of affairs. What I am referring to is the real force behind this bill and the only thing that has brought it here or that has caused the struggle which has arisen in regard to it.

Mr. President, I have never in debate here spoken otherwise than with respect of the Chief Executive of the Nation, no matter whether he was of my party or of another party. I trust I never shall do so. I have too high a veneration for the office which represents the American people as a whole. But, Mr. President, it is absolutely impossible to consider this bill without also considering the Executive influence which has been the great force behind it.

The President has demanded the bill. He has made the bill. He insists on its passage. He is in hourly consultation with Senators, and I have no doubt with Members of the House, in regard to it. He is just as much making the bill as anyone on this floor or in the House of Representatives; in fact, he is doing far more than anyone else.

I desire, in what I am about to say, to speak with the utmost respect. and I do. I trust it will not seem disrespectful when I say that, although President of the United States, the occupant of that office is still merely human, and therefore fallible. The doctrine of divine right and that "the king can do no wrong" has never yet attached, fortunately for us, to the President of the United States. What his reasons and arguments may be in behalf of this measure I do not know. He has never made more than a few general statements in regard to it. He seems content to stand on the broad and simple proposition, "Sic volo, sic jubeo."

I think when the President is approaching a new subject the first thing he does is to make up his mind, and when his mind is made up the thoughts which in more ordinary mortals are apt to precede the decision or determination of a great question are excluded. Information upon the new subject is looked on as a mere impertinence. When the world was in the first convulsion produced by the outbreak of the war he did not wait watchfully or otherwise, he did not pause to consider conditions or what an adjustment to those conditions after the first shock had passed might bring; he simply ordered this bill to buy the German ships to be produced and passed.

I have been constantly reminded of a little rhyme which we probably all have seen, which was written many years ago—and I quote it without any thought of disrespect, of course—in regard to a celebrated Oxford don. It ran in this way:

My name is Benjamin Jowett;
I'm the master of Baliol College.
Whatever is known, I know it,
And what I don't know isn't knowledge.

[Laughter.]

I think that mental attitude is an unfortunate one in the head of a college, but it seems to me that in the great position of President of the United States it is a very dangerous attitude. A man occupying that high position, or even men occupying such harmless and subordinate positions as we occupy in this body, when called upon to deal with great affairs finds it, I think, the part of wisdom, before insisting on any proposition, to discover what can be said against it, and duly weigh the objections.

One man, we will say a professor in a college, develops a system about finance or the tariff. He goes over it with the utmost care. He gives to it, perhaps, hours of reflection. Perhaps he has not made up his mind about it before he thinks it over, but after full consideration he finds no flaw in the system. He then takes it out and talks it over with a dozen friends, and he hears their objections and perhaps weighs them and considers them. When that process is done, he launches his plan into space, and then it has to meet all the objections there are in the world. That is a very different situation. It is well to remember that fact, and at least to hold an open mind when forcing upon a great country a policy as far-reaching as the one embodied in this bill.

I am now going to deal with only one side of this subject which has been forced upon us in this sudden and violent manner, but that side seems to me the most important.

In the first speech which I made in the Senate in regard to this bill I tried to show, and I think I did show, that the German ships which it is proposed to buy were wholly unsuitable, with very few exceptions, for the alleged purpose of the bill. Incidentally I also pointed out that the purchase of those ships, and the attempt to send them to sea after the transfer of the flag, would certainly bring grave international complications, and in all probability would lead us to the verge of war with the belligerent nations opposed to Germany. On the second occasion when I addressed the Senate I discussed the question of rates, and I think I demonstrated that the figures given in the report of the Secretaries of the Treasury and Commerce, together with some statements in those reports, were not trustworthy. From manifests giving the actual rates paid for carrying the various products during the last five months I showed what the real rates were from the port of Boston and contrasted them with the figures given in the reports of the two Secretaries—figures which seemed to have been taken from the air, as a conjuror appears to pick silver dollars out of empty space. I also, at the same time, endeavored, very inadequately, to discuss this bill from the economic point of view and to point out the true method of building up the American merchant marine in contrast to the utterly false methods proposed by this bill.

To-day I wish briefly to discuss the international law and the precedents which would govern if the Government persists in the intention of buying these German ships or the ships of Austria now laid up in our ports to avoid capture.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I yield for a question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Would it disturb the Senator to state at this point his views and information as to the purposes of the administration of this bill, if it should be passed, in regard to these belligerent ships? I ask the question for the reason that I hear it stated by a number of Democratic Senators that it is not the intention to buy belligerent ships. My impression was that the whole discussion here, in the early stages of this bill, was based upon the proposition that they did intend to buy belligerent ships.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am very glad to reply to that question. As I showed in the first speech I made, when this matter was brought up last August and an effort was made to hurry it through in the excitement of the opening days of the war, the Secretary of the Treasury went before the House committee and, under examination, substantially admitted and defended the proposition of buying the German ships. It was so understood by foreign powers; it was so understood in this country; it never has been contradicted officially; it has been defended on this floor in elaborate argument, and no authoritative denial has ever come. The amendment I offered to prohibit the purchase of belligerent-owned ships was defeated in the committee; it was subsequently laid on the table by a vote of the majority. We hear these assertions, "Oh, no; they do not mean to buy the German ships." It has never been stated, though, in any authoritative form. The chief outside resistance to-day to an agreement among our friends on the other side upon a bill which might go through both Houses is to putting in any prohibition against buying belligerent-owned ships.

On a matter of that gravity surely Congress has a right to say that it must not be done. It may seem an extreme statement, but we are a coordinate branch of the Government. We still are so—theoretically, at least. On a subject of this sort if we are of opinion that belligerent-owned ships ought not to be bought—and I believe a majority of the Senate thinks so to-day—such a provision ought to be placed in the bill.

The motive for resisting this prohibition can only grow out of the desire of wishing to have their hands free to buy the German ships if they choose. I say "the German ships"—I should apply it to English ships or to French ships just the same—but we know that these German ships, imprisoned in our ports to avoid capture, are practically the only ships of a belligerent open for sale. That is why I felt from the beginning, and believe to-day, that the great underlying purpose of this bill, as was undenied last summer, is to buy those German ships. All these vessels, as is well known, are owned by citizens or corporations of Germany or Austria. I do not know that the benevolent intentions of the administration have yet been extended to the Austrian ships. I have not heard of that, but they are here and they probably could be bought, at enormous prices.

Let me pause a moment to say that I have heard it suggested that we ought not to prohibit the purchase of belligerent-owned ships, because it would tie our hands and show that we were giving up a practice in which we had always engaged. Mr. President, no such thing as is here proposed ever was thought of or heard of before. There have been plenty of cases of the purchase of belligerent-owned ships by private individuals among neutrals, but never before has there been an opportunity to convert a belligerent-owned ship into a Government-owned ship, because never before was a Government-owned ship proposed. The difference between the Government-owned ship and the privately owned ship in time of war—indeed, at any time—is as great as that between night and day.

It has also been asserted that the United States has the right to purchase these ships, if it sees fit, without risk of seizure by English, French, or Russian warships. In support of this assertion an opinion was rendered by the Solicitor of the State Department on the 7th day of August, 1914. It is not necessary for me to repeat the admirable analysis of that opinion made by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], but the last sentence may be quoted.

The Solicitor of the State Department says:

"This memorandum is hurriedly struck off and I have not had time or opportunity to revise it, but it is believed that it correctly presents the status of the question involved."

It was thought at that time—when it was proposed to rush this measure through immediately—that an opinion in favor of our right to buy these ships, transfer the flag, and then operate them was necessary. For this reason the opinion of the Solicitor of the State Department was thrust upon an expectant world, with the statement that it "had been hurriedly struck off." As to the hurry I think there can be no dispute, and as to the opinion itself I think it is possible to show that it is unfounded and erroneous. The rule as to the rights of the citizens or subjects of a neutral power to purchase belligerent ships in time of war has changed from time to time, so that it is impossible to arrive at a true understanding of its present scope and probable operation without adverting to its history, without considering the precedents and prize courts by which it will now be applied and some consequences which may be expected to follow upon the enforcement of the rule against belligerent vessels directly or indirectly owned or operated by the United States Government, as intended under this bill. The old rule, generally adhered to for many years, if not for centuries, was that the transfer of vessels flagrante bello was originally held invalid. In the case of the Benito Estenger (176 Supreme Court Reports, p. 578) Chief Justice Fuller says:

> Transfers of vessels flagrante bello were originally held invalid—and I think I need not quote any further authorities to prove this unquestioned truth. Of this general rule there have been modifications in various countries. The English and American doctrine, to which I shall presently refer more fully, is very liberal as to the trade of neutrals in ships as in other articles of trade legitimate in time of peace. On the Continent of Europe, however, the case has always been very different. France has held steadfastly, prior to the declaration of London, to the doctrine that all transfers of flag after the opening of hostilities are void.

I read from Hall's International Law, sixth edition, page 499:

> Vessels, according to the practice of France, and apparently of some other States, are, however, excepted on the ground of the difficulty of preventing fraud. Their sale is forbidden, and they are declared good prize in all cases in which they have been transferred to neutrals after the buyers could have knowledge of the outbreak of a war. In England and the United States, on the contrary, the right to purchase vessels is in principle admitted, they being in themselves legitimate objects of trade as fully as any other kind of merchandise, but the opportunities of fraud being great, the circumstances attending a sale are severely scrutinized, and a transfer is not held to be good if it is subjected to any condition or even tacit understanding by which the vendor keeps an interest in the vessel or its profits, a control over it, a power of revocation, or a right to its restoration at the conclusion of the war.

This shows in a general way what the practice has been.

In the case of the schooner Etta, to be found in the American Law Register, volume 13, page 48, the court says:

> The law, however, upon this subject varies in different countries. The seventh article of the French regulations of the 26th of July, 1778, which is still in force—> provides that enemy-built vessels can not be reputed to belong to neutrals, unless there is documentary proof found on board that the sale to a subject of an ally or neutral was made before the commencement of hostilities. This regulation is thus defended in a recent French treatise in answer to the question, of what importance it is, whether enemy's vessels have been sold to neutrals before or after hostilities. Belligerents in desiring in maritime wars to appropriate to themselves ships of their enemies do not wish that the latter should, to avoid capture and confiscation, realize the capital which their vessels represent. All enemy's vessels pursued by cruisers and in danger of being captured would take refuge in neutral ports, and in order that they might not be captured their owners would sell them to neutral citizens.

This was in 1865—

It will be noticed that that statement covers precisely the case of the German ships.

In Lawrence's Wheaton, page 581, in the note, it is said:

> There is a distinction between the French law and the English and American, in reference to the transfer of ships during war. The seventh article of the French regulations of the 26th of July, 1778, still in force, provides that enemy-built vessels can not be reputed to belong to neutrals, unless there is documentary proof, found on board, that the sale to a subject of an ally or neutral was made before the commencement of hostilities, and that the act of transfer has been duly registered before the proper officer at the port of departure and signed by the owner or his attorney. This regulation is thus defended in a recent French treatise in answer to the question of what importance is it whether enemy's vessels have been sold to neutrals before or after hostilities.

Then Lawrence quotes the passage which I have just read from the opinion in the case of the schooner Etta, and which it is not necessary for me to read again.

Down to the time of the declaration of London the French rule, therefore, was absolute. The Russian rule was the same as that of the French. The court says in the case of the Georgia (7 Wall., 43), to which I shall have to refer later:

> The question in this case can not arise under the French code, as, according to that law, sales even of merchant vessels to a neutral, flagrante bello, are forbidden. And it is understood that the same rule prevails in Russia. Their law, in this respect, differs from the established English and American adjudications on this subject.

But in 1895 the Russians made some modifications of their rules, which is given in Moore's International Law Digest, volume 7, on page 424. It is taken from the Russian Prize Regulations of March 27, 1895, and is as follows:

> Merchant vessels acquired from a hostile power or its subjects by persons of neutral nationality are acknowledged to be hostile vessels unless it is proven that the acquisition must be considered, according to the laws of the nation to whom the purchasers belong, as having actually taken place before the purchasers received news of the declaration of war, or that the vessels acquired in the manner mentioned, although after the receipt of such news, were acquired quite conscientiously and not for the purpose of covering hostile property.

It will be observed, however, that this Russian rule goes but a slight distance in modifying the French rule, because it is necessary to show that the sale was not made for the purpose of covering hostile property, something which it would be quite impossible to prove in the case of the German ships which it is proposed by the administration to buy. The rise of Germany to the position of a great maritime power, with an extensive merchant marine, has been comparatively recent, but it was shown by the Senator from New York in his speech the other day, by quoting from the proceedings preceding the declaration of London, that the German view of the transfer of belligerent-owned ships to neutral flags was substantially the same as that of France and Russia.

I now come to the English and American doctrine, on which I have already read a general statement from Hall's International Law. Without going into the English doctrine, which is like ours, I wish to present certain extracts from our official correspondent on this subject, which show what the attitude of the United States has been.

The subject is considered in section 1188 of Moore's International Digest, volume 7.

I will not go over all the authorities, beginning with Marshall's well-known opinion in the case of Murray against the schooner Charming Betsy. They relate entirely to the purchase of belligerent-owned ships by neutral citizens and subjects, resting the right to purchase on the ground of the right of neutrals to trade with belligerents in anything practically, and therefore in ships, and they discuss at great length the question of the bona fides, which must be shown, and the various details which in a given case impugned the good faith or sustained it; but there are one or two extracts at a later time, which I think are worth reading, because they bear, as the Senate will see, more or less directly on the case of the German ships which the administration proposes to buy.

In a letter from Mr. Boutwell, the Secretary of the Treasury, to Mr. Washburn, minister to France, on May 23, 1871, which was sent to Mr. Fish, Secretary of State, on the same day, occurs the following statement:

> Can a foreign vessel be purchased by a citizen of the United States? * * *
> In reply * * * I have to observe that the natural right to acquire property by purchase has been held by high authority to be unaffected, so far as neutrals are concerned, by the mere fact that a state of war exists between two or more belligerent powers from the citizens or subjects of one of which the purchase is made. Such right is subject, however, to the restrictions imposed by international law, by treaty, or by the belligerent powers, respectively, as to the property of their own citizens or subjects during the existence of such war.

Then, in 1879, Mr. Evarts wrote to Mr. Christiancy, the minister to Peru, on June 20:

> It is notorious that a maritime war scarcely ever occurs when at least one of the belligerents does not seek to protect more or less of its shipping by a neutral flag. In some instances this may honestly be done, but sales of vessels of belligerents to neutrals in apprehension of war, or when hostilities may have actually broken out, are always more or less liable to suspicion, and such transactions justify the strictest inquiry on the part of the belligerent who thereby may have been defrauded of his right to capture enemy's property. There are various circumstances tending to show the good faith, or the reverse, of such transfers. Prominent among these is the ability of the alleged purchaser to pay for his bargain.

What I call attention to is the statement of Mr. Evarts, who was one of the greatest lawyers this country has ever had, and a great international lawyer also. His statements justify the strictest inquiry on the part of a belligerent who thereby may have been defrauded of his rights to capture enemy's property.

In a note to the letter, from which I have just read, it is said:

> In the case of the Itata, which, after being transferred by a Chilean corporation to Mr. Henry L. Stevens, an American citizen resident in Chile, entered Callao under the American flag with a regular clearance from Valparaiso the United States legation at Lima directed the consul to return the ship's papers and cause her to haul down the American flag. Under the suspicious circumstances of the case the action of the legation was approved.

These extracts suffice to show the care with which this question has been treated and the suspicion which attaches always to such sales.

In 1898 Mr. John Bassett Moore, Assistant Secretary of State, and, I suppose I may say, one of the greatest authorities on international law now living, wrote as follows to Messrs. Butler, Notman, Joline, and Mynderes:

> In reply to a request for some sanction or approval of the proposed transfer of enemy vessels to a neutral in a blockaded Cuban port in 1898, the Department of State said that it could not give desired permission or concede any privilege, because of transfer from belligerent to neutral in a blockaded port. Vessels might be allowed to sail subject to capture and to adjudication by prize court of bona fides of transaction and of effect, if any, of mortgage, on national character of vessels prior to transfer.

Those extracts which I have read define sufficiently well the American doctrine, and they show with what care it was limited, the suspicion which attached always to the transfer of a belligerent-owned ship to a neutral, and they point out more than once the objection arising in case of a vessel avoiding capture, and they speak of the right of a belligerent to capture a vessel of the opposing belligerent as an uncontested right. The English rule, I suppose, may be said to have been laid down in the case of the Sechs Geschwistern in Fourth Christopher Robinson's reports.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator passes from the consideration of the American doctrine, I should like to inquire of him whether it is his understanding that the right to buy, assuming that the bona fides of the purchase is established, was ever questioned by any American Secretary of State?

Mr. LODGE. I think it was very much questioned if the ship was one avoiding capture.

Mr. WALSH. That is not the question. Perhaps the Senator misunderstood me. I desire him to assume that there was a perfect bona fide purchase.

Mr. LODGE. I assume that.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the understanding of the Senator that any Secretary of State ever held that, assuming the purchase to have been entirely bona fide——

Mr. LODGE. I think so. I think some of the extracts I have read show that they made an exception in case of ships avoiding capture, and that the sale made, no matter how much in good faith, did not relieve a ship in that condition.

Mr. WALSH. I understand the Senator's position now, but I can not agree with him.

Mr. LODGE. This is the case of the Minerva, in which Sir William Scott, afterwards Lord Stowell, laid down the rule:

> The first question is whether such a purchase can be legally made. I am not aware of any case in this court or in the court of appeals in which the legality of such a purchase has been recognized. There have been cases of merchant vessels driven into ports out of which they could not escape, and there sold, in which, after much discussion and some hesitation of opinion, the validity of the purchase has been sustained. Such cases, I believe, did occur during the first war in which I attended this court or the court of appeals. But whether the purchase of a vessel of this description, built for war and employed as such and now rendered incapable of acting as a ship of war by the arms of the other belligerent and driven into a neutral port for shelter—whether the purchase of such a ship, I say, can be allowed which shall enable the enemy so far to rescue himself from the disadvantage into which he has fallen as to have the value, at least, restored to him by a neutral purchaser is a question on which I shall wait for the authority of the superior court before I admit the validity of such a transfer.

The English rule, it will be seen from that, is very liberal but absolutely strict in regard to a vessel which had been used for a vessel of war, to which I shall refer again.

The case of the Sechs Geschwistern is quoted in the Benito Estenger, and I will read it in Fourth Chr. Robinson, 100. Sir William Scott there said:

> This is the case of a ship asserted to have been purchased of the enemy, a liberty which this country has not denied to neutral merchants, though by the regulation of France it is entirely forbidden. The rule which this country has been content to apply is that property so transferred must be bona fide and absolutely transferred, that there must be a sale divesting the enemy of all further interest in it, and that anything tending to continue his interest vitiates a contract of this description altogether.

That is substantially the same as the American doctrine. It is thus apparent that prior to the declaration of London there was no uniformity of rule on the purchase of belligerent-owned vessels by a neutral among the great maritime nations. France and Russia took one view; England and the United States took another. But there was one point on which even then there was uniformity, and that was in regard to vessels of war or which had been vessels of war. Of course under the French and continental rule the transfer of the flag in such cases would not have been recognized for a moment, and if we consider the cases we shall find that the English and American rule in regard to vessels of this character has been the same as that held by France and the continental powers. I take the famous case of the Georgia. The Georgia had been a Confederate cruiser. She was taken to an English port, dismantled, changed into a merchant vessel, and sold to a British subject. The judgment of the court, which was delivered by Judge Nelson, is so important and covers the case so thoroughly that I should like to have it printed entire with my remarks, if there is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The opinion referred to is as follows:

> Mr. Justice Nelson delivered the opinion of the court.
> It is insisted by the learned counsel for the claimant that all the depositions in the record, except those in preparatorio, should be stricken out or disregarded by the court on the appeal for the reason that it does not appear that any order had been granted on behalf of either party to take further proofs. But the obvious answer to the objection is that it comes too late. It should have been made in the court below. As both parties have taken further proofs, very much at large, bearing upon the legality of the capture, without objection, the inference is unavoidable that there must have been an order for the same, or, if not, that the depositions were taken by mutual consent. They were taken on interrogatories and cross-interrogatories, in which the counsel of both parties joined, and among other witnesses examined is the claimant himself, whose deposition, with the papers accompanying it, fill more than one-third of the record.
> As respects the vessel, we are satisfied upon the proofs that the claimant purchased the Georgia without any purpose of permitting her to be again armed and equipped for the Confederate service and for the purpose, as avowed at the time, of converting her into a merchant vessel. He had, however, full knowledge of her antecedent character, of her armament and equipment as a vessel of war of the Confederate navy, and of her depredations on the commerce of the United States, and that, after having been thus employed by the enemies of this Government upward of a year, she had suddenly entered the port of Liverpool with all her armament and complement of officers and crew on board. He was not only aware of all this, but, according to his own statement, it had occurred to him that this condition of the vessel might afford an objection to her registry at the customs, and before he perfected the sale he sought and obtained information from some of the officials that no objection would be interposed. He did not apply to the Government on the subject.
> The claimant states "that he knew from common report she (the Georgia) had been employed as a Confederate cruiser, but I thought," he says, "if the United States Government had any objection to the sale they or their officers would have given some public intimation of it, as the sale was advertised in the most public manner." If instead of applying to an officer of the customs for information the claimant had applied to his Government, he would have learned that as early as March 14, 1863, Mr. Adams, our minister in England, had called the attention of Lord Russell, the foreign secretary, to the rule of public law, as administered by the highest judicial authorities of his Government, which forbid the purchase of ships of war belonging to the enemy by neutrals in time of war, and had insisted that the rule should be observed and enforced in the war then pending between this Government and the insurgent States, and also that he had addressed a remonstrance to the British Government on the 9th of May, but a few days after the Georgia had entered the port of Liverpool, against her being permitted to remain longer in that port than the period specified in Her Majesty's proclamation. His own Government could have advised him of the responsibilities he assumed in making the purchase. Mr. Adams, after receiving information of the purchase by the claimant, in accordance with his views of public law above stated, communicated with the commanders of our vessels cruising in the channel and expressed to them the opinion that, notwithstanding the purchase, the Georgia might be made lawful prize whenever and under whatever colors she should be found sailing on the high seas.
> The principle here assumed by Mr. Adams as a correct one was first adjudged by Sir William Scott in the case of the Minerva in the year 1807. The head note of the case is: "Purchase of a ship of war from an enemy whilst lying in a neutral port, to which it had fled for refuge, is invalid." It was stated in that case by counsel for the claimant that it was a transaction which could not be shown to fall under any principle that had led to condemnation in that court or in the court of appeal. And Sir William Scott observed in delivering his opinion that he was not aware of any case in his court or in the court of appeal in which the legality of such a purchase had been recognized. He admitted there had been cases of merchant vessels driven into ports, out of which they could not escape, and there sold, in which, after much discussion and some hesitation of opinion, the validity of the purchase had been sustained. But "whatever the purchase of a vessel of this description, built for war and employed as such, and now rendered incapable of acting as a ship of war by the arms of the other belligerent, and driven into a neutral port for shelter—whether the purchase of such a ship can be allowed, which shall enable the enemy so far to secure himself from the disadvantage into which he has fallen as to have the value at least restored to him by a neutral purchaser," he said, "was a question on which he would wait for the authority of the superior court before he would admit the validity of the transfer." He denied that a vessel under these circumstances could come fairly within the range of commercial speculation.
> It has been insisted in the argument here by the counsel for the claimant that there were facts and circumstances in the case of the Minerva which went strongly to show that the sale was collusive and that at the time of the capture she was on her way back to the enemy's port. This may be admitted. But the decision was placed, mainly and distinctly, upon the illegality of the purchase. And such has been the understanding of the profession and of text-writers, both in England and in this country, and as still higher evidence of the rule in England it has since been recognized as settled law by the judicial committee of Her Majesty's privy council. In the recent learned and most valuable commentaries of Mr. Phillimore (now Sir Robert Phillimore, judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England) on international law he observes, after stating the principles that govern the sale of enemies' ships during war to neutrals: "But the right of purchase by neutrals extends only to merchant ships of enemies, for the purchase of ships of war belonging to enemies is held invalid." And Mr. T. Pemberton Leigh, in delivering judgment of the judicial committee and lords of the privy council in the case of the Baltica, observes: "A neutral, while war is imminent or after it has commenced, is at liberty to purchase either goods or ships—not being ships of war—from either belligerent, and the purchase is valid, whether the subject of it be lying in a neutral port or in an enemy's port." Mr. Justice Story lays down the same distinction in his "Notes on the Principles and Practice of Prize Courts," a work that has been selected by the British Government for the use of its naval officers as the best code of instruction in the prize law. The same principle is found in Wildman on "International Rights in Time of War," a valuable English work, published in 1850, and in a still more recent work, Hosack on the "Rights of British and Neutral Commerce," published in London in 1854, this question is referred to in connection with sales of several Russian ships of war, which it was said had been sold in the ports of the Mediterranean to neutral purchasers, for the supposed purpose of defeating the belligerent rights of her enemies in the Crimean War, and he very naturally concludes, from the case of the Minerva, that no doubt could exist as to what would be the decision in case of a seizure. This work was published before the judgment of the privy council in the case of the Baltica, which was a Russian vessel, sold imminente bello; being, however, a merchant ship, the purchase was upheld; but, as we have seen from the opinion in that case, if it had been a ship of war it would have been condemned.
> It has been suggested that, admitting the rule of law as above stated, the purchase should still be upheld, as the Georgia, in her then condition, was not a vessel of war, but had been dismantled, and all guns and munitions of war removed; that she was purchased as a merchant vessel and fitted up, bona fide, for the merchant service. But the answer to the suggestion is that if this change in the equipment in the neutral port, and in the contemplated employment in future of the vessel, could have the effect to take her out of the rule and justify the purchase, it would always be in the power of the belligerent to evade it and render futile the reasons on which it is founded. The rule is founded on the propriety and justice of taking away from the belligerent not only the power of rescuing his vessel from pressure and impending peril of capture, by escaping into a neutral port, but also to take away the facility which would otherwise exist by a collusive or even actual sale of again rejoining the naval force of the enemy. The removed armament of a vessel built for war can be readily replaced, and so can every other change be made or equipment furnished for effective and immediate service. The Georgia may be instanced in part illustration of this truth. Her deck remained the same, from which the pivot guns and others had been taken; it had been built originally strong in order to sustain the war armament, and further strengthened by uprights and stanchions beneath. The claimant states that the alterations, repairs, and outfit of the vessel for the merchant service cost some £3,000. Probably an equal sum would have again fitted her for the replacement of her original armament as a man-of-war.

The distinction between the purchase of vessels of war from the belligerent in time of war by neutrals in a neutral port and of merchant vessels is founded on reason and justice. It prevents the abuse of the neutral by partiality toward either belligerent when the vessels of the one are under pressure from the vessels of the others, and removes the temptation to collusive or even actual sales, under the cover of which they may find their way back again into the service of the enemy.

That the Georgia, in the present case, entered the port of Liverpool to escape from the vessels of the United States in pursuit is manifest. The steam frigates Kearsarge, Niagara, and Sacramento were cruising off the coast of France and in the British Channel in search of this vessel and others that had become notorious for their depredations on American commerce. It was but a few days after the purchase of the Georgia by the claimant the Alabama was captured in the channel, after a short and brilliant action, by the Kearsarge. The Georgia was watched from the time she entered the port of Liverpool, and was seized as soon as she left it.

The question in this case can not arise under the French code, as, according to that law, sales even of merchant vessels to a neutral, flagrante bello, are forbidden. And it is understood that the same rule prevails in Russia. Their law, in this respect, differs from the established English and American adjudications on this subject.

It may not be inappropriate to remark that Lord Russell advised Mr. Adams, on the day the Georgia left Liverpool under the charter party to the Portuguese Government, August 8, 1864, Her Majesty's Government had given directions that "In future, no ship of war of either belligerent shall be allowed to be brought into any of Her Majesty's ports for the purpose of being dismantled or sold."

Decree affirmed (7 Wallace, 38–44).

Mr. LODGE. I will not read the whole of the opinion now, but here is one passage to which I wish particularly to call attention:

It has been suggested that, admitting the rule of law as above stated, the purchase should still be upheld, as the Georgia, in her then condition, was not a vessel of war, but had been dismantled and all guns and munitions of war removed; that she was purchased as a merchant vessel and fitted up, bona fide, for the merchant service. But the answer to this suggestion is that if this change in the equipment in the neutral port and in the contemplated employment in future of the vessel could have the effect to take her out of the rule and justify the purchase, it would always be in the power of the belligerent to evade it and render futile the reasons on which it is founded.

And holding that view, the court, as is well known, decided that the Georgia was good prize.

The case of the Minerva, which I have just read, holds precisely the same ground in regard to a vessel of war.

These two cases, and the authorities cited in them, show that the courts held that, speaking broadly, a ship to which anything gave a military character, either past or present, was good prize. It is generally known—in fact, it is notorious—that many of the German ships which it is proposed to buy are auxiliary cruisers of the German Government, built and arranged in such a way as to be of naval service in time of war, prepared to carry guns, and with officers and crews connected with the naval service, as is the case on many of the English ships. These facts would bring many of the German ships which it is proposed to buy within the rule laid down by our own court, and nothing that we could do would efface that character. Therefore, wholly apart from the declaration of London and wholly apart from the differences of opinion as to the rule about the transfer of belligerent-owned merchant ships to neutrals during a state of war, it is clear that all nations have held that ships of the character of these auxiliary cruisers of the German Navy are good prize. If we buy them and put the American flag over them, they are good prize to-day under our own decisions.

I now come to the declaration of London. It is not necessary for me to analyze the discussions which led up to that declaration, for that has been done by the Senator from New York once for all, and he showed from the records beyond the possibility of question that the attitude taken by France, Germany, and Russia was in support, generally speaking, of what may be called the old rule or a very slightly modified construction of the rigid French doctrine. He also showed that Great Britain and the United States maintained the British and American doctrine as I have tried to set it forth, and he further demonstrated that the rules laid down as to the transfer of belligerent-owned ships to neutrals represented a compromise between the English and American views on one side and what may be roughly called the continental views on the other. The rule of the declaration of London was as follows:

ARTICLE 56.

The transfer of an enemy vessel to a neutral flag effected after the outbreak of hostilities is void unless it is proved that such transfer was not made in order to evade the consequences to which an enemy vessel, as such, is exposed.

There, however, is an absolute presumption that a transfer is void—

(1) If the transfer has been made during a voyage or in a blockaded port.

(2) If a right to repurchase or recover the vessel is reserved to the vendor.

(3) If the requirements of the municipal law governing the right to fly the flag under which the vessel is sailing have not been fulfilled.

The drafting committee in its report says in regard to the section which I have just quoted:

The rule accepted in respect of transfers made before the outbreak of hostilities is inverted. In that case there is a presumption that the transfer is valid; in the present, that it is void: Provided, always, that proof to the contrary may be given. For instance, it might be proved that the transfer had taken place by inheritance.

It is to be noted in the first place that the London rule, while modifying the German, Russian, and French doctrine, also differs radically from what might be called the English and American doctrine. Under the English and American doctrine the sale of a belligerent-owned ship to a neutral was permitted if the intent of the purchaser was bona fide, whereas by the rule of the declaration of London the intent of the vendor, as well as that of the purchaser, must be bona fide. It is true that the declaration of London was never formally ratified by the powers so as to become a binding convention on all the nations taking part in the conference, but it must be remembered that it was submitted to the Senate by the President and that the Senate, on April 24, 1912, advised and consented to its ratification. These facts do not make it binding, because it never became, as I have said, a treaty or convention formally ratified by all the signatories. It merely indicates the acceptance by our Government in all its branches of the rule. But not long after the opinion of the Solicitor of the State Department, to which I have referred, was put forth the British Government adopted the declaration of London, with certain modifications not affecting the rule which I am now discussing, and further directed that—

The general report of the drafting committee on the said declaration presented to the naval conference and adopted by the conference at the eleventh plenary meeting on February 25, 1909, shall be considered by all prize courts as an authoritative statement of the meaning and intention of the said declaration, and such courts shall construe and interpret the provisions of the said declaration by the light of the commentary given therein.

This reference to the report of the drafting committee is of course very important, for it will be observed that the committee, in order to indicate the narrow bounds of discussion in interpreting rule 56, instanced by way of illustration a transfer of the vessel by inheritance as one that would satisfy the rule. This use of a transfer of inheritance, which involves no possible evasive intent of either party, is an indication of the rigid character of the rule, in the view of the drafting committee. The English prize court will of course obey the direction of their Government, which I have just quoted, and will apply the report of the drafting committee in interpreting the declaration of London. In doing so they will be compelled to declare that a neutral, however bona fide his intent, who purchased a ship in a port of refuge would violate the rule of the declaration of London unless he was able to prove not only his own good faith but also the good faith of the former owner in selling the ship, and that the sale was made with no intent to evade the consequences of war.

It is clear that the first clause of article 56 of the declaration of London absolutely covers the German ships. I quote it again:

The transfer of an enemy vessel to a neutral flag effected after the outbreak of hostilities is void unless it is proved that such transfer was not made in order to evade the consequences to which an enemy vessel, as such, is exposed.

How do the German ships happen to be in our ports, laid up and refusing to sail? They remain in our ports and do not put to sea simply because they have taken refuge in our ports, and they do not put to sea because they wish to evade capture; that is, "to evade the consequences," in the language of the declaration of London, "to which an enemy vessel, as such, is exposed." Without going further, it is obvious that under the terms of the declaration of London every one of those German vessels would be good prize, that France, England, and Russia would not recognize the transfer of the flag, and that if British ships were bought under similar conditions Germany would not recognize the transfer of the flag, but would treat a vessel thus transferred as a British ship subject to capture.

The Senator from Montana, with his usual ability, has demonstrated the English and American doctrine as I have stated it and as it was stated completely in a few lines by the Senator from New York, but his conclusion that England would not suddenly alter her doctrine, held for so many years, seems to me an impotent conclusion.

Mr. President, at the time of the Trent affair the first view of England, expressed by Lord Palmerston, when it was thought that the envoys were likely to be seized on a ship then coming into the English Channel, was, to state it roughly, that under the English doctrine, maintained for centuries, they could not object to one of our warships stopping that ship and taking the Confederate envoys out of it. Then came the news of the Trent affair; and the Crown officers being called upon to solve it, with a dexterity which sometimes appears in legal minds, put forth the extraordinary proposition that it would have been all right; that it would have been justifiable to take Mason and Slidell if we had taken the whole thing, the ship and everything—that is, the Trent—into port. That was a marvelous proposition; and as indignation waxed in England over the Trent affair, they deliberately abandoned the doctrine for which they had gone to war in 1812 and adopted the American doctrine, for which we had gone to war in the same year. They changed their mind with great rapidity, and it was in time of peace that they changed it, too. With the people of this country, in the first excitement of the Trent affair, when Wilkes was applauded and fêted everywhere, we were all eager to hold the Confederate envoys and justify the act. Thanks to the wisdom of Abraham Lincoln, who said on the first day, when he heard of it, that he was not very well versed in international law, but that it seemed to him that these men were white elephants, and he did not see how he could get away from the American doctrine for which we had fought, the matter was delayed forty days and the men were given back. But I think the American people at that time accepted it with some reluctance. I have always thought that Lowell expressed it rightly in his poem when he said:

> We give the critters back, John,
> 'Cos Abram thought 'twas right.

I think that was the only reason. I do not think the American people believed in it. They would have let their old doctrine, for which we have fought, go just as the English people did in a moment of excitement. This shows how hopeless it is to say that any people would not change a doctrine because they have always held it.

But, wholly apart from this, what is the use of saying that England would not alter her doctrine when she has altered it, as a matter of fact, and when the French, the Russians, and the Germans have not altered their doctrine in regard to vessels imprisoned in a port of refuge, as is the case with the German ships in our ports to-day? It does not matter how much we argue here the other side of these cases or the possibility of other views; the question as to whether those ships shall be treated as good prize under the Declaration of London, and the case of the auxiliary cruisers, under any doctrine, new or old, will be decided by the courts of the belligerents, for we have no international prize court, and our contention at The Hague was that the matter of an international prize court should be optional.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I should like to put into the RECORD, in immediate juxtaposition to his suggestion about the prize court being optional, a statement as to the effect and the scope of the option. It was not that the prize court should be optional, but that the character of its jurisdiction should be optional. The original prize-court treaty provided for an international appellate court, to which appeals might be taken from the courts of last resort of the signatory countries, including the Supreme Court of the United States. The Committee on Foreign Relations were of the opinion that there were constitutional objections to our ratifying the treaty which provided that there should be any court, even an international one, more supreme than the one Supreme Court of the Constitution. Accordingly we proposed to the other signatory powers that there should be an option attached to the prize-court provision under which any country, instead of subjecting the decision of our court of last resort in prize cases to an appeal, review, and reversal, might elect to have questions existing taken up and disposed of de novo, not by way of reviewing the courts of the country, but by deciding the question as a separate and independent decision, thus reaching the same result without reviewing the courts of last resort.

Mr. LODGE. I am very much obliged to the Senator from New York for correcting me. I stated it so broadly in a single word that it was liable to just the misunderstanding which the Senator has cleared up.

Mr. ROOT. I ventured to interrupt because I have observed several statements by writers of good repute indicating that they misunderstood the scope of the option.

Mr. LODGE. I am very glad to have it put so explicitly.

It is the exclusive province of the prize courts of the nation of the captor ship to pass upon all questions relating to the lawfulness of the prize.

A British cruiser will not carry her prize into the jurisdiction of the United States, where our courts, if they could entertain such jurisdiction, would determine the lawfulness of the capture by applying our own rule. She will carry her prize to the courts of Great Britain. The declaration of London is the law of those courts.

The same result follows in the case of a capture made by a French cruiser. We know what the rule of that country is, and have known it for a hundred years. By that rule belligerent vessels purchased by a neutral, after notice of declaration of war, are subject to seizure as lawful prize. The prize courts of France have uniformly enforced this rule.

If the United States, after notice of the rule of the prize courts of England and France, chooses to purchase belligerent vessels, it is not likely that the prize courts of those nations will look with favor upon a claim made for the release of captured vessels which were purchased in defiance of the known rule.

That such notice has a very important effect can be readily seen by a reference to The Georgia (7 Wall., p. 39), which I have already mentioned.

This vessel, I repeat, had been a Confederate cruiser, was taken to an English port, all her war material was taken off of her, and the vessel was bona fide purchased, without notice, by a citizen of Great Britain and registered under the laws of that nation. I repeat it in order to bring out the point of the notice. She was then captured by a war vessel of the United States and condemned as prize. The United States, however, had previously protested to Great Britain against the purchase of that class of vessels by English neutrals, but knowledge of this had never reached the purchaser.

The Supreme Court of the United States held that the vessel was lawful prize.

I know, of course, that the bill provides for the creation of a corporation in which the United States is to hold a majority of the stock, and in which it will probably hold all the stock, unless interested persons, for illegitimate purposes, take an interest in the guise of minority stockholders. This fiction of a corporation will not alter the character of the ownership. The United States can not prowl the seas under the shelter of a corporation. The United States will own the ships, and they will be the ships of the United States in the view of the American people and of the whole world. The operation of these vessels will be controlled from Washington. The trade in which they engage and their destination will be determined, directly or indirectly, by the President of the United States, just as much as he now determines the movements of the Navy. But these Government-owned merchantmen will be liable to search on the high seas for contraband of war. There is no provision in this bill to prohibit their carrying contraband or conditional contraband of war. They thus become at once liable to the right of search, a recognized right of all belligerents, disputed by no one, and recognized by our Government in the recent letter to Sir Edward Grey. This is a burden that ships engaged in commerce have always borne, even if such vessels have flown the flag of a neutral nation and were, even on the high seas, part of its territory; the fact that they were privately owned has prevented the search from being regarded as an infraction upon any sovereign right. Private ownership has prevented the exercise of this recognized belligerent right from becoming a casus belli. Governments have heard and acted upon complaints made by private owners whenever the Governments thought fit to do so, and has ignored them whenever the public interest made that course preferable.

But what will the American people say when a ship purchased with public money and operated under public direction is thus invaded? If the resentment of our people may be expected when these public ships are searched on the high seas, as they certainly will be, what will be their sentiment in the very probable event of the seizure of these vessels as the lawful prize of a British or French captor? What would be the tone of the protest that the people would compel any administration to address to the powers?

It is here that the great peril to the peace of the Nation, which this bill carries, lies. It is this which has caused the intensity of the opposition to the bill. This is no imaginary danger. It is as certain to come as the rising of the sun if the Government persists in its plan of buying the German ships when this bill becomes law.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] the other night made a speech, in which he scoffed at the opposition to this bill on account of the dread of war. He twitted us in his pleasant, playful way with dreading war. Well, Mr. President, I dread war for this country; I dread it profoundly, especially a needless war. I dread war anywhere; it is an awful thing; and I particularly dread war for this country with great powers when we are in a condition of utter defenselessness, and when, instead of trying to better the condition, we are engaged at this moment in the House of Representatives in making economies by cutting off submarines, of all things in the world, and refusing appropriations for airships or aeroplanes—the two great modern weapons of war. When the whole world has been watching their exploits, they are selected as the subject of economy in the House of Representatives to-day.

I do not question, Mr. President, the earnest desire of the administration in favor of peace; I am sure that the President and all his advisers are anxious for peace. I think they have the same dread and hatred of war that I believe every reflecting man must feel.

But look at Vera Cruz. Somebody told the President there would be no resistance at Vera Cruz. There was no need to send expensive envoys to Mexico to bring back a preposterous report like that. Anybody with the slightest knowledge of human nature, and particularly Mexican human nature, knew that an attempt to seize one of their cities by armed force would bring resistance. It might be futile, fruitless resistance; it might be a treacherous resistance, but it would be resistance. It came, and the bloodshed followed. The administration blundered into that miserable business. They did not mean to have a fight at Vera Cruz; they did not mean to sacrifice the lives of American sailors; they did not mean to kill and wound two or three hundred Mexicans, but they created a situation in which they tumbled and floundered into bloodshed.

Now, apparently it is believed that if we buy the German ships or the ships of any other belligerent and put them under our flag no nation would dare to interfere with us. It certainly would be against the interests of any other nation to have trouble with the United States; we are friendly with all of them; they, I hope, are friendly with us, but when you do an act during a great war which is a benefit to one side and an injury to the other, which one side believes to be an unneutral act, if not a hostile act, nations are not accustomed to hesitate. I called attention the other day, and I will again call attention, to the case of the Laird rams. Of course the Laird rams would be no parallel with this; they were ships of war built at Liverpool, but I use them as an illustration of national feeling under the stress of war. We knew the injury those Laird rams would do to us if they were let loose to break the southern blockade; we also knew perfectly well that, if we were to get into war with England, the probability would be that English help to the South would finally break the Union. We knew the enormous danger that beset us in a quarrel with England at that moment, and yet what did we do? We protested and protested again and again against the Laird rams, but still the work went on until Mr. Adams made his famous declaration, which I inadvertently misquoted the other day, when he wrote: "It is superfluous in me to point out to your lordship that this is war," and thereby declared that the American Government would hold that if the English allowed those rams to leave Liverpool it was war then and there.

This Nation was fighting for its life, and was prepared to take every risk conceivable rather than to permit its enemy to be strengthened by the act of a neutral. The nations on either side of the great war in Europe to-day are each one of them fighting for their lives; and if anyone supposes that Germany, on the one hand, or Great Britain, France, and Russia, on the other, are going to stand by in silence and allow this country to change the balance of conditions which war has created, he makes a perilous error. Those people will not measure cost when it comes to a question of aiding their enemies on the one side or the other. We are going to begin apparently by buying German ships; $20,000,000, $30,000,000, or $40,000,000 is to be handed over to Germany, relieving her subsidized steamship companies from a burden of expense and loss, and that great sum of the public money of the United States is to be turned into German coffers.

Suppose we buy British-owned ships, of which the Secretary of Commerce spoke in one of his speeches—perhaps they were only a dream, but he spoke of them to the number, I think, of 16—suppose we should buy those British ships and pay many million dollars for them, do you imagine that Germany would sit by in quiet and allow us to give that aid to British merchants and indirectly to the British treasury? Neither power would think of doing it. The mere act of buying, even if you left the ships to rot tied up at the wharves, would change the balance of the conditions created by the war and would be a hostile and unneutral act; and then, if you set them afloat and sent them to sea with the American flag over them, it is perfectly clear that the belligerent Governments will not recognize the transfer of the flag, but will regard them as still German ships or British ships liable to capture or to be sunk if they resist. It seems to me insanity to take such a risk as that.

Why, Mr. President, in view of the German declaration about the war zone, we ought not to put any Government-owned ship afloat at this time. I am not discussing the merits of Government-owned ships or State socialism as against individualism. I am only saying that this is no time to put a Government-owned ship on the sea—I do not care where she was procured or who procured her. The German Government has given notice of what they call "a war zone," and has informed neutrals that submarines may be there at any moment to destroy ships venturing into those waters. Suppose that they sent a torpedo into a Government-owned ship. What a situation would be created! The American people naturally would be filled with indignation. Do we want such a situation as that to arise? It seems to me nothing could be worse. We know what these nations think; we know what their prize courts will decide. It is all set forth in their directions to their own courts and in the declaration of London; and we know how they feel. They can not make a protest formally until the overt act has been committed; but warnings have not been lacking. They were made last summer and they have been given since. Warnings or statements of how they feel have been presented, formally or informally, to our State Department.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what he thinks would be the consequence if a German torpedo should be sent into a vessel manned by American sailors, carrying American citizens, and flying the American flag, even though that vessel was owned by private American citizens or an American corporation?

Mr. LODGE. I think, Mr. President, there is all the difference in the world between that case and a Government-owned ship.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not ask about the difference. I asked the Senator to tell what he thought would be the consequence of such an act and what ought to be our course?

Mr. LODGE. I think, Mr. President, it would arouse a feeling in this country which I should be sorry to see aroused. We are on good terms with Germany, and I am anxious to remain on good terms with her. I think that such an incident, even in the case of a privately owned ship, would arouse great and dangerous feeling. I think the destruction in this way of a British ship carrying several hundred American passengers would arouse deep anger; but such things can be controlled by Governments. The vessels are privately owned property. Such matters are open to diplomatic discussion; they are open to indemnity; they are open to a thousand channels of escape, which have been used in war time out of mind; but when you pass from the privately owned ship to the Government-owned ship, it is the ship of your Government, of your whole people, which has been destroyed; the Nation is involved, and you create a situation which, despite the remarks of the Senator from Missouri, I do not hesitate to say I dread to contemplate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think the sinking of such a vessel would be inexcusable? And if the Senator will permit me, my object especially in asking the question was lest the effect of his argument might seem to be to create the impression that he would palliate the destruction of such a vessel by a German submarine.

Mr. LODGE. Never for a moment, Mr. President, would I palliate such a destruction by any one of the belligerents. Such a notice as that given by Germany threatening the destruction by submarines seems to me monstrous. I do not wish to criticize, and I should not think here of criticizing, in a hostile spirit the act of one power or the act of another with which we are on good terms unless the act wantonly threatened the lives and property of our citizens. When such incidents as those suggested by the Senator from Georgia arise—and I grieve to say they may arise; I hope not—they will be, to my thinking, perilous in the extreme, but they will not be so dangerous to our peace as a similar incident occurring to a Government-owned ship.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to direct an inquiry to the Senator simply to understand more clearly the position which he takes. I understood him to say that the declaration of London would be enforced by the English prize courts as the law of England.

Mr. LODGE. It has been so ordered by the Government——

Mr. WALSH. Well, is it the understanding of the Senator——

Mr. LODGE. And they stated that it was to be construed in the light of the report of the drafting committee. The modifications were on other points.

Mr. WALSH. Well, is it the understanding of the Senator that that declaration constitutes accordingly a part of the law of England?

Mr. LODGE. It constitutes to-day the law which they mean to apply in their prize courts. They may go further to-morrow and adopt the French doctrine. There is nothing to prevent it.

Mr. WALSH. I inquire of the Senator because I have on my desk a compilation of the Earl of Halsbury, lord high chancellor of England, a work issued since the declaration of London, in which he unequivocally declares that it is no part of the law of England.

Mr. LODGE. Well, Mr. President, that was long before they adopted it as their law. They have adopted it since the declaration of war.

Mr. WALSH. Well, the Senator ought to advise us how they have adopted it.

Mr. LODGE. They have adopted it by proclamation, by an order in council.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but is it the Senator's understanding that the privy council makes laws for England?

Mr. LODGE. It is my distinct understanding that the privy council makes orders which the courts obey.

Mr. WALSH. I had an idea that it was the Parliament of England that made the laws of England.

Mr. LODGE. Parliament does make the laws, but that does not prevent orders in council in dealing with foreign nations from being the law of England in those respects until Parliament sets them aside or until they are withdrawn by the council. The Senator is too familiar with our history to question that. We went to war with England because of orders in council in 1812. If they did not have effect in 1812, our ancestors were sadly mistaken as to the situation.

Mr. WALSH. I have yet to find that any prize court of England ever accepted the orders in council as the law of England when Parliament absolutely——

Mr. LODGE. It is the law which governs the courts.

Mr. WALSH. When Parliament refuses to recognize them as a part of the law of England.

Mr. LODGE. Ah, when Parliament refuses to recognize the order in council perhaps that is so; but Parliament has not done so, and will not do so, and these orders in council are in effect now; the courts will decide as the order in council directs, and they will decide in accordance with the report of the drafting committee. This is not new. It has been done again and again.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator, I take it, understands, as I do, that the privy council is just an arm of the executive; and is it the understanding of the Senator that the executive can command the courts of England to construe the law as it sees fit?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know whether it can or not; I know in prize cases it has done so, and that it can and has directed that the prize courts shall follow the declaration of London and interpret it in accordance with the report of the drafting committee of the conference.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have been absent from Washington during the discussion of this bill. Since my return, I have been engaged in ascertaining what are the matters of difference between the contending forces of the Senate. I find these differences represented on the record by four substitute bills for the bill originally reported by the Committee on Commerce—one substitute offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] for the committee, another by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], another by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and another by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

I assume therefore that these substitutes fairly represent the differences of view of the Senate regarding this important matter; and what are those differences? These substitutes all seem to be based upon the assumption that it is expedient that the Government should either construct or purchase ships which can be used either as auxiliary ships in the Navy or in aid of commerce as occasion may require, some of the substitutes covering simply the construction, others covering both the construction and purchase of needed ships, but all apparently recognizing the fact that it is necessary that the Government should act in some way in the acquisition of ships both in aid of the Navy and in aid of commerce.

It is true these substitutes differ as to the form of the transaction. The substitute offered by the committee provides for the acquisition of these ships by a Government-controlled corporation in which it will hold at least a majority or perhaps all of the capital stock, whilst the others provide that the ships shall be directly purchased and owned by the Government itself. This is a mere difference in form as to the transaction. The Government already owns ships which it has acquired by purchase, and owns them in corporate form through its control of the stock of the Panama line. There is no essential difference between ownership by the Government and ownership by a corporation in which the Government owns the control of the whole or a majority of the stock.

What other difference is there? Why, some of these substitutes provide that the Government shall either operate or lease these ships for commercial purposes and others provide that it shall only lease. It seems to me that this is an immaterial difference, and one which could be readily adjusted by the expression of the sentiment of the majority of this body, and that such adjustment would be acquiesced in by all.

From what does the necessity of Government ownership arise? Is it because we lack the necessary supporting ships for our fighting ships in our Navy, or is it because we lack the ships that are necessary and essential to move the commerce of this country? Probably the latter demand is the more insistent now during the existence of this war; but before this war arose the former demand was the more insistent. Why? Because we were engaged in building a Navy, which we intended should be a complete and well-proportioned Navy that could maintain its place in the world's contests in case of war.

Such a Navy should be made up both of fighting ships and of auxiliary ships, the one as essential as the other; auxiliary ships consisting of colliers, transports, dispatch boats, and scouts, without which a navy would be as helpless as an army without a commissary. Yet for years we have been building up a badly proportioned Navy, consisting of splendid fighting ships capable of holding their own anywhere, but without the supporting ships which were necessary to prevent the fighting ships from being driven from the ocean in case of war.

There were two ways of furnishing these carrying and supply ships, the auxiliary ships of the Navy. One was by subsidizing an American merchant marine, whose ships could be called upon by the Government at any time for the purpose of meeting the requirements of the auxiliary Navy. It has been apparent for years that we could not develop a merchant marine unless it were either subsidized or constructed by the United States. The protective system of this country had lifted up the cost of building throughout this country above the international level, so that it required nearly twice as much to build a ship within our boundaries as it would outside, and the protective system had raised the standard of wages throughout the country, and the shipping laws had raised the standard of administration, so that the cost of operating the ships was 50 per cent or more in excess of international standards. It is apparent, therefore, that in an international contest for freight ships constructed in this country under the protective system and operated under the protective system could not compete with the ships of the outside world. It is idle to call upon the patriotism of those engaged in the shipping business to submit to a great sacrifice in order to satisfy the pride of the American people in the development of an American merchant marine.

The Democratic Party has been in full power for two years. Prior to that time the Republican Party was only in divided power; but even when in full power it was not able to establish a subsidized system. Therefore the only thing to do in order to secure the ships necessary to support our Navy in case of war was to have them built by the United States Government. In that connection questions arose as to what would be done with these ships in time of peace, and the obvious suggestion was that in times of peace these ships should be used for commercial purposes, so that they would be, in a measure, self-compensatory in their use.

All these bills recognize, therefore, the necessity of securing ships, either by purchase or by construction or by both, for the purposes of the auxiliary navy; and the commercial use of such ships now becomes accentuated by reason of the fact that the carrying trade of the world has been demoralized by the war between the carrying nations. We are in the unfortunate position, as the Secretary of Commerce has said, of having a large business and intrusting our delivery wagons to the ownership and control of our competitors. So we have this dual necessity, the necessity of creating a well-proportioned Navy, composed of transports, colliers, scouts, dispatch boats, as well as fighting ships, and the necessity of providing commercial ships, because the delivery wagons heretofore furnished by our competitors are no longer in full operation.

I ask, Mr. President, whether this is not an occasion for patriotic action? Are we to be divided by the contentions which have arisen over this debate in such a way as to prevent us from reconciling our differences and meeting requirements, which we all admit, by some form of legislation?

During the last nine years I have been persistent in urging a naval-auxiliary bill intended to meet the requirements of our Navy, and with the consent of the Senate I will insert in my remarks, in the form of a reprint, certain quotations from proposals made by me upon this subject and certain quotations from the debates. I wish to say that the first proposal which I made was in 1906, in the shape of an instruction to the Committee on Commerce when the ship-subsidy bill, proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] was under consideration—a resolution calling upon the Committee on Commerce for the following information:

That S. 529 be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce, with instructions to report in connection therewith an estimate of the cost of the vessels required for service in the ocean mail lines provided for in section 6, and as to whether it is practicable for the United States Government to construct such ships as a part of the Navy, supplementary to the warships, to be used as colliers, transports, scouts, etc., in the emergency of war; and as to whether it is practicable to lease such ships to private corporations in times of peace for the service of the mail lines contemplated in section 6; and as to whether it is practicable to organize a naval reserve to be enlisted in the United States in the service of such ships whose wages shall be paid three-fourths by the private corporations leasing such ships and one-fourth by the United States Government, such naval reserves to be composed of citizens of the United States or those who have declared their intention to become such and to be subject to the training of naval officers in order to fit them to respond to the call of the Government in case of war, and the rentals received from such ships to form a fund for the gradual enlargement of the number of supplementary ships required by the Navy in case of war, as colliers, transports, scouts, etc., and generally to report the comparative cost of such method of enlarging our merchant marine as compared with the method of subvention provided by section 6.

I have presented the substance of that resolution in various forms of amendment to pending bills since that time whenever this subject matter has come up. In 1908 I presented an amendment to the ship-subsidy bill then pending, and with reference to my remarks upon that occasion the Senator from Maine, Mr. Hale, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, made comment as follows:

I do not want to interfere with the line of the Senator's argument, but I am very largely in sympathy with him, for he has struck what is the weak point in our entire Naval Establishment, so far as ships are concerned. We are deplorably lacking in the essentials that make a great fleet not only formidable but seaworthy.

The Senator said the other day—and the metaphor was not too strong—that without certain auxiliary ships the great battleships of the United States fleet upon any waters outside of our own waters, in case of any emergency, with war threatened, would be derelicts, and it is too true.

Mr. Hale, proceeding to comment upon the voyage of our great white fleet around the world during Mr. Roosevelt's administration, stated that over three-fourths of the colliers required for that fleet were supplied by foreign countries, and that if a war had arisen the neutral powers could not have permitted the use of those colliers. In his comments he used these striking words:

Mr. President, if when that fleet was ordered on this tour about the globe there had been the least menace of war from any power, no Government owning one of these foreign colliers would have allowed a single ship to be employed by us, and our fleet, magnificent as it is, with any menace of war upon the sky, without these foreign colliers would be as useless and—

"As idle as a painted ship
Upon a painted ocean."

Senator Hale at that time declared to the Senate that in the approaching naval bill he would provide an appropriation for such auxiliary vessels. When the bill came in provision was made for five colliers. Upon my taking exception to so inadequate a performance of the assurance which he had given to Congress, he replied that his disposition was to go further, and the necessity existed for the action, but that he was compelled to meet the condition of the Treasury by economy at that time. He promised, however, to continue the policy of constructing these auxiliary ships.

I regret to say that that policy has not been kept up, that the assurance has been only inadequately complied with and that to-day the American Navy would be in the same condition in case of war that Mr. Hale described in 1908—our ships would be derelicts and would be as idle as painted ships upon a painted ocean.

Mr. President, we are expending nearly $150,000,000 annually upon a naval establishment—a naval establishment composed of fighting ships, but ships which would be useless in war unless we provide these auxiliary ships, which are as necessary as the fighting ships. Our Navy is like a man entering into a fight without a leg or an arm; and yet we have been content whilst making these enormous expenditures, the burdens of which are complained of by many of our people, to allow this badly proportioned condition to exist—of a navy composed of splendid fighting ships, but without the ability to sustain itself on the sea.

I presume, Mr. President, that had not this exigency arisen I would have been moving for the next 10 years, if continued life were assured to me, for the establishment of this auxiliary navy. This exigency gives us a striking picture of possible conditions, and has aroused the country, has aroused the administration, and has aroused the responsibility of the party in power. So we are urging a measure that will give us a well-proportioned Navy and at the same time meet the great exigencies which the extraordinary situation of war has created.

Is there any real difference between Senators as to the necessity of the Government purchasing or constructing ships, or both? Is there any real difference upon that question upon this floor? If so, ought not the mere question of form to be disregarded? What difference does it make whether those ships are constructed directly by the Government or by a corporation which the Government controls? And why should there be any serious difference of opinion as to whether these ships should be leased or operated by the Government? Why should we not give both powers; let the Government operate them if it is necessary and expedient, leaving that to the administrative branch of the Government, or let the Government lease them, if it is necessary and expedient, leaving that to the discretion of the executive branch of the Government?

We can certainly guard against any imposition by a lessee by provisions in a lease either fixing the maximum rates or subjecting the rates to the determination of the Interstate Commerce Commission, thus securing fairness between the carrier and the shipper. Is there any necessity for endless debate upon this subject? Why, the very fact that all these substitutes for the original bill provide either for purchase or construction, and provide either for operation or lease, indicates that the judgment of this body is made up as to the necessity of ownership of the auxiliaries to the fighting ships and the necessity of operation commercially in some form when these auxiliaries are not required for naval purposes.

What difference does it make whether these ships are purchased as a part of the merchant marine or as a part of the Navy, provided the owner is the same? If they are purchased as a part of the merchant marine they will be owned by the Government. If they are purchased as a part of the Navy, they will be owned by the Government, and it is intended that there shall be a shifting use as between commerce and war—in time of war to have them used by the Government, in time of peace to have them used for the peaceful pursuits of commerce.

Why, Mr. President, Congress has already acted in a similar matter on these lines. As I stated, we own ships that are used in commerce to-day through our control of the Panama Railroad Co. Various proposals have been made to increase our operations in that direction.

When the question of Alaska and its development through the construction of a railway was up, an amendment was offered providing for the purchase by the Government and turning over to the Panama Railroad Co. or some corporation created by the Government all ships necessary in transportation between the east and west coast. Why was that favored? Because many feared that the canal would not have a fair show, that the railroads were so organized as to prevent water competition, that they controlled water transportation so as to make competition between the water routes and the railroads difficult and perhaps impossible. Many distinguished Senators upon this floor supported that proposal. Out of 11 votes for that proposal, 2 were upon this side of the Chamber and 9 from the other side. I would like to insert this vote in my remarks.

So nine Members upon the Republican side voted for the ownership of ships by the Panama Railroad Co., a corporation controlled by the Government, and that is substantially our proposal now.

I wish to say frankly that I have always preferred the direct ownership of these ships by the National Government, their acquisition as a part of the auxiliary navy; but that is a mere matter of form, and as a majority of my associates have adopted a different view I yield to their view in that particular. It is not a matter which involves conviction.

So also in August last, when the Senator from New York, chairman of the Committee on the Panama Canal, had up his bill amending the canal act as to American registry, and I sought to amend it by providing for an auxiliary navy to be employed in time of peace for commercial uses, a change of five votes would have carried my amendment, and more than five of those who voted against it afterwards declared that they would favor it as a separate measure. Many of those who voted for that amendment are opposed to this committee substitute, but surely they are in accord with its general purpose, and further discussion ought to bring us in accord upon the details.

Mr. President, am I to understand that I can print these extracts?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, it was not my intention to make a speech. My purpose in rising was simply to obtain permission to publish the record regarding this demand for an auxiliary navy.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I be permitted to ask a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator and I have had some passages heretofore in reference to merchant-marine legislation, and I have followed the Senator's course with a good deal of interest. The Senator has advocated a great many times precisely what he has called to our attention to-day. The Senator believes now, I think, as he did then, in an auxiliary navy, the building of ships as an addition to the Navy. I will ask the Senator this question: Suppose that we should go into that, under this bill, if it should pass, which it will not probably, does the Senator think it necessary for us to have a shipping board to supervise the building and operation of those ships? With our experts in the Navy Department, and with our experts in our private shipyards, why the necessity for having a shipping board, as provided in this bill? That has not yet been discussed. I have thought I would in the future call attention to it, and I now ask the Senator, who has given much thought to this matter, if he does not think it is unnecessary, and might it not lead to more or less trouble and unnecessary expense to have a board of that kind?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that that provision did not enter into the plan which I proposed originally and which I have been urging for many years. My own idea involved a simpler form and a better one, according to my judgment; but I have not been here during the consideration of this question by the committee and the Senate. The committee came to a different conclusion regarding it, and I have acquiesced in it, because I do not think it is essential. I think a simpler and better form would have been to have built these ships as a part of the Naval Establishment.

So far as my original suggestion is concerned, it provided for a commission consisting of the Secretary of the Navy as chairman, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Postmaster General, my view being that all three of those departments would be interested in the construction of these ships. The Secretary of the Navy would be interested in their construction as a part of the Navy, the Secretary of Commerce would be interested because of their possible commercial use, and the Postmaster General would be interested because of their possible use in opening up new ocean mail routes. Therefore I thought that would be a better method of organization. Then, I thought this commission would be a part of the President's Cabinet, directly responsible to him, and, of course, the Constitution puts upon the President the executive powers of the Government, and I did not feel like taking the exercise of these powers out of the hands of the President. Those were the views I had with reference to that matter, and the views which I still have, but I do not regard the maintenance of those views as essential to the proper carrying out of this policy. I could vote with satisfaction for any of these substitutes, as a step forward in the ultimate solution of this important question, and I see no reason why we should permit ourselves to be diverted from speedy action when in the essentials we are all practically of the same mind.

Mr. President, I shall not dwell longer on this subject. I simply close by saying that I have taken no part in the contention over this matter. I have no particular feeling regarding this legislation except that of interest in a policy which I have for years thought ought to be commenced and maintained. I regret exceedingly that the course of legislation has taken such a turn as apparently to arouse feeling and resentment and prevent the calm and thoughtful consideration which this subject ought to receive at this time from patriotic men.

The matter referred to by Mr. NEWLANDS follows.

APPENDIX.

SHIP SUBSIDY, NAVAL RESERVE, AND AUXILIARY SHIPS.

March 20, 1908.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, having under consideration the bill (S. 28) to amend the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce"—

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment which I propose be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall hereafter constitute a commission to be known as the 'Foreign Commerce Commission,' and that they are hereby authorized to provide for the construction, either in the private shipyards of the country or in the shipyards of the Navy, or both, of 27 vessels, not exceeding 6,500 tons capacity each and costing in the aggregate not exceeding $27,000,000; that such vessels shall be so constructed as to be useful to the Navy as auxiliary vessels, such as transports, colliers, dispatch boats, cruisers, and scouts, and also useful in times of peace in opening up new routes of commerce between United States ports and the ports of South America, New Zealand, Australia, and the Philippines; that such commission make to Congress such recommendations as to it seems advisable regarding the manning of such vessels in whole or in part by the Naval Reserve and the leasing of them so manned in times of peace to shipping companies for the purpose of promoting foreign trade and commerce, and for the incorporation of such shipping companies under national law, and for reports on their operations."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the main purpose of this amendment is to create an auxiliary navy and incidentally to aid in the promotion of foreign commerce. We all know that we lack the ships that are necessary for an auxiliary navy, the useful ships, the indispensable ships, the scouts, the transports, the colliers, the dispatch boats, that are as essential to the Navy as the fighting ships themselves. As it is, we have a splendid Navy of fighting ships, splendidly equipped and splendidly officered and manned, but we lack the essential auxiliary ships that will be required in time of war.

NEED OF AUXILIARY SHIPS.

Recently the War Board was consulted regarding the needs of our Navy in case of a war involving the defense of our insular possessions, and the report of the board was that we would require about 232 ships, of an average tonnage of about 6,500 tons, for use as scouts, transports, colliers, dispatch boats, and so forth.

We all know that we have no such merchant marine as will supply such ships, and we are in this position, that we have the fighting ships that are necessary without the ships that are essential to maintain them in case of war. In case of war these fighting ships would, without an auxiliary navy, be absolutely derelict in the ocean, unable to move. Our Navy may be compared to a man with strong lungs and a strong heart, perfect organs, without legs or arms; or it might be compared to an army without a quartermaster's department or a commissary department.

We need, above all things, a proportionate Navy, one that is perfect in every essential particular, not simply the ships that are necessary for fighting, but the ships that are necessary to sustain the ships that do the fighting, to carry the coal and supplies, to carry the men, to act as scouts, to act as dispatch boats; and without these ships the Navy would be as helpless in case of war as we would be without the battleships or the fighting ships of the Navy.

DIRECT SUBSIDY OR A BETTER METHOD?

Now, the purpose of the amendment is to take a step in the direction of supplying this auxiliary navy. There are two ways of supplying it. One is by general subsidy. The other is by ourselves building, or, at all events, making an experiment in building, this auxiliary navy, either in whole or in part, and the purpose of this amendment is simply to enable this to be done in part. It is estimated by the Senator from New Hampshire that 27 ships, costing on an average about a million dollars each, will be required for this subsidized service. The cost of this service, according to the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire, will be about $3,600,000 per annum—that is, the cost of the subsidy which the United States is to pay annually for a period of 10 years, making $36,000,000 in all, and at the end of 10 years we shall have nothing. The ships will, of course, belong to the companies which have constructed them. Whereas if we expend $27,000,000 in the construction of these ships necessary for this service we will at the end of 10 years own the ships, and we will have expended less money than would be required for the subsidy.

This case does not, then, present the question of Government ownership as such, the question of the construction of ships by the Government for the purpose of engaging in foreign commerce; but it involves the construction of ships that are absolutely essential to our Navy, just as essential as the fighting ships that now exist, and of making them useful in times of peace by letting them out to shipping companies engaged in foreign commerce, and thus making them the advance agents of the foreign commerce which we seek to promote with foreign ports not now connected with this country by direct lines of transportation.

DECLINE OF MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has commented upon the deficiency of our merchant marine; upon its sad decline. We all know, of course, that it has declined, and we all know the reason. We have been intent upon building up domestic production. We have put around the country a high-tariff wall, with a view to keeping out the products of other countries, and with a view to stimulating production upon our own soil and giving our own people the monopoly of that production; and, incidentally, it was hoped that under that process we would be able to reach such perfection in production as compared with the rest of the world that our exports of manufactured products would largely increase. Necessarily, therefore, the shipping in connection with this country, under our policy, must have full outward cargoes of agricultural products and such manufactured articles as we are able to sell in the markets, and must have little on the return voyage, for the whole policy of the country has been to promote exports and to discourage imports.

It follows, therefore, that any shipping company organized under the laws of this country, and with a view to the promotion of its foreign commerce, must meet this condition; that it must get freights upon the voyage out that will pay the expenses of its comparatively empty bottoms upon the return. It does not present the case of a full ship going and returning. The dominant party has sought and is now seeking to remedy this difficulty by general taxation, by subsidizing these shipping lines, so as to enable them not only to overcome the competition of other countries, so far as the cost of the ship is concerned and so far as concerns the cost of operation, but to overcome the subsidies which are being paid by foreign countries. We have not only to meet their subsidies, but we also have to pay an additional amount to cover the difference between the cost of the construction of the ships and the cost of the operation of the ships, the cost of construction being 35 per cent higher and the cost of operation 25 per cent higher than that of foreign ships.

Now, this is a very hard task. It will be difficult for us to promote our merchant marine in competition with foreign ships for the transportation of freight so long as we adhere to this high protective system that is intended to discourage imports, for such a system of taxation means full vessels only one way.

FAILURE OF SUBSIDIES.

We have tried subsidies. We now have a mail-service subsidy, and the Senator admits its failure, so far as the Pacific Ocean is concerned, and he seeks to increase the subsidy by doubling it in order to meet these conditions, and he says that the service contemplated by this proposed act will cost about $3,600,000 per annum, or $36,000,000 for the 10 years. He cites us to the fact that since the failure of the last bill which he presented—the ship-subsidy bill of two years ago, I believe—one American shipping company, the Oceanic, engaged in the carrying trade to Australia, has gone out of existence, and it is only fair to assume that under these conditions there will be a further decline in our merchant marine on the Pacific Ocean.

We know that for a long time the Oceanic Steamship Co. was engaged in trade with Australia under a subsidy which gave her $2, I believe, per mile for the voyage out, as a mail subsidy. At the time the last shipping bill was under consideration the report of that company showed that in that service they used three ships of about 6,500 tons capacity, and the operating expense for these three ships was a little less than $1,500,000 per annum, or about $485,000 for each ship. The loss in operation alone, notwithstanding the subsidy, was about $66,000 per annum, or $20,000 per annum for each ship, and estimating the loss of interest on the investment, the depreciation, the insurance, the taxes, and so forth, the average annual loss was $373,000 for the three ships, or $125,000 for each ship.

I assume that that company was as economically administered as any company can be under existing conditions, so we have to assume that the loss of every ship engaged on the Pacific Ocean will be $125,000 per annum, and that we must overcome by a subsidy. So I am inclined to believe that the subsidy granted by this measure will not be sufficient to encourage our merchant marine on the Pacific.

COST OF GOVERNMENT TRANSPORT SERVICE.

I have been curious to know, by way of contrast, what has been the experience of our own Government in the Pacific Ocean service. It is well known that we have a service of transports running from San Francisco to the Philippine Islands, and in that service there are four ships, the Logan, the Sheridan, the Sherman, and the Thomas, each of about 5,500 tons capacity, approximating thus the three ships used in the Australian service. I find that the initial cost and the cost of converting these ships into transports was approximately $1,000,000 each, just about the amount paid by the Australian service for the three ships which they use. I find that the average expense per annum of operation and repair for each ship to the Army has been about $267,000, as against $486,000 for each of the ships of the Oceanic Steamship Co. engaged in the Australian service.

I have received these figures only within a few moments, and it is difficult for me to say what the cause of this enormous difference is, unless it be that the transports engaged by the Army are slower in speed, and hence less coal consumption is required. But you will observe that according to these figures the annual cost of operating a ship in the Army transport service on the Pacific Ocean is just a little over one-half of the cost of operating each one of the ships engaged in the Australian service and in the ownership of a private company.

I cite this for the purpose of showing that the Government can do this work efficiently and economically. The Government is now engaged in the shipping business. The Government now has 10 transports or more, the history of 4 of which I have given, and the Quartermaster's Department has in repeated reports to Congress insisted upon it that it would be unwise in the extreme for the Government to abandon the use of these transports.

* * * * * * *

Mr. President, the Senator will bear in mind that my amendment does not propose that the Government shall run these ships as commercial ships. My proposal is that they shall be constructed as a part of the auxiliary Navy, and constructed in such a way as to be useful on the new lines of transportation which we are projecting, and that in time of peace they should be let out to private companies upon such terms as can be secured, manning them so far as we can with the Naval Reserve, so as to make each ship a training school for our Navy, and manning them wherever practicable with the surplus officers of our Navy itself, officers who are being educated and turned out every year from the Naval Academy.

In that way, it seems to me, we will simply have a floating training ship for men absolutely essential for our fighting ships. We know that one of the difficulties now with the Navy is that it is difficult to secure the men who are necessary for the fighting ships. One of the great pleas made for the organization of a merchant marine and for the subsidizing of a merchant marine is that it is absolutely essential that we should train American citizens for the sea who can come to the rescue of their country in time of war and man the fighting ships of the Navy.

* * * * * * *

A DEFINITE PROGRAM PROPOSED.

Now, Mr. President, I can hardly hope that this amendment will be adopted as a substitute, but * * * I suggest that he might add this as a section to the pending bill. We need more than 27 auxiliary ships for our Navy. The war board say we need 232. The Senator's bill proposes to provide for about 27 ships in private ownership that are to be subsidized. I will ask the Senator whether he would be willing to have this offered as an additional section, so that we will have these two systems on trial, side by side, one the subsidizing of ships in private ownership upon the ground that they are needed in the promotion of the mail and commercial service and in time of war as auxiliary vessels of our Navy, and the other the Government ownership of these ships as a part of the Navy, and their incidental operation by private companies in time of peace and in the conduct of these scouting expeditions for commerce, in the hope that they will establish a business which will hereafter be taken up by American steamship companies without subsidy. I ask the Senator whether he would favor adding to the bill this section providing for the construction of 27 ships, or for any lesser number—three or more?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will be entirely frank with the Senator from Nevada. I agree with him that we ought to have more auxiliaries than are provided for in the bill. We ought to have had colliers enough to have accompanied our fleet in its marvelous voyage that is being made. We have them not. But I have an impression that upon consideration the Senator from Nevada will agree with me that this is not quite the place to legislate along those lines. If the Senator will assist those of us who are in favor of the bill now before the Senate to pass it and make what I think is a very desirable start in the direction of rehabilitating the American merchant marine, the Senator can then either move an amendment to the naval appropriation bill or present a separate bill, which will have consideration on its merits. I hope the Senator will not try to embarrass this bill with the amendment that he suggests.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have no disposition to embarrass this bill or to delay the Senator in securing a final vote upon it, but I regard the suggestion that I have made as of value, both in protecting our Navy and in promoting our commerce, and as the present is the only opportunity I have of pressing this view, in an amendment that is undoubtedly germane, I am inclined to press it by argument at least.

A FOREIGN COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Now, let me make another suggestion to the Senator from New Hampshire, if he is willing to acquiesce in that, and that is that the portion of this amendment which provides for the creation of a commission, to be known as the "foreign commerce commission," should go in as an amendment to the bill. The amendment provides that the Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall hereafter constitute a commission, to be known as the "foreign commerce commission."

Then, leaving out the provision for construction, it would provide that such commission shall make to Congress such recommendation as to it seems advisable regarding the manning of such vessels subsidized under this act, in whole or in part, by the Naval Reserves and for the incorporation of such shipping companies under national law, and for reports as to their operations.

Now, Mr. President, we would have three Secretaries dealing with this question.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to interfere with the line of the Senator's argument, but I am very largely in sympathy with him, for he has struck what is the weak point in our entire Naval Establishment, so far as ships are concerned. We are deplorably lacking in the essentials that make a great fleet not only formidable but seaworthy.

The Senator said the other day—and the metaphor was not too strong—that without certain auxiliary ships the great battleships of the United States fleet upon any waters outside of our own waters, in case of any emergency, with war threatened, would be derelicts, and it is too true.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HALE. I——

Mr. BURKETT. I wish to ask a question right on that point, if the Senator will permit me. At the end of the Spanish War I remember the Secretary of the Navy reported that we had, I think, 36—possibly 44—of these auxiliary cruisers and transports, and the War Department had the other number, whichever it was, 36 or 44. I remember that the number was reported to Congress. What became of these transports and auxiliaries?

Mr. HALE. The auxiliary force, Mr. President, that was improvised—I use that word, because it was not much more permanent than an improvised force—consisted, with but few exceptions, of transitory ships, yachts, small cruisers that were to be used for the emergency along the coasts and in the Caribbean Sea; but when the war ended they were found to be of little use. They made up an aggregate, and I have looked over the list time and again. Most of them were of no account and have gone out of use and are good for nothing to-day and would be good for nothing in any case of emergency.

Mr. President, it is a melancholy spectacle that this great fleet of ours in this regard presents to-day. It is the greatest fleet of great and formidable ships that the whole world has ever seen. It is completely manned. It is in every respect except one the most magnificent and formidable fleet of ships that any nation has ever put upon the waters of the globe.

Admiral Converse, who knows it root and branch, has so told us, and he is right. But this great fleet, which has been sent upon its voyage around the globe, is to-day absolutely dependent upon its motion, upon its existence as a moving fleet, on the indulgence of foreign powers.

I have here, Mr. President, a list of the colliers, without which a ship and a fleet can do nothing, that are to-day in attendance upon this fleet. There are only nine of our own. There are chartered from foreign owners attending this fleet of ours, enabling it to move, making it a movable fleet, 28 foreign colliers. I have a list of them here—I will put it in the RECORD—ranging from 4,000 to 6,000 and odd tons each.

The list referred to is as follows:

Coal for the fleet going to the Pacific.

Government-owned colliers:	Tons.
Ajax to Rio with	4,800
Brutus to Rio with	3,800
Nero to Rio with	3,500
Abarenda to Rio with	3,500
Hannibal to Trinidad with	2,000
Leonidas to Trinidad with	2,000
Marcellus to Trinidad with	2,000
Sterling to Para with	2,000
Cæsar to Rio with	2,800

Chartered foreign colliers:	Tons.
Fortuna to Trinidad	4,224
Athalic to Trinidad	2,787
Kassala to Rio	5,150
Ellaline to Punta Arenas	5,449
Janana to Punta Arenas	5,627
Ripley to Punta Arenas	5,073
Towergate to Punta Arenas	5,166
Hector to Callao	5,600
Hermiston to Callao	5,392
Earl of Douglas to Callao	5,361
St. Andrews to Callao	4,351
Falls of Orchy to Callao	5,714
Allenton to Magdalena Bay	6,321
Otterburn to Magdalena Bay	6,000
Strathtay to Magdalena Bay	5,308
Needles to Magdalena Bay	6,001
Baron Androssen to Magdalena Bay	6,002
Strathgyle to Magdalena Bay	5,367
Agapanthus to Magdalena Bay	4,832
Cape Finistere to San Francisco or Mare Island	6,510
Livingstonian to San Francisco or Mare Island	5,404
Guernsey to San Francisco or Mare Island	6,156
Earl of Carrick to San Francisco or Mare Island	4,940
Carlton to San Francisco or Mare Island	6,530
Inverkip to San Francisco or Mare Island	5,955
Braemont to San Francisco or Mare Island	4,808
Amherton to San Francisco or Mare Island	5,373
Madura to San Francisco or Mare Island	5,500

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if when that fleet was ordered on this tour about the globe there had been the least menace of war from any power, no Government owning one of these foreign colliers would have allowed a single ship to be employed by us, and our fleet, magnificent as it is, with any menace of war upon the sky, without these foreign colliers would be as useless and—

"As idle as a painted ship
Upon a painted ocean."

We do not realize this, Mr. President. I go further. If any complication should arise in the voyage of the ships, any danger, any menace of war in a foreign power, I do not know but that every foreign power represented in the ships which we have hired would feel compelled to withdraw them from the association of the fleet, and we would be hung up.

It is not, Mr. President, an agreeable thing to contemplate. We go on year after year building up and accumulating these immense ships at an enormous expenditure, and find ourselves, as we would in any emergency for which the ships are built, without a thing being done that makes the ships formidable as a fleet at sea. The Senator is right in his theories. There ought not to be another ship added to the American Navy until we add something that every other power has done to make the ships formidable in case of an emergency.

My colleague is right; the Senator from New Hampshire is right; we can not do it here. I do not think the Senator from Nevada wants to embarrass this bill; but when we come to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill I hope the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Maine, my colleague, and every thoughtful, patriotic Senator will join with me to try and see that something is done in this entirely neglected field that we have rashly and in the most foolhardy way neglected and abandoned in the past. Otherwise, Mr. President, if there is any call for the big ships, and they are to protect us in case of possible war, they are absolutely worthless unless we have something with which to build up an auxiliary fleet and to supply the ships that will enable them to move in the waters of the globe. Without these foreign ships, these colliers, Mr. President, we not only could not have gotten around Cape Horn, but we could not have gotten beyond the Caribbean Sea. Nobody has seemed to realize that. But when we come to the naval appropriation bill this matter will be laid before the Senate, and we will be made to consider what are the actual needs of the American Navy.

* * * * * * *

The trouble is, setting aside the question of price, that we have been deficient in just what the Senator from Nevada says, in not doing what other powers have done with auxiliary ships and colliers to make their fleet formidable.

I went over, Mr. President, on the great Lusitania on her first trip eastward, and I found then that the British naval administration had shortened their policy, as they have in regard to having more big ships, and have put into that auxiliary cruiser a million and a half pounds sterling to make her a formidable auxiliary cruiser, built so that she could be used in case of emergency as a transport or auxiliary cruiser, and fitted out with small armament so as to make their battleships more formidable. I took a lesson from that. I realized then, as I never had before, how lamentably deficient we have been by reason of the fact that we have been going on and piling up big ships and doing nothing to make them of any use in time of war.

PROMOTION OF FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am very glad to know that the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Naval Committee, is impressed with the fact that our Navy is not a well-proportioned Navy; that, while it has splendid fighting ships, it lacks the auxiliary ships that are absolutely essential to the operations of the fighting ships.

The Senator appeals to me not to embarrass this bill and not to delay it. I have no disposition to either embarrass or delay it. There will certainly be a vote to-day upon this bill, and I should like to press certain amendments which I think will serve the Senator's purpose as well as that which I have in view.

As I stated a few moments ago, I do not expect the Senator from New Hampshire to agree that this amendment shall be accepted as a substitute, nor do I expect him to agree that it shall be accepted as an addition to the bill; but it does seem to me that this amendment provides for certain machinery in the creation of a foreign commerce that will be of great service to the country in securing essential data upon this question, in forming the plans, and in making the estimates of the operations that are necessary to coordinate the different branches of the Government interested in our merchant marine in such a way as to make our appropriations here effective for every possible purpose which we can have in view.

We have three purposes in view. One is to increase our auxiliary ships as a part of the Navy; the other is the promotion of foreign commerce; the other the promotion of our mail service. We have three departments that are connected with those questions—one the Navy Department, one the Department of Commerce and Labor, and the third the Post Office Department. The naval service, the Postal Service, the commercial service of the country are all interested in the development of a merchant marine, and it seems to me to be of the highest wisdom to bring the chiefs of those departments into a commission and charge them with the duty of making recommendations to Congress that will serve the Nation's purpose in the advancement of our foreign mail service, in the advancement of our foreign commerce, and in the increase of our auxiliary navy.

NATIONAL INCORPORATION OF CARRIERS ENGAGED IN FOREIGN COMMERCE.

There is another thing I have in view, and that is this: We have been in the habit heretofore of making appropriations in the shape of subsidy without having any control, or very little control, over the corporations that are subsidized. I have for a long time been pressing before the Congress of the United States the national incorporation of the great trunk lines through which railways existing in the various States can be consolidated and made to serve great national purposes as well as to continue to serve the State purposes for which they were organized. Objection is made upon the other side of the House, often because they think it involves possibly too much control over the railroads, whilst on this side objection is made to it because they regard it as an invasion of State rights. I do not wish to press that question or to argue it now, but I wish to suggest to my friends upon this side that foreign commerce is exclusively within the control of the Nation, and that no question of State rights or State control can present itself that the Postal Service is exclusively within the control of the Nation, that the naval service is exclusively within the control of the Nation, and that if this Nation is a sovereignty it has the right to create the artificial beings that are to promote these various services. I think it of the highest unwisdom to subsidize any corporation for national service unless it is incorporated under national laws.

We have no national law of incorporation for shipping companies. As it is, any organization of men seeking to enter into a service exclusively within the control of the Nation is compelled to go to an individual State for the purpose of obtaining a charter that will enable it to act as an artificial being. We ought to have a national incorporation law for shipping companies engaged in foreign commerce, and my amendment provides that this commission shall consider the formation and the framing and the recommendation to Congress of a national incorporation law. If we are to subsidize these corporations, we should have them under constant supervision and, in a measure, under the control of the Nation. Such national corporations could be compelled to make their reports to this foreign-commerce commission, just as the railroads engaged in interstate commerce, even though they be State corporations, are compelled to make reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Furthermore, when we have a foreign-commerce commission organized, they can scrutinize the operation of these corporations, whether subsidized or not, and, if subsidized, they can present to Congress the facts that are essential that Congress should know in order to legislate wisely upon this subject. As it is, none of us really know whether the complaints of shipping companies subsidized by the Nation are well founded or not, because we have not had the machinery essential to give us the facts upon which to base a judgment. This very Oceanic Steamship Co., which, with a splendidly equipped marine service, entered upon the experimental work of opening up a line of traffic to Australia, has made statements year after year to Congress, claiming that, notwithstanding the subsidy received, it was subjecting itself to a loss in the operation of that line, and I believe that the majority of Congress disbelieved the statement; and yet their statement was vindicated, for only a year ago they went out of the business, and these three splendid steamships are now, I am told, laid up in the harbor of San Francisco.

It seems to me that it will be a very easy matter right in this bill to take these three coordinate branches of the Government, each separately considering questions intimately related to the ocean service, that we should set their intellects and their energies to work with a view of elaborating a system that will be as perfect a means of information to the Government upon all these questions as the Interstate Commerce Commission is to-day, and that we should provide a method of incorporation by the Nation that will compel reports and give us exact statements of the operations of these companies, so that we can know whether or not these subsidies are essential to their existence, whether they should be increased upon their request, or whether they should be diminished when sufficient profits appear.

SUBSIDY SYSTEM A VICIOUS ONE.

So far as I am concerned, I am opposed to a system of subsidy, for whilst I realize that some form of Government aid is absolutely essential to the creation of a merchant marine, I think that the system of subsidy will create evils greater than those which now exist, and that they will bring into our halls and corridors an importunate class of men demanding, day after day, increasing legislation in their interest, and that they will be active politically throughout the entire country, advancing the election of those who favor their projects and opposing the election of those who are opposed to them, and that we will stand in danger of increasing the favored classes of this country, whose operations are gradually changing our Government from a pure democracy into an arrogant plutocracy.

I wish to see the merchant marine advanced, and I wish to see the Navy advanced, and I wish to see a proportionate Navy, and I wish to see a proportionate merchant marine; and inasmuch as these lines that are now projected are mainly experimental, as these ships which it is proposed to subsidize by this bill are to be made the advance agents of commerce with foreign ports—the drummers of commerce—and inasmuch as we need in order to make a proportionate Navy a large number of ships and transports and colliers now lacking, ships that we can not secure in case of war from our coastwise service and ships which it may be impossible to secure from neutral powers in case of war; and inasmuch as these ships will serve all purposes—will serve the purposes of the Navy, will serve the purposes of the merchant marine, will serve the purposes of the Postal Service—and inasmuch as they can be used in time of peace for postal and commercial purposes, I do not see why we should not construct some of them and enter upon the experiment.

We need more ships than this bill provides for. It provides for only 27. The war board has declared that 232 are now needed; that if we were forced to defend our insular possessions against any great power we would be compelled to have, in order to make an efficient defense of those island possesions, in order to transport troops and munitions of war and to supply scouts and cruisers and dispatch boats, 232 ships, costing on an average a million dollars each. We have not them within reach, so far as the merchant marine is concerned. In order to bring into being 232 ships of that kind in our merchant marine, we would have, according to the experience of the Oceanic Steamship Co., to subsidize each one to the extent of from $150,000 to $200,000 annually, involving an annual expenditure of from $40,000,000 to $60,000,000. That is out of the question. Whatever subsidy we have here will be absolutely inadequate to supplying the country with the auxiliary navy that is required.

We are expending to-day $100,000,000 annually upon the Navy, and we are creating a disproportionate Navy, a Navy like a man with one muscle enormously developed and all his other muscles withered and shrunk.

What is a wise thing for us to do? To take from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 of that $100,000,000 annually and apply it to making a proportionate Navy and stop the construction of these great fighting ships, either in whole or in part, until the Navy becomes a thoroughly proportioned Navy.

TRAINING SHIPS FOR NAVAL RESERVES.

More than this, when we subsidize these ships we do not place them under sufficient control so far as the Naval Reserve is concerned. The Naval Reserve is just as essential to the Navy as the men who are actively employed on the fighting ships themselves. It is necessary for us to have a large force of men from whom we can recruit in case of war, and so we have organized a Naval Reserve—not a sufficient Naval Reserve, but a reserve totally inadequate as compared with that of England and other powers—and how are we to train this Naval Reserve? We have no ships upon which to train them; and when you provide for this subsidy, do you provide for the training of a Naval Reserve? No; the only provision you have in this bill is that each ship will carry six naval cadets. It seems to me that if we own these ships that we can man them, that we can make them a training school for our Navy; that we can provide them with officers who are unable to get commands in the fighting ships now, and who are drifting into civil life; that we can man them with men who will become trained men in case of war, so that they can be transferred from the auxiliary ships to the fighting ships in an emergency, and that we will have a thorough and perfected system for that purpose. Such a Naval Reserve will simply, during times of peace, discharge the duties that are discharged by men employed in the merchant marine. There should be at least one naval officer upon every such ship engaged in the commercial service, constantly training the men and keeping them in condition of discipline that will fit them for the fighting ships when actual warfare comes.

So it seems to me, if the Senator will permit me to say, it would be a wise thing now, at this session—and I should say upon this bill—to provide at least for coordinating these three departments into a foreign commerce commission that will give us their united judgment regarding the action that the Congress of the United States should take upon the important question of promoting all these three services—the foreign commercial service, the foreign postal service, and the naval service—and that we provide above all things for the national incorporation of services that are purely engaged in national work and not permit these shipping companies to go to the State of least public virtue for charters to enable them to operate upon the high seas.

If you are to subsidize these ships, make them the instrumentalities of the Nation by incorporating them under national law. If you are to subsidize them, demand annual reports, institute constant investigation of their operations, so that we may know whether these subsidies are necessary or whether they are pure gratuities, and abandon altogether the loose legislation of the past, which has resulted simply in the United States granting aid without proper restriction and control. I will submit to the Senator from New Hampshire later on what I regard as a moderate amendment, making no appropriation, but organizing this commission and giving it the power to consider the question of a national incorporation act for the shipping companies engaged in this commerce, and to report their recommendations to Congress.

April 27, 1908.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, having resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 28) to amend the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce"—

NEED OF AN AUXILIARY NAVY.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, when the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] in 1905 was pressing with great vigor the ship-subsidy bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Commerce and which had been approved by the Merchant Marine Commission that had been in session for some time, my attention was for the first time called to the fact that our Navy was a disproportioned navy; that whilst it had a great force of fighting ships which could maintain themselves successfully as fighting ships, they lacked the supporting ships so necessary in case of war—the colliers, the scouts, the transports, the dispatch boats, the tugs, and other vessels constituting an auxiliary navy and just as essential to the success of a fighting force as the fighting ships themselves.

That view was set forth in a report prepared by the General Board of War of the Navy, over which Admiral Dewey presided, a report which was prepared for the Merchant Marine Commission at the suggestion of its chairman and presented by him with a view to supporting a ship-subsidy bill then before the Senate. The question was asked the War Board as to what vessels would be necessary as an auxiliary navy in case of war, and their reply is contained in a document, which I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD—that about 200 ships, costing on the average, I believe, about $1,000,000 each, would be necessary in order to support the fighting ships of the Navy in case of war, particularly if that war were such a war as endangered the retention of our insular possessions.

I then sought to have an amendment in the nature of a substitute acted upon by the Senate providing for the immediate construction of about 32 ships, costing a million dollars each, which I claimed could serve a double purpose. On the one hand, in case of war they could act as transports, colliers, or scouts in the Navy, and in times of peace they could be used as training ships for our Naval Reserve, and also in opening up new routes of mail and commerce to South American, Australian, and oriental ports. The Senator from New Hampshire at that time was contending that 32 vessels were necessary for that service, and he sought to secure them by a subsidy, which it was estimated would in a period of 10 years aggregate an expenditure upon the part of the National Government of about $32,000,000.

I insisted upon it that if that expenditure was necessary in the interest of commerce, if it was necessary in order to promote commerce with those ports, the United States Government should subsidize American ships for 10 years to the extent of $32,000,000, it would be a wiser policy for the Government itself to construct the 32 ships as a part of the auxiliary Navy, holding them for use as training ships for our Naval Reserve, manning them in large degree with our Naval Reserve and turning them over in times of peace under lease to shipping companies, who could themselves open up these new routes of commerce and of mail. I contended that at the end of 10 years, if we pursued the system of subsidy, the Government would own nothing; but if we pursued the system of ownership, the Government would at the end of 10 years have the 32 ships into which its $32,000,000 had gone. I insisted upon it that we could accomplish a double purpose—promote commerce with other nations, open up new commercial regions with which it is our desire to connect ourselves, and establish training ships for the sailors whom it is our desire to train for our Navy, and have, at the same time, these ships in reserve in case of war for use as an auxiliary Navy such as I have described.

I presented the same view later on in the dying hours of the ship subsidy bill, and recently, in a few remarks on the 20th of March, when the Senator from New Hampshire was presenting another subsidy measure involving simply a mail subvention, I presented an amendment, not in the hope of securing its passage, but with a view of bringing to the attention of the Senate the importance of this question, the importance of establishing a well-proportioned Navy, not a lopsided Navy, composed only of fighting ships, but a Navy including also other ships absolutely essential to support and maintain the fighting ships in case of war. My voice was raised here, without an echoing note anywhere, until finally the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] raised his voice, and I propose to quote his words briefly. Whilst I was on the floor the Senator from Maine interrupted me and said:

"I do not want to interfere with the line of the Senator's argument, but I am very largely in sympathy with him, for he has struck what is the weak point in our entire Naval Establishment, so far as ships are concerned. We are deplorably lacking in the essentials that make a great fleet not only formidable but seaworthy.

"The Senator said the other day, and the metaphor was not too strong, that without certain auxiliary ships the great battleships of the United States fleet upon any waters outside of our own waters, in case of any emergency, with war threatened, would be derelicts, and it is too true."

In another place the Senator from Maine said:

"Mr. President, it is a melancholy spectacle that this great fleet of ours in this regard presents to-day. It is the greatest fleet of great and formidable ships that the whole world has ever seen. It is completely manned. It is in every respect except one the most magnificent and formidable fleet of ships that any nation has ever put upon the waters of the globe."

The Senator from Maine then went on to show the number of colliers that it was necessary to employ in the present cruise of our great fleet—not American colliers, but colliers of foreign registry—and the Senator from Maine went on to show that in case of war the obligations of neutrality would prevent any one of these foreign countries permitting its ships of foreign registry from coming to our rescue. The Senator added:

"Mr. President, if when that fleet was ordered on this tour about the globe there had been the least menace of war from any power, no Government owning one of these foreign colliers would have allowed a single ship to be employed by us, and our fleet, magnificent as it is, with any menace of war upon the sky, without these foreign colliers would be as useless and—

"'As idle as a painted ship
Upon a painted ocean.'"

The Senator from Maine further said:

"It is not, Mr. President, an agreeable thing to contemplate. We go on year after year building up and accumulating these immense ships at an enormous expenditure, and find ourselves, as we would in any emergency for which the ships are built, without a thing being done that makes the ships formidable as a fleet at sea. The Senator is right in his theories. There ought not to be another ship added to the American Navy until we add something that every other power has done to make the ships formidable in case of an emergency."

And then the Senator from Maine issued me an invitation, in response to which I will at the proper time offer an amendment to this bill. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Maine a moment, I wish to read his invitation. The Senator from Maine said:

"I do not think the Senator from Nevada wants to embarrass this bill; but when we come to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill I hope the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Maine, my colleague, and every thoughtful, patriotic Senator will join with me to try and see that something is done in this entirely neglected field that we have rashly and in the most foolhardy way neglected and abandoned in the past."

Now, Mr. President, in view of the emphatic utterance of the Senator from Maine, I must say that this bill is a most "lame and impotent conclusion." It is true that this bill does provide for a few colliers. It provided as it came from the House for two fleet colliers, each costing $1,800,000, or a total of $3,600,000. To that provision the Senate committee had added another provision for the purchase of three new steam colliers—I presume of slower speed—costing each not exceeding $600,000. So that we have a total of five ships added to our auxiliary navy at a total cost of about $5,000,000; and yet the Senator from Maine showed in his remarks upon a previous occasion that the colliers of foreign registry then employed by our fleet in Pacific waters were some 28 in number, probably cost from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000. And yet in case of war we would need not only colliers, but scouts, transports, dispatch boats, and other vessels, which would be as unattainable from the American register as the colliers would be.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

AN IGNOBLE CONCLUSION.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator. In the long time that this bill has taken of the consideration of the Senate, in the absence of the Senator, the same questions which he now raises have come up, and I have stated what the committee felt itself justified in doing. So far as concerns the equipment of our fleet with colliers, the most important subject, the bill as reported by the committee will not satisfy the Senator. It is not a large program, but it is something in the right direction. The bill provides five good serviceable colliers at a very considerable expense, and I should hope that it would be a permanent feature of naval bills for the future, and that in considering the continued appropriations for the Navy—and I expect so long as I am a Member of this body to see appropriations for maintaining a strong, serviceable Navy—we should go on each year and make as a part of that program provision for colliers that may accompany the fleet in any emergency and which will always be a desirable and necessary part of the establishment.

Of course the Senator knows, while it has been said to be rather an ignoble consideration, that we have to attend somewhat to the conditions of the revenue, the great expenditures, and the approaching alarming deficit. We can not consider the Navy nor the Army, nor any part of the Government, without taking that into account, and, all things considered, the committee believed that this provision for five efficient, valuable, serviceable colliers is all that we can do this year. If we had a surfeit of money and did not know what to do with it, we might go more largely—which I should be very glad to do at as early a day as possible—into the other questions of the auxiliary navy, the building up of ships in the merchant marine, as England does and other great powers, that shall be built in cooperation with the Navy Department and that can be used in an emergency as valuable accessories to the Navy. Other powers have a large list, not on paper, but existing, of the auxiliary navy. I wish we had more. I wish the condition of our finances and our revenue justified us entering that field.

The Senator is right in his general view of what we ought to do. But we have gone on devoting ourselves mainly, as the Senator and all Senators know, to the increase of the Navy proper, the ships of the Navy, and have not given great attention to these other very essential accessories to that part of the establishment. I do not believe that this year we are justified in doing more than what the bill provides in that respect.

So I would be glad if I could join with the Senator, and I am indebted to him for the early and valuable suggestions that he made, which certainly attracted my attention, and which have led, I think, and the Senator is entitled to credit for that, to some development in this direction.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am very glad to learn that this is but the commencement of a continuous policy. The Senator from Maine will not think me too critical in saying that the action of the committee was hardly a realization of the hope which he indulged in his former speech in the Senate, for at that time his utterance was emphatic that there should not be another ship in the Navy built until this needed want was filled. I agree with the Senator from Maine that there should be a limit to naval expenditures. I would gladly see all military expenditures reduced. I would not willingly favor any large increase in the present measure of expenditures. What I hoped for was that the committee would refuse to report in favor of more fighting ships until the auxiliary navy was brought up to a certain standard.

Such a policy would not mean larger annual expenditures on the part of the Government, but it would mean a usable navy, a proportioned navy—a navy in which each part was adjusted in operation to every other part—not a great machine of war, with essential parts absolutely lacking to such a degree that the machine would break down in case of war. I have likened our Navy of splendid fighting ships to a vigorous man, with strong lungs, strong heart, firm muscles, but lacking in an arm or a leg. And that is what our Navy is to-day. It is a navy without arms. It is a navy without legs. It is a navy without the ability to support itself in case of war, without a merchant marine upon which it can call for these auxiliary ships.

We not only are without transports and colliers and dispatch boats, but we have not them within our reach, so far as our domestic resources are concerned and so far as the world itself is concerned and our ability to call upon other nations in case of war for these auxiliary ships and to purchase them—ships now under foreign registry. The Senator from Maine has well said that to permit such action upon their part would be a violation of the laws of neutrality.

Mr. President, therefore I am as opposed as the Senator is to any increase in the total of our naval expenditures. But I suggest that if we are to expend $100,000,000, of that sum $20,000,000 might now be well spent in making this a proportioned navy, in securing the parts now lacking to its efficient and successful operation, and that this work of increasing our auxiliary navy ought not only to be commenced now, but it ought to progress vigorously, at the expense, if necessary, of the immediate construction of fighting ships, of which we to-day have a surplusage as compared with these useful ships so necessary in case of war.

Judged by present conditions we have a surplusage of one kind of ships and we are lacking in other essential ships, and the businesslike thing is, while limiting the total expenditure, to divide that expenditure so as to provide the needed parts of this Navy and not to increase those parts of which we have at present a surplusage.

BUSINESSLIKE PATERNALISM.

Mr. President, while discussing this point I wish to say that I do not believe we should enter upon the policy of creating an auxiliary navy unless we pursue it in a businesslike way. I know it is not regarded as essential to apply business considerations to governmental work. Whenever an attempt is made to do it the cry is raised that the Government should not go into business, and the terrors of governmental ownership are held before us. I do not wish to see the Government go into business. I do not want to see Government ownership of any business. But it does seem to me that when the Government enters upon a great work it should enter upon it in a businesslike way.

This auxiliary navy is needed for the emergency of war. What are we to do with it during the period of peace? Can not we settle that in a businesslike way? One complaint is made that it is difficult to get the men to man the ships in case of war; that we have not a merchant marine which is training men for this service; and the necessity of a great Naval Reserve has been pointed out. It has been insisted that we should have a reserve of at least 10,000 trained men to meet the emergency of war. England has 30,000 such men. It seems to me the suggestion is a wise one, and the question is how shall we train that Naval Reserve—on land or at sea? Certainly these ships can be used as training ships, officered by surplus officers of the Navy, who will be needed in case of war. A training school on a ship will cost less than a training school on land. We have a training school at Goat Island, in California, and possibly we have others. These ships can be used in that way.

But it occurs to me that the expenditure for moving these ships from port to port in the training of the Naval Reserve should be made in a businesslike way, and if any part of it can be saved it should be. What trade is the Government of the United States endeavoring to reach out for? The promotion of commerce with South America, with Australia, and with the Orient. Complaint is made every day that our merchant marine has declined. Complaint is made every day that the merchant marine of the United States can not compete with the marine of any other country upon waters not monopolized by the United States. We all know that the cost of American ships is at least one-fourth more than that of ships of foreign register. We all know that in building American ships the American shipbuilder has to pay the Steel Trust of America $8 a ton more for its steel than does the foreign shipbuilder building for a foreign country and buying the steel from the same trust. We all know, also, that as a result of the high protective system which we have established in this country everything in this country, as compared with other countries, is upon stilts, everything adjusted to the monopoly of production in the great industrial establishments secured by the maintenance of this high-tariff wall.

The result is that the cost of administration of the American ship, manned by American sailors, is from 30 to 40 and 50 per cent higher than that on foreign ships. How, then, can we expect to open up these lines of commerce and of mail to South America, Australia, and the Orient when our merchant marine labors under these very obvious disadvantages in competition with other countries?

I ask, then, why these ships, this auxiliary Navy, which we are creating, should not be used in a businesslike way, not in traversing routes now established, but in opening up new routes; not under the direction of the Government itself, but intrusted by lease under favorable conditions to private shipping companies, the Government retaining its control over the reserves on the ships, maintaining its officers on the ships, and thus aiding to that degree in the economical administration of the ships, so far as the carrier company is concerned, and thus these ships can be used for the purpose of auxiliary ships in case of war, for training schools for our reserves, and the temporary purpose of aiding our mercantile interests in establishing new routes of mail and commerce to South America and the Orient. By doing that we can largely diminish the cost of the operation of these ships, diminish the cost of the training school itself, diminish the cost of the operation of the auxiliary Navy, and at the same time promote the commerce and business of the country.

Why should not the United States Government, when it is doing or proposes to do a paternal thing—for ship subsidy is paternalism—do it in a businesslike way? If it is to pay out money to aid in building ships for our merchant marine, let it own the ships. If it is to aid in the administration of such ships, let it share in the benefits of the administration, in the development and the training of the naval reserves capable of responding efficiently to the call of the country in case of war.

Mr. President, in that way we may possibly open up new lines, and when business is established private shipping companies will take the place of these auxiliary ships, which are simply the advance agents of commerce, and we may then have real ships upon the ocean. At present one of the chief arguments for the creation of a great Navy is protection of the merchant marine. That is the plea made by every country. That is the reason why England has a great navy; that is the reason why Germany has a great navy; that is the reason why France has a great navy. We have built our Navy in advance of our merchant marine. We have built our Navy to protect phantom ships. I would have these ships real ships. First, auxiliary ships of the Navy as advance agents of commerce, and then, as the result of established business and commerce, American lines bearing the American flag which the American Navy will protect throughout the world.

A NAVAL COMMISSION.

Mr. President, at the suggestion of the Senator from California, I have modified the amendment which I have proposed as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington by striking out the last few lines, after the word "peace," in line 7, and I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment as modified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. After line 5, on page 87, it is proposed to insert:

"For an auxiliary navy consisting of transports, colliers, scouts, dispatch boats, and other vessels necessary in aid of the fighting ships in case of war, $20,000,000, and the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Postmaster General are hereby constituted a commission to recommend to Congress a plan for utilizing such ships in times of peace."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words regarding the appointment of this commission. It is true that this is a naval bill, and it is true that these are naval expenditures, and they are to be made under the direction and control of the Navy Department, but it seems to me obvious that inasmuch as it is desirable that this auxiliary navy should be built and conducted in a businesslike way, with a view to as small an expenditure as possible in the future in the way of operating expenses, we should at all events study a plan under which it can be made useful, self-compensatory, or partly compensatory. Now, what departments of the Government are interested in these questions? Obviously the Navy Department, because of its control of the Navy; obviously the Department of Commerce and Labor, which has a mixed jurisdiction over the entire subject of commerce; and obviously the Post Office Department, which department has control of the mails.

We are seeking now to promote an auxiliary navy. We are seeking to promote commerce with South America, Australia, and the Orient, and we are seeking to establish new lines of mails. Why, therefore, would it not be wise to put the three heads of those departments into one commission with a view to a study of the subject, so that a ship can be constructed which will be useful for all the purposes to which I have referred—for the Navy, the commerce, and the mails—and a commission that can study a plan for economically working out the best interests of the Government in creating a proportioned Navy and in advancing commerce and new lines of mail.

No power is given to them except the power of recommendation, and I would ask the Senator from Maine whether he would have any objection to the appointment in this bill of such a commission.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am not prepared to assent to that, because I do not think that it has had mature consideration enough to be embodied as a part of the appropriation bill. We are dealing with the money that we should expend. The question of a commission to take up great subjects I do not think has been presented sufficiently to justify putting on that matter at this stage, when the vote must be taken to-night by an agreement of the Senate.

I do not say that at the proper time I would not favor such a commission, although my experience is that government by commission is not very practical or effectual government. Commissions do not accomplish much unless you would give them absolute power, which we can not grant. An advisory commission never has effectuated much.

Without taking up more time, because I know the Senator desires to go on, I will say that I am not prepared to agree to that proposition upon this bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator can not see his way clear to accept at all events this part of the amendment, for it always seems to me that when a question of this kind is up for discussion before the Senate that is the appropriate time for action. I am always opposed to the policy of drift, and that has been the policy of legislation ever since I have served in the House and in the Senate. I believe that now is the appropriate time for action upon this subject, and I regret, in view of the fact that the Senator himself has so emphasized the importance of action upon this subject, he does not see his way clear to assent to the proposition now.

The Senator remarks that the work of commissions is not always satisfactory; that we can not give them full power, for that might mean, I presume, a delegation of legislative power, and that advisory commissions rarely accomplish much good. Yet the Senator will bear me out in the fact that we rarely consider an important bill involving the work of any department without submitting that bill to the head of the department, with a view to securing the report of the department, involving the view of the experienced men there regarding the work. I find that that has been done in the recent mail subvention bill prepared by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

If the Senator will refer to the report upon that bill, he will find that it was submitted to the Postmaster General, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Secretary of the Navy for their opinion relating to it. It does seem to me if it is desirable to do that, it is desirable to get them together in consultation and have the aid of experienced men, with the aid of experts, so that we may have not simply the individual judgment of each, but combine the judgment of all after a careful study of the subject.

It is for that reason that I favor this method of proceeding, and not with a view, of course, of conferring upon the commission any of the powers belonging to Congress.

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE AND PROMOTION OF COMMERCE—AUXILIARY NAVY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, having under consideration the bill (S. 6708) to amend the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce"—

* * * * * * *

PROMOTION OF MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I was remarking, Mr. President, that I was entirely in sympathy with any proper movement that would stimulate our merchant marine and would bring about the restoration of our flag on the oceans.

But we all realize the difficulty of that task. One difficulty is that ships built in American shipyards cost, I believe, at least 50 per cent more than those constructed in foreign shipyards; and, second, that the operation of American ships costs from 40 to 50 per cent in excess of the operation of similar ships under foreign service. So we start with that initial difficulty. Assuming that other nations do subsidize their merchant marine, it is essential that we should give a subsidy very much larger than that of these other countries, because of the initial cost of the ships and the additional cost of operation.

In the next place, the ships can accomplish little unless they carry goods. It is proposed by this bill to stimulate trade with South America, and the Senator from New Hampshire paints a very attractive picture of the trade possibilities there, indicating very clearly that the per capita imports of those countries far exceed the per capita imports of oriental countries, and therefore it is of greater importance that we should stimulate trade with South American countries than trade with the Orient.

But of what does that trade consist? The exports from those countries are mainly natural products. The imports of those countries are mainly manufactured products. Those countries do not require natural products, agricultural products, such as we can export in competition with the entire world. But they do require manufactured products, in the production of which we can not compete with the rest of the world, and we confess this by declaring openly that it is essential to have in this country a protective tariff averaging 50 per cent of the value of imported manufactures in order to maintain our domestic industries. We confess that. It is not a matter of contention.

Now, then, if this contention be true, that the average cost of production of manufactured products in this country is nearly 50 per cent in excess of that of European products of a similar character, to which country will the South American peoples go for the manufactured products which they seek to import? Naturally to the country of the lowest cost of production, and those are the countries requiring South America's agricultural and natural products. So we have to meet this great natural demand of the South American countries for manufactured products, which can be secured cheapest in Europe, and of the European countries for agricultural products which can be secured as cheaply in South American countries as in the United States. So there is a natural current of trade between South American and European countries which we in our efforts to establish a merchant marine must stem and overcome.

Mr. President, it seems to me entirely logical to assume that we must either abandon this high protective system with a view to bringing our costs of production down to the world's level, so that we can compete with other countries in the export of manufactured products, or we must create subsidies of enormous proportions to meet not only the difference in the cost of building ships and of operating ships, but to meet the difference in the cost of production of the things which are to be exported to those countries.

* * * * * * *

Mr. President, I was not unaware of the conditions to which the Senator from Georgia refers. There are doubtless many manufactured products of this country that are sold for less abroad than the price obtained at home and at prices that are competitive with the prices of foreign countries. I do not know how many industries would be included in such a practice—not very many, probably, but enough to demonstrate the fact that in addition to the subsidy we are creating by this bill, the subsidy of the ships that are to carry the goods, the American people are largely subsidizing American industries, and that in some cases that subsidy is so enormous as to enable those industries to dump their surplus abroad in competition with other countries.

* * * * * * *

Mr. President, the Senator from Maine very truly says that the trade of these countries so near to us ought to be ours; and he presents a picture of a mutual exchange of products, which must mean that we send to those countries manufactured products in competition with European countries, whose production we claim costs much less than ours, and which must mean also that we received from them agricultural products when we are rich in agricultural products ourselves and do not require importation of such products. But I agree with the Senator from Maine that unless we embark upon this venture we will never know, and the question now is, How can we in a reasonable and sensible way embark upon the venture?

NEED OF AN AUXILIARY NAVY.

One of the arguments advanced for a subvention to a merchant marine is that it is necessary to create an auxiliary navy. What does an auxiliary navy mean? It means the ships, such as transports, colliers, dispatch boats, and scouts that are necessary to support the fighting ships in case of war, and without which, in time of war, our fighting ships would be derelict in the ocean.

We all understand that to-day we have a badly proportioned Navy, a navy like a man without a leg or without an arm, a navy like an army without a quartermaster's department or a commissary department. We realized that when our fleet sailed around the world, and in order to meet the demand of that fleet for coal we were compelled to call upon other countries to supply the colliers.

I called the attention of the Senate to this fact two or three years ago, and I remember that the Senator from Maine seized upon some expression I made and amplified it most eloquently. He declared that our Navy as it was and as it is would be in case of war as useless as "a painted ship upon a painted ocean." At that time the Senator from Maine supplemented me in my efforts to increase the auxiliary navy of the United States, to attempt at least to create a better proportioned navy, by bringing in his navy bill appropriations for three or four or five colliers. That method of appropriation was not pursued with the energy which I would have liked to have seen.

I believe it is better to have a well-proportioned navy than a badly proportioned navy, and I would rather have a well-proportioned navy, with every member belonging to a well-proportioned navy, than a navy of fighting ships larger in number but without the ability to sustain themselves in case of war. So I have urged that we should diminish the appropriations, temporarily at least, for the fighting ships and apply our energies to the construction of the ships that are to support the fighting ships in the emergency that the fighting ships are called upon to meet, that of actual war.

Now, Mr. President, the question is, What can be done with these auxiliary ships, built as a part of the Navy in time of peace? Let me suggest that we require a naval reserve. We need men who, at any time in case of war, as trained men, can enter into the service of the fighting ships. Such a naval reserve can be largely made up of boys and young men, such young men as are now being trained at the naval training schools of the country. A floating training school is just as good as one upon land, and better. It costs no more. The housing for a naval reserve upon sea costs no more than the housing upon land, and upon the sea the young men are learning to solve every day the problems which relate to their vocation. Why should we not have floating training schools, and why should not we build as a part of our Navy these transports, colliers, dispatch boats, and scouts; and why should not they be used for that useful purpose? In addition to that, could we not in times of peace let out to commercial or shipping companies these ships, largely manned by the Naval Reserves and officered—in part, at least—by United States naval officers for purposes of commerce, to open up new and untried markets, such as those in South America now in contemplation?

The estimate which I had some time ago with reference to the cost of such ships was a million dollars, I believe, for each ship of about six or seven thousand tons, such ships as the excellent ships that used to sail from San Francisco to Australia, sailing, I believe, at the rate of about 16 knots an hour. Why should not these ships be used in opening up these new routes of travel, and then we will have reached what the Senator from Maine desires to reach, an ascertainment of what can be done by an actual experiment?

SUBSIDIES UNDESIRABLE.

I do not like to open up the road to subventions, to subsidies. The whole country is now in revolt against legislation intended to advance special interests. The whole tendency of the country now is the other way, to divorce legislation from business and to do away with the temptation to these great interests to participate in elections and to influence legislation or administration. I would not see the area of the activities of these interests enlarged by inviting this great shipping interest in as a factor in politics, in legislation, and in administration. But I can see no objection to the creation of a well-proportioned navy, one that will be of real and actual service in case of war, and I can see no objection to dealing with that auxiliary navy in a businesslike way, making its primary purpose during time of peace the training of the Naval Reserve, and making its secondary purpose some recompense for cost of construction and operation by leasing them for opening up these new routes of commerce, and at the same time demonstrating whether it is possible for us with the alleged high cost of production in this country, sustained by a protective tariff system, to engage in competition with other countries having lower costs of production in the open, neutral, and untried markets of the world.

February 2, 1911.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resuming consideration of the bill (S. 6708) to amend the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce"—

AMENDMENT PROVIDING FOR AN AUXILIARY NAVY.

* * * * * * *

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will only say briefly, Mr. President, that we are now making an expenditure of about $125,000,000 annually for our Navy. In a period of 10 years we will have expended at that rate $1,250,000,000 for the construction and the maintenance of the Navy, and at the end of that time we will have, if we pursue the methods which have been pursued heretofore, as incomplete a Navy, as disproportionate a Navy as we have to-day, a Navy composed altogether of fighting ships without the auxiliary ships, such as transports, scouts, colliers, and dispatch boats, which are necessary to sustain the fighting ships in case of war.

NEED OF A WELL-PROPORTIONED NAVY.

I believe in a well-proportioned Navy, and I believe that we should apply a part, say $10,000,000 annually, of the $125,000,000 now annually appropriated for the Navy upon the construction of useful auxiliary ships, which will support the fighting ships in case of war, and which can be let out in times of peace to shipping companies for such purposes as are contemplated by this act. We would then have at the end of 10 years 100 ships such as are contemplated in this amendment, and we would have a well-proportioned Navy instead of a disproportioned Navy.

Mr. President, this bill may pass, and yet it will not be productive of the results desired by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. Through our protective system the cost of construction and the cost of operation in this country has been so raised that it is impossible for us to construct ships in this country without expending at least 50 per cent more than is expended by other nations, and it is impossible to operate them without expending at least 50 per cent more. So, in order to support a merchant marine in competition with the merchant marine of other countries upon the high seas we not only have to equal the subsidies which those nations now give, but we have to largely increase them. And even if this bill passes I can see from the utterances of the Senator from New Hampshire that he has but little hope of any substantial result.

* * * * * * *

Mr. President, assuming that $4,000,000 annually will be paid out by the National Government in these mail subsidies, we will have the sum of $40,000,000 expended within 10 years. During that time, if I have understood the Senator from New Hampshire aright, he does not expect more than 30 ships to be constructed under this subsidy, so that we will have a total subsidy of about $40,000,000 to private companies to aid them in the construction of about 30 ships.

The amendment which I have offered proposes that only $30,000,000 shall be expended for 30 ships of 6,500 tons capacity, such ships as those plying some time ago between the port of San Francisco and Australia, ships which amply met the conditions of commerce and the requirements of trade.

UTILIZING SHIPS IN TIME OF PEACE.

Of course we will have the operation of these ships, and how will we utilize them? We can utilize them, in part, as training ships for our Naval Reserve, for the men who are ultimately to man our fighting ships. A floating training ship does not cost any more than a training school on land. Viewed just in that light, the ship is simply a floating boarding house or a floating hotel; and as we intend to have a Naval Reserve and go to a considerable expense for a Naval Reserve, why should we not have that reserve at sea as well as on land, where its maintenance costs no more and where that Naval Reserve is learning day by day the duties of its vocation? Then I can imagine that a commission organized as this is, consisting of the Secretary of War, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of the Navy, could easily arrange in times of peace that these ships could be used under lease in opening up new routes of commerce, and that thus the object of subsidizing a merchant marine would be accomplished.

The ships would open up these new routes of commerce, and as they became profitable, then perhaps private shipping companies would undertake the entire field. Meanwhile the ships would serve the useful purpose of being at hand at any time in case of war and of serving during any other time as training schools for our Naval Reserves.

Man these ships even when they are employed in the merchant marine, in part, by the Naval Reserve, and to that extent you reduce the operating cost to the private shipping company. So the operation of a line of ships impossible now would become possible by reason of the Government paying a part of the operation of the vessel itself.

But what have we without this? We have a badly proportioned Navy composed of fighting ships derelict in the ocean in time of war, utterly unable to fight without the supporting ships, at a cost of $1,250,000,000 during the next 10 years. Is it not better to take during the next 10 years at least $100,000,000, less than 10 per cent of this total sum, and apply it to making a well-proportioned Navy that can meet the exigencies of war?

Mr. President, I have no hope that this amendment can be adopted at this time, though I have very gratifying evidence of a growth of sentiment on this floor in favor of this measure. The first ally we had in it was the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who some years ago as the result of this agitation largely increased the colliers of the Navy and assured us of a still further increase. The Navy has already been compelled to build some colliers. The bill to which I refer brought in three or four. It is no new thing. The Navy is not to-day relying upon privately owned ships for the carrying of its coal.

This has no more suggestion of paternalism than the appropriations already made. It is simply an attempt to measure up to the requirements of the situation, and, when it is impossible to get such ships from a merchant marine as it exists to-day and will be impossible even under this bill, to secure the ships without which our Navy will be as incapable in time of war as an Army would be without a quartermaster's department or without a commissary department.

August 3, 1914.

AUXILIARY NAVY AND NAVAL RESERVE.

The Senate having under consideration the bill (S. 5259) to establish one or more United States Navy mail lines between the United States and South America—

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, * * * I wish to say, Mr. President, in this connection that for many years I have been urging, in the form of resolutions and amendments to pending legislation and bills, the creation of an auxiliary navy, composed of transports, colliers, scouts, and other ships, which would aid the fighting ships in case of war and would be useful in time of peace in opening up new routes of commerce and as training schools for our merchant marine. This bill is not so ambitious as the project contemplated by the resolutions and amendments which I have offered from time to time, but I regard it as a step in that direction. It is a utilization by the Navy of certain ships now in the Navy for the purpose of opening up commercial routes and mail routes, new routes of transportation through which American commerce can be developed.

We all know that the great difficulty in establishing a merchant marine in the United States is, first, the initial cost of the ships, which, under our protective system, is much larger than that in other countries; and, second, the cost of operation, because of the more liberal wages which we pay. But it is perfectly apparent that, so far as our Navy is concerned, it is a badly proportioned Navy, composed almost entirely of fighting ships and lacking the auxiliary ships necessary to support the fighting ships in case of war, and without the ability upon the part of the United States in case of war to call in the ships of its merchant marine, because, practically, we have no merchant marine.

I look upon this legislation, therefore, as a step in the direction of a larger policy, which will result in the construction by the United States of commercial ships, transports, colliers, ships that can be used for scouts, and so forth, in time of war and their utilization in time of peace; and I expect that in the progress of events the opening up of these commercial routes through our Navy will gradually lead to the establishment of a substantial merchant marine belonging to the United States.

I am warmly for this measure, and hope that no objection will be interposed against its present consideration.

I should like also to insert in my remarks the resolutions that I have offered and amendments that I have proposed on this subject during previous years, with extracts from previous remarks concerning them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

RECORD OF MR. NEWLANDS'S WORK FOR AN AUXILIARY NAVY.

Motion made by Mr. NEWLANDS, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, February 14, 1906:

"That S. 529 be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce, with instructions to report in connection therewith an estimate of the cost of the vessels required for service in the ocean mail lines provided for in section 6, and as to whether it is practicable for the United States Government to construct such ships as a part of the Navy, supplementary to the war ships, to be used as colliers, transports, scouts, etc., in the emergency of war, and as to whether it is practicable to lease such ships to private corporations in times of peace for the service of the mail lines contemplated in section 6, and as to whether it is practicable to organize a naval reserve to be enlisted in the United States in the service of such ships whose wages shall be paid three-fourths by the private corporations leasing such ships, and one-fourth by the United States Government; such naval reserves to be composed of citizens of the United States, or those who have declared their intention to become such—and to be subject to the training of naval officers in order to fit them to respond to the call of the Government in case of war, and the rentals received from such ships to form a fund for the gradual enlargement of the number of supplementary ships required by the Navy in case of war, as colliers, transports, scouts, etc., and generally to report the comparative cost of such method of enlarging our merchant marine as compared with the method of subvention provided by section 6."

Amendment to the ship subsidy bill, Sixtieth Congress, first session, offered by Mr. NEWLANDS on March 20, 1908:

"That the Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall hereafter constitute a commission to be known as the Foreign Commerce Commission, and that they are hereby authorized to provide for the construction, either in the private shipyards of the country or in the shipyards of the Navy, or both, of 27 vessels, not exceeding 6,500 tons capacity each, and costing in the aggregate not exceeding $27,000,000; that such vessels shall be so constructed as to be useful to the Navy as auxiliary vessels, such as transports, colliers, dispatch boats, cruisers, and scouts, and also useful in times of peace in opening up new routes of commerce between United States ports and the ports of South America, New Zealand, Australia, and the Philippines; that such commission make to Congress such recommendations as to it seem advisable regarding the manning of such vessels in whole or in part by the Naval Reserve and the leasing of them so manned in times of peace to shipping companies for the purpose of promoting foreign trade and commerce, and for the incorporation of such shipping companies under national law, and for reports on their operations."

Amendment offered by Mr. NEWLANDS to the ship-subsidy bill, Sixtieth Congress, first session, April 27, 1908:

"For an auxiliary Navy consisting of transports, colliers, scouts, dispatch boats, and other vessels necessary in aid of the fighting ships in case of war, $20,000,000; and the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Postmaster General are hereby constituted a commission to recommend to Congress a plan for utilizing such ships in times of peace."

Amendment offered by Mr. NEWLANDS to the naval appropriation bill, Sixtieth Congress, second session, February 15, 1909:

"Strike out the clause relating to battleships, page 68, lines 14 to 21, inclusive, and insert: 'That for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the Naval Establishment of the United States the President is authorized to have constructed such auxiliary ships, including transports, colliers, dispatch boats, cruisers, and scouts, as will be necessary in case of war to support the fighting ships, at a total cost not to exceed $12,000,000; and that the President make such recommendations to Congress as to him seem advisable regarding the manning of vessels belonging to such auxiliary Navy, in whole or in part, by the Naval Reserve and the leasing of them, so manned, in times of peace to shipping companies for the purpose of promoting foreign trade and commerce.'"

In the Sixty-first Congress, second session, on June 10, 1910, Mr. NEWLANDS introduced S. 3721, to authorize the construction of auxiliary ships for the Navy:

"A bill (S. 3721) providing for the construction of auxiliary ships of the Navy and for their use in times of peace in opening up new routes of commerce.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall hereafter constitute a commission, to be known as the foreign commerce commission, and that they are hereby authorized to provide for the construction, either in the private shipyards of the United States or in the shipyards of the Navy, or both, of 30 vessels, not exceeding 6.500 tons capacity each and costing in the aggregate not exceeding $30,000,000; that such vessels shall be so constructed as to be useful to the Navy as auxiliary vessels, such as transports, colliers, dispatch boats, cruisers, and scouts, and also in times of peace in opening up new routes of commerce between United States ports and the ports of South Africa, South America, New Zealand, Australia, and the Philippines; that such commission make to Congress such recommendations as to it seem advisable regarding the manning of such vessels in whole or in part by the Naval Reserve and the leasing of them, so manned, in times of peace to shipping companies for the purpose of promoting foreign trade and commerce, and the incorporation of such shipping companies under national law, and reports of their operation."

In the Sixty-first Congress, third session, on February 2, 1911, Mr. NEWLANDS offered the following as an amendment to the ship-subsidy bill:

"That the Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall hereafter constitute a commission, to be known as the foreign commerce commission, and that they are hereby authorized to provide for the construction, either in the private shipyards of the United States or in the shipyards of the Navy, or both, of 30 vessels, not exceeding 6,500 tons capacity each and costing in the aggregate not exceeding $30,000,000; that such vessels shall be so constructed as to be useful to the Navy as auxiliary vessels, such as transports, colliers, dispatch boats, cruisers, and scouts, and also useful in times of peace in opening up new routes of commerce; that such commission make to Congress such recommendations as to it seem advisable regarding the manning of such vessels in whole or in part by the Naval Reserve and the leasing of them, so manned, in times of peace to shipping companies, or otherwise utilizing them for the purpose of promoting foreign trade and commerce."

Extract from Senate resolution No. 41, Sixty-second Congress, first session, introduced by Mr. NEWLANDS, May 11, 1911:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that during the extra session legislation should be enacted upon the following subjects:

* * * * * * *

"(7) Providing for the upbuilding of the American merchant marine by free entry to American registry of all ships, wherever constructed, and by the construction of auxiliary ships for our Navy, to be used in time of war in aid of the fighting ships and in time of peace in establishing new routes of commerce through lease to shipping companies; such legislation to involve the temporary diminution of the construction of fighting ships and the substitution of auxiliary ships, with a view to the creation of a well-proportioned and self-sustaining Navy."

Extract from Senate resolution No. 159, offered by Mr. NEWLANDS, Sixty-second Congress, second session, December 7, 1911:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that during the present session the appropriate committees shall consider and Congress enact legislation upon the following subjects:

* * * * * * *

"Twelfth. Providing for the construction of auxiliary ships for our Navy, to be used in time of war in aid of the fighting ships and in time of peace in establishing necessary service through the Panama Canal and new routes of commerce to foreign countries through lease to shipping companies; such legislation to involve the temporary diminution of the construction of fighting ships and the substitution of auxiliary ships, with a view to the creation of a well-proportioned and efficient Navy."

Extract from Senate resolution No. 4, introduced Sixty-third Congress, special session of the Senate, by Mr. NEWLANDS, on March 13, 1913:

"6. Resolved, That the Committees on Military and Naval Affairs report at as early a date as possible during the extra session upon the following questions:

* * * * * * *

"(b) A plan for the construction of auxiliary ships for the Navy, to be used in time of war in aid of the fighting ships and in time of peace in establishing necessary service through the Panama Canal and new routes of commerce to foreign countries through lease to shipping companies; such legislation involving the temporary diminution of the construction of fighting ships and the substitution of auxiliary ships, with a view to the organization of a well-proportioned and efficient Navy."

August 8, 1914.

The Senate having under consideration the bill (H. R. 18202) to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for the foreign trade—

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I desire to offer again the amendment with reference to an auxiliary navy, striking out that provision which provides for the expenditure of the $30,000,000 in installments running over five years, and providing that the sum of $30,000,000 shall be available immediately for use in this emergency. I should like to have the amendment as changed read, and also a letter from the Secretary of the Navy on this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase or to provide for the construction, either in the private shipyards of the United States or in the navy yards, or both, of 30 vessels suitable for use by the Navy either as auxiliary vessels, such as transports, fuel ships, dispatch boats, ammunition vessels, hospital ships, submarine and destroyer tenders, supply ships, cruisers, and scouts, or for use on such commercial or Navy mail lines as the Secretary of the Navy may now or hereafter be authorized by law to establish: Provided, That the cost in the aggregate of the aforementioned vessels shall not exceed $30,000,000: Provided further, That the sum of $30,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise obligated, to carry into effect the provisions of this act."

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask for the reading of the letter of the Secretary of the Navy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the letter. * * *

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

"NAVY DEPARTMENT,
"Washington, August 7, 1914.

"Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
"United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR SENATOR: I have given careful consideration to your letter of this date, inviting a suggestion in form of an amendment to the Panama Canal act covering the ground which you have heretofore embraced in a proposed legislative program.

"It appears that a slight change in the wording of the bill (S. 3721) introduced by you December 10, 1909, and somewhat modified so that the vessels mentioned therein may be utilized in case the Weeks bill, establishing one or more Navy mail lines, becomes law, would fit conditions and supply the needs of the Navy.

"The suggested amendment to the Panama Canal act is attached hereto. You will note that the number of vessels to be purchased or contracted for is limited to 6 a year, which would require five years to obtain the total of 30. This provision would enable the department to replace old naval vessels as they become worn out in the service of the mail, passenger, and freight lines which the Weeks bill proposes to establish.

"I am informed that the Naval Committee of the House will consider the Weeks bill on Tuesday next.

"Assuring you of my appreciation of the interest you have taken and are now taking in this important matter, I am,

"Very sincerely, yours,

"JOSEPHUS DANIELS."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will state with reference to this communication that I have since had a conversation over the telephone with the Secretary of the Navy, and he agrees with me that the emergency is such as to make it advisable that this entire $30,000,000 should be put immediately at the disposal of the Navy Department with a view to meeting the demands for ships for transportation, so I have amended the amendment which I previously offered to that effect. The Senate is doubtless aware that the Weeks bill passed a few days ago provided for mail lines to be conducted by the Navy Department and put at the command of the Navy Department for that purpose a number of ships that are now in the Navy. This is simply an enlargement of that auxiliary navy which is to be used temporarily in times of peace for commercial purposes.

I think it is of the highest importance that there should be some legislation upon this subject at this time. All the measures with reference to coaxing foreign vessels into American registry by taking away the restrictions of our registry laws may fail or be inadequate.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, with great reluctance but only owing to the stress of circumstances do I resort to a point of order regarding the proposed amendment that it involves an appropriation and can not be considered as a part of this bill. It was not estimated for by the department.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not understand——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order. The amendment is germane and it is in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is not an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. May I ask the Senator from Nevada a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will yield to the Senator from Connecticut in a moment.

If the amendment is adopted now this bill will be considered in the House in connection with the Weeks bill, which is before the Naval Affairs Committee of that body and which comes up for consideration next Tuesday. It seems to me that here is an opportunity to meet an emergency such as we met during Mr. McKinley's administration, when we unreservedly put into his hands $50,000,000 to meet the exigencies of the situation growing out of the impending war with Cuba. This is a situation much more serious than that in that it possibly means the prostration of over-sea carriage. Congress is about to adjourn, and unless the restrictions upon transportation imposed by belligerency are removed we may have a most serious condition in the business and commerce of this country. It seems to me that a large fund should be put in the control of the administration with as large a discretion as possible to meet this great emergency.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator tell us approximately when Congress is to adjourn?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is beyond my imagination.

The Senator has used a phrase in explanation of his amendment which I should like to have him explain. If I understood him correctly, he said that these boats are for temporary use. What does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I mean so far as they are to be used for commercial purposes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And then what?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The use is a temporary one, for we hope this war will be a temporary war; that it will not last over a long period; and that it will not prostrate our foreign commerce. And as Congress is at present expected to meet that emergency, in that sense it is temporary; but in the larger sense this appropriation is not temporary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then what?

A PERMANENT AUXILIARY NAVY.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It creates a permanent auxiliary navy. It supplies ships to the Navy that the Navy needs. It supplies colliers, transports, scouts, dispatch boats, and other vessels without which our fighting ships will be derelict in the ocean and absolutely helpless in case of war. We have no merchant marine upon which we can call for transports and colliers and scouts. We have fighting ships without the supporting ships. We are practically an army without a commissary.

These ships are absolutely necessary, as was demonstrated in the trip of our naval squadron around the world, when we were subjected to the humiliation of calling upon foreign nations to supply us with the ships that were necessary to supply and support that great squadron. We were unable to furnish them ourselves. Here is an opportunity to make our Navy a well-proportioned, well-equipped Navy, composed not simply of fighting ships, as at present is substantially the case, but also of the supporting ships, such as transports, colliers, dispatch boats, and scouts, necessary to support the fighting ships, and at the same time to provide 30 vessels of about 10,000 tons capacity, which can supply the place of these ships that are now driven out of commerce by the extraordinary war in which the principal carrier and maritime nations of the world are involved.

Mr. President, of course it is always possible to buy 30 vessels for a million dollars apiece if you have the money. A year ago I introduced a resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, calling for information as to the proportion and balance of the Navy and as to its efficiency in that respect. I have heard nothing more from it, and I did not expect to, but if the Navy is unbalanced and disproportioned and is too heavy in the battleship line and there are not sufficient accessories, that is the business of the Navy Department and the Committee on Naval Affairs. It is a legitimate consideration for the naval appropriation bill. I have always favored a most liberal appropriation for that. I think our Navy needs quite as much a rearrangement and reapportionment, in view of making it effective as a whole, as it does in new units. I agree with the Senator from Nevada about that, though I am not expert in that line of business, and that is the reason why I called for information from the department, but did not get it.

Mr. President, I am one of those who think it is wise not to lose one's head or be stampeded by shrill sounds of voices against emergencies. There may be an emergency in the transportation business by sea by which we market our products abroad and there may not. There may have been one for four or five days now and it may be entirely relieved within a week.

Before I would lightly take out $30,000,000 from the Treasury of the United States and cast it into this project I would be inclined to wait a week, and I do not think Congress is going to leave before that time, and see if the control of the sea is obtained by a power which can protect its ocean-borne commerce so that no emergency develops at all.

I do not advocate this amendment at this time. My own judgment is that it was quite a sufficient experiment when we passed the Weeks bill, if that was the bill which provided for the Government to go into commercial business in connection with the mail and use its naval vessels for those purposes.

Mr. President, if the Government of the United States is going into the commercial business with foreign nations, all the talk about a merchant marine as we have heretofore known it and meant it is the merest idle talk. Nobody will ever build a vessel to compete with the United States Government in the commercial business. If the Government engages in that line of business, to act as a commercial prospector for good, profitable lines of commerce with foreign nations, and then as soon as an American intimates his willingness to occupy the field the Government is going to withdraw from it, that is an exceedingly curious line of governmental activity, it seems to me.

Of course, I do not think it is necessary to speak at length on this amendment. I have no idea it will be adopted upon the bill at this time. I simply did not want to get stampeded myself and I did not want anybody else to.

Mr. STONE. May I ask the Senator from Nevada a question? The amendment proposed by the Senator, I understand, appropriates $30,000,000 to be expended how?

Mr. NEWLANDS. For supporting ships to the fighting ships in our Navy.

Mr. STONE. In one year or a series of years?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The money will be available immediately to be used in the discretion of the Government.

SENATOR STONE SUPPORTS THE MEASURE.

Mr. STONE. It is estimated that $30,000,000 will be sufficient to purchase 30 good, seaworthy ships of considerable tonnage.

I have felt, Mr. President, that there was at least a great deal of merit in the suggestion. I have not the profoundest faith that the bill now before the Senate which we are presumably about to vote upon will accomplish any adequate relief to the congested commercial condition which it is said exists. How great that congestion is, or how it may be augmented in the immediate future, is necessarily more or less a subject of conjecture.

But I doubt very much, Mr. President, whether any great number of ships will be offered to American citizens, and still more doubt whether American citizens would be willing to invest their capital in foreign ships, especially ships now owned by citizens or subject of belligerent countries, under the provisions of the bill. Of course, I hope that enough will be offered and enough purchased to relieve the exigency of the hour; but if that should not occur, as I fear it will not occur, then the difficulties confronting us remain. A citizen of the United States may not be willing to invest his money in foreign-built ships and foreign-owned ships under the provisions of the pending bill, but the Government of the United States might be willing to invest its money in the purchase of commercial ships. Far more is it probable that the Government would obtain 30 ships under this appropriation than that half that number will be bought by American citizens and put into over-seas traffic under the provisions of this measure.

Mr. President, suppose the Government does purchase these ships, will it have made a mistake? Has the public suffered or benefited by the purchase? If the Government does in a comparatively short time during the continuance of the stupendous struggle now being waged throughout Europe purchase 30 commercial ships for naval use, to be made a part of the naval force of this country, the ships could be utilized at once in carrying passengers and freights from any part of the United States to any foreign port in the world.

There would be certainly less objection to the utilization of commercial ships owned by the Government as an auxiliary to the armored Navy of the Government than to employ warships themselves in commercial uses; and afterwards, when the wars raging in Europe are at an end, the Government would still own these ships. Is it a bad thing for the Government to be in the ownership and possession of an auxiliary navy of that kind? It is always at our command to meet any kind of an emergency, not only such an emergency as confronts us now, but such as might confront us in the future, more directly and intimately concerning the welfare and the very life of the Republic itself.

I am not opposed to an auxiliary navy of this kind at any time; and it seems to me that there was never a time in our history when we had greater need of it than now. I will not say "never a time in our history," for there have been other times. There was in the War with Spain a time when we needed vessels of this character so badly that a large appropriation was made to hire them for our use. Occasions of that kind may arise at any time, and the occasion may be far more pregnant of peril to us than the one which confronted us during the War with Spain.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I am disposed to support this amendment by my vote.

* * * * * * *

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I introduce a bill providing for an auxiliary navy, embracing the provisions of the amendment which I have already offered to the pending bill. I ask that the bill may be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. O'GORMAN. What is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks permission, out of order, to introduce a bill providing for an auxiliary navy, and to have it printed in the RECORD. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 6246) providing for the purchase or construction of auxiliary ships for the Navy and for their use on commercial or Navy mail lines authorized by law was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as follows:

"A bill (S. 6246) providing for the purchase or construction of auxiliary ships for the Navy and for their use on commercial or Navy mail lines authorized by law.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase or to provide for the construction, either in the private shipyards of the United States or in the navy yards, or both, of 30 vessels suitable for use by the Navy either as auxiliary vessels, such as transports, fuel ships, dispatch boats, ammunition vessels, hospital ships, submarine and destroyer tenders, supply ships, cruisers, and scouts, or for use on such commercial or Navy mail lines as the Secretary of the Navy may now or hereafter be authorized by law to establish: Provided, That the cost in the aggregate of the aforementioned vessels shall not exceed $30,000,000.

"SEC. 2. That the sum of $30,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise obligated, to carry into effect the provisions of this act."

August 11, 1914.

The Senate resuming the consideration of H. R. 18202—

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

"SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase or to provide for the construction, either in the private shipyards of the United States or in the navy yards, or both, of 30 vessels suitable for use by the Navy either as auxiliary vessels, such as transports, fuel ships, dispatch boats, ammunition vessels, hospital ships, supply ships, and scouts, or for use on such commercial or mail lines as the Secretary of the Navy may now or hereafter be authorized by law to establish, not to cost in the aggregate to exceed $30,000,000; and the sum of $30,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry into effect the provisions of this section."

* * * * * * *

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am aware that many Senators who are disposed to support this proposal as proper legislation are disinclined to do so as an amendment upon this bill, and I wish to say in that connection that this is probably the only opportunity that we shall have to write this measure into the statute books.

The Senate will recall that it has already passed a bill, called the Weeks bill, which provides for the utilization in commerce of certain ships belonging to the Navy, not only in commerce in South American ports but with European ports. We have the statement of the Secretary of the Navy that there are some 20 ships belonging to the Navy that can be thus utilized. This is simply supplemental to the legislation which the Senate has already enacted and which is now under consideration by the Naval Committee of the other House. It simply recognizes the fact that our fighting ships will not have in case of war the support of supply ships, and that our fighting ships would be useless in the ocean in case of war without the aid of supply ships. It proposes, therefore, as a matter of national defense, to start upon the program of adding to our Navy those auxiliary ships that are absolutely essential for the support of the fighting ships in case of war, meanwhile utilizing them during times of peace for commercial purposes.

* * * * * * *

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

* * * * * * *

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 20, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—20.

Ashurst	Clarke, Ark.	Jones	Overman
Borah	Colt	Lane	Pittman
Brady	Culberson	Lewis	Poindexter

Fall	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.
Fletcher	Myers	Smith, Mich.

So Mr. NEWLANDS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. I gave notice the last time we had a morning hour, as provided by the rules, that I would offer an amendment to the rules. To-day during the morning hour we did not reach that part of the morning program prior to 2 o'clock, when the unfinished business was in order. I ask unanimous consent that the rule which I have proposed be printed and referred to the Committee on Rules. I understand the committee will meet in the morning, and that is the reason why I make the request now. (S. Res. 540.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I think it was a week ago to-day that the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in speaking on the pending question made a most elaborate, carefully prepared, and eloquent address upon the subject of alien immigration. My purpose in what I have to say to-day is to confine myself to that phase of the pending question.

The President in his message, sent to Congress January 28, refusing his approval of House bill 6060, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States," said:

The literacy test and the tests and restrictions which accompany it constitute an even more radical change in the policy of the Nation. Hitherto we have generously kept our doors open to all who were not unfitted by reason of disease or incapacity for self-support or such personal records and antecedents as were likely to make them a menace to our peace and order or to the wholesome and essential relationships of life.

He then proceeds:

In this bill it is proposed to turn away from tests of character and of quality and impose tests which exclude and restrict, for the new tests here embodied are not tests of quality or of character or of personal fitness, but tests of opportunity. Those who come seeking opportunity are not to be admitted unless they have already had one of the chief of the opportunities they seek, the opportunity of education. The object of such provisions is restriction, not selection.

Then the President proceeds to say:

If the people of this country have made up their minds to limit the number of immigrants by arbitrary tests and so reverse the policy of all the generations of Americans that have gone before them, it is their right to do so. I am their servant and have no license to stand in their way. But I do not believe that they have. I respectfully submit that no one can quote their mandate to that effect. Has any political party ever avowed a policy of restriction in this fundamental matter, gone to the country on it, and been commissioned to control its legislation? Does this bill rest upon the conscious and universal assent and desire of the American people? I doubt it. It is because I doubt it that I make bold to dissent from it. I am willing to abide by the verdict, but not until it has been rendered. Let the platforms of parties speak out upon this policy and the people pronounce their wish. The matter is too fundamental to be settled otherwise.

I have no pride of opinion in this question. I am not foolish enough to profess to know the wishes and ideals of America better than the body of her chosen representatives know them. I only want instruction direct from those whose fortunes, with ours and all men's, are involved.

IS THE SYSTEM OF REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT A FAILURE?

Mr. President, it has seemed to me from such examination of this subject as I have been able to make that the President is very much mistaken in the facts upon which he assumes to base his action; that he is mistaken in his conception of the laws of the United States bearing on this question; and that he is not fully informed regarding the policy which has been adopted by Congress upon this subject. In his message he also assumes a position which, to my mind, is absolutely new in the history of the Nation. It is new in its arrogation of executive power. It is, in fact, a denial of all the principles of a representative government in the United States to-day.

Senators will remember that this same bill was introduced into this body in the Sixty-second Congress, that it was fully debated, received the fullest consideration, and passed the Senate by a vote of 56 to 9. It was then adopted in the House by a vote of 178 to 52, and was sent to the President for his approval. Instead of meeting the approval of President Taft the bill was returned to the House in which it originated, accompanied by a message in which he based his action upon reasons which were urged in a letter written to him by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, Mr. Nagel.

Upon the question whether the measure should become a law notwithstanding the objections of the President the Senate answered in the affirmative by more than the necessary two-thirds majority, and in the House it only failed to receive the requisite two-thirds majority by perhaps four or five votes, showing that the sentiment of that Congress was overwhelmingly in favor of the principles embodied in this measure.

The same bill, with hardly a change in its phraseology, was introduced into the present Congress, passed the House by a vote of 252 to 156, and, after three weeks' debate in the Senate of the United States, passed this body by a vote of 50 yeas to 7 nays.

This bill, having been thus indorsed by two separate Congresses each coming fresh from the people, has now met with the disapproval of President Wilson, and for the reasons given in his message, from which I have already quoted.

It seems to me, Mr. President, a strange thing that the President of the United States should thus utterly ignore the existence of the representative principle in government and say, in substance, that the House of Representatives is incapable of dealing with this question as a policy, or that it is incapable of representing the opinion of the people of the United States, from whom its Members received their election. By his action he has said substantially that Senators now composing this body are incapable of interpreting the public sentiment, the thought, the judgment, the conviction of the people of their respective States, and in order to be convinced that the people are really behind this measure he demands that action by some political party be taken in favor of the policy of restriction, and that the question shall in that way be brought directly to the attention of the people and their verdict solicited. Let me read what he says:

It is because I doubt it—

That is, that the people approve this measure—

It is because I doubt it that I make bold to dissent from it. I am willing to abide by the verdict, but not until it has been rendered.

He says that he has a method of determining this question, and one only which will satisfy him. He says:

Let the platforms of parties speak out upon this policy and the people pronounce their wish.

He says further:

The matter is too fundamental to be settled otherwise.

Think of it, Mr. President! A matter of great national policy "too fundamental to be settled" by a House of Representatives, freshly chosen from the people every two years, and by the Senate of the United States, selected by the respective States to represent them in the legislative department of the Government.

POLITICAL PARTIES HAVE ALREADY SPOKEN.

The President seems to feel entirely justified in interposing a veto of this act upon the broad ground that he can only be convinced of what the people want when one or the other of the great parties of this Nation shall have incorporated the principle of restriction into its platform, and have gone to the country upon that issue. It is a remarkable attitude to be assumed by a man who is an historian. In reply, I need only to call attention to the fact that as early as 1896—I shall have occasion to refer to this matter later on in my remarks—the Democratic national convention adopted the following plank in its platform:

We hold that the most efficient way of protecting American labor is to prevent the importation of foreign pauper labor to compete with it in the home market.

The term "foreign pauper labor" must, of course, refer to the labor that comes from those nations of Europe where the wages are infinitesimal in character, where the laboring masses are largely lacking in the proper means of support, and where the standard of living conditions which exist in the United States is unknown.

It was, however, not only the Democratic Party which so long ago as that assumed this attitude, for the Republican Party in its national convention of 1896 proposed this very measure, this very scheme for reducing the flow of immigration to this country of the classes indicated. In its platform in that year it declares:

For the protection of the quality of our American citizenship and of the wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor we demand that the immigration laws be throughly enforced and so extended—as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who can neither read nor write.

Mark the words—

That was the declaration of the Republican Party in 1896, and it was the expression of a public sentiment in favor of restriction which then existed and which has been growing from that day until the present time.

DIFFERENCE IN CONDITIONS AT HOME AND ABROAD.

Why, Mr. President, the President of the United States seems to have wholly overlooked the development of public sentiment upon this question. He seems also to have overlooked the growth of a national policy, as expressed in various pieces of legislation, in which it has been sought to improve the quality and to restrict the flow of immigration to this country. He also utterly fails to recognize the difference in the conditions, industrial and legislative, existing prior to the year 1882 and since that time.

Up to 1882 we had received only about 9,000,000 immigrants, either before or after the Civil War. About 5,000,000 had come prior to that great conflict. During the busy years succeeding the Civil War, and down to 1882, we received that magnificent body of men, women, and children from northern and western Europe who, with those coming previously, have been so thoroughly assimilated and have so greatly helped to build up American institutions that their advent is counted as a national asset. We glory in the citizenship which they have developed.

The President, however, fails to understand, or perhaps fails to appreciate, the fact that since 1882 we have received not 9,000,000, which represented the immigration of all preceding years, but substantially 19,000,000 aliens, 11,000,000 of whom are of the new type, as we express it; a type differing from that which preceded it, one coming from eastern and southern Europe—Russia, Austria, Hungary, the Balkan States, southern Italy, and some nations farther east than those I have mentioned.

The President, when he spoke about the freedom of past immigration and of our generous spirit in receiving it, and in that part of his message where he refers to a denial of the generous spirit which has prevailed in the past, had in mind, I think, the immigration which came from Ireland between 1846 and 1854, during the period of the famine in that island, and that other body of immigrants which came from Germany at a later period, which in some part represented German revolutions and the dangers connected with citizenship in that country.

In the report of the Immigration Commission, volume 2, page 591, the commission, in discussing the steerage legislation, referred to this Irish immigration, and I beg leave to quote briefly from it:

The potato famine in Ireland occurred in the year 1847, and in consequence there was a great increase in emigration from that country, as well as from other parts of the United Kingdom. During the first six months of 1847 a total of 174,048 emigrants sailed from British ports to the United States and British colonies in North America. Of these, 101,767 were destined to the United States and 72,281 to the British colonies, chiefly, of course, to Canada. During the whole of the preceding year, 1846, the emigrants embarking at British ports for the United States and for British colonies in North America numbered, according to Hon. A. Dudley Mann, 82,289 and 43,439, respectively; a total of 125,728.

CONJUGAL RELATIONS.

This immigration to which the commission refers was peculiar in character and attractive in quality in this, that it came in families; that it came to remain permanently, to seek citizenship, and to improve the condition of those who composed it; in other words, that body of immigrants came here with the purpose to make the United States its home.

I find, in examining the records, that in nine years, from 1846 to 1854, we received from Ireland from 105,000 up to 221,000 annually, and that substantially 43 per cent of that entire number were females. The proportion of the unmarried was comparatively small, and the proportion of those who were married but failed to bring their wives with them was negligible.

In this connection, Mr. President, I ask leave to insert a table which gives the arrivals during each year and the percentage of females among them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

The volume of Irish immigration from 1846 to 1854, inclusive, and the percentages of females received.

Year.	Number.	Per cent.
1846	51,752	42.5
1847	105,536	42.1
1848	112,924	41.1
1849	159,398	40.0
1850	164,004	37.8
1851	221,250	42.3
1852	159,548	43.3
1853	162,649	42.4
1854	108,606	41.1
Average	.....	43.3

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, as the question of the relative number of males and females is one which must be noticed as we examine the history of immigration, in order to determine for ourselves the purpose with which the different classes of immigrants have come, I want also to make a comparison of the relative number of females in the immigration from the several countries which have been our contributors during the period 1899 to 1909, inclusive. During that period we received of the old immigration, those coming from Great Britain, Germany, the Scandinavian States, Belgium, and France, 2,273,782; but of the new immigration, coming from southern and eastern Europe, we received 5,930,252—a number twice greater than those of the old immigration, and among whom the proportion of females was vastly less. Let me give that proportion. Of the old immigration the proportion of females was 41.5 per cent of the whole, while of the new immigration it was only 27 per cent of the whole.

In connection with that I wish to introduce a table showing the relative number of males and females from each individual nation, constituting both the old immigration and the new, which I ask leave to insert in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

The immigration during the 11 years 1899–1909, inclusive.

CONDITIONS WHICH INVITED OLD IMMIGRATION.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It seems to me also, Mr. President, that in considering this matter the Chief Executive overlooks the wonderful development which occurred in this country during the period of the Germanic invasion. In some remarks submitted in the Senate when this bill was under consideration I called attention to the fact that between 1866 and 1882 we opened up a new agricultural area substantially as great as the whole area of Great Britain, of Switzerland, and of Greece combined. To resort to statistics and to state the matter accurately, let me say that during the 40 years succeeding the close of the Civil War the number of the farms operated in this country increased from 2,500,000 to 6,000,000.

During that same period there also came that great development in the railroad systems of the United States. We had passed a homestead law during the Civil War and opened our great Northwest to actual settlers and we had built the Pacific railroads. The result was that, with the confidence inspired by the restoration of the Union, capital was released and found investment in railroad construction and equipment to such an extent that during a period of 20 years succeeding the close of the Civil War no week day passed without witnessing the expenditure of a million dollars in such work.

It was the lure of the land, the attraction which the enterprises of America held out that invited this immigration from Germany, from Great Britain, and from the Scandinavian States, and they came with the full intention to become citizens of the United States, to take upon themselves the responsibilities of government as well as the privileges to be found under our institutions. They brought their wives, they brought their children, and they found permanent residences in the great new West. It was easy for them to acquire the English language. They came from the same racial stock which then constituted the population of the United States; acquaintances were soon formed; friendships followed; they very soon fitted into the social and political life of the Nation, and to-day their names are represented in this body and in the other body of this Congress in such large numbers that everyone can see just what an addition to the wealth of the Nation they constitute.

RELATIVE GROWTH OF OLD AND NEW IMMIGRATION.

It seems to me also that in the position which he has assumed the President has failed to contrast the conditions existing prior to 1882 and the conditions since that time in respect of the class and the quality of those who have sought our shores. Had he examined the records and studied them carefully he would have found that in a period of 62 years, extending from 1820 to 1882, 96 per cent of the entire body of immigrants admitted to the United States came from northern and western Europe, and that they constitute what the Immigration Commission has termed the "old immigration," to distinguish it from that new type of immigration which has been coming in such large bodies since that time.

Let me contrast that immigration coming from northern and western Europe during that period of 62 years, numbering 9,578,000—an immigration which, as I have said, was made up so largely of families and which came with the purpose to make homes in this country, to better their condition, and to cast their lot with us in every respect—let me contrast that, if you please, with the immigration which has followed in the last 33 years, a period only half as long as the other, during which time we have received 19,526,163 immigrants. Of this vast number only 7,566,000, or 38 per cent, came from the nations of northern and western Europe, while 11,960,000, or 61.2 per cent of the whole, came from Russia, Austria-Hungary, the Balkan States, Italy, and some of the smaller nations or principalities of southern and eastern Europe.

CONDITIONS WHICH INVITED THE NEW IMMIGRATION.

Have the latter class come with the purpose of making the United States their residence? Have they come with the purpose to assume the responsibilities of government, as well as to enjoy its advantages? Have they brought their wives? Have they brought their children? Are they actuated by a desire to enter into our life and to find their development under American institutions? In other words, have they sought the soil, or are they the denizens of the cities, belonging to a floating population, unrecognized by the permanent population except as so many labor units? Some have; some have not. Let us see about it.

I have already spoken of the large number of the old immigration that sought the soil and opened up farms. What about the new? If you will examine the census of 1910 you will find that during a period of 30 years, extending from 1880 to 1909, inclusive, we received of the new immigration from Austria-

Hungary 2,850,222 immigrants; from Italy, 2,801,976; and from Russia, 2,134,100; making a total of 7,786,218.

Where have they gone? What has been their occupation? The census enumerators tell us that in the year 1909 they found only nine-tenths of 1 per cent of these nationalities operating farms in the United States, either as owners or as tenants. Think of it! After 30 years' inflow of these nationalities less than 1 per cent of the men could be found operating farms in the United States. It indicates but one thing, that these millions have gone to the great centers of population; that they came here as common laborers, to take advantage of our superior conditions, to live low, hoard their savings, and eventually, in large numbers, to return to the countries from whence they came. They came here because of the phenomenal growth in the manufactures and in the mining industries of the United States.

Prior to 1860 manufactures had not flourished in the United States. The value of the output of our mills for that year was only about $2,000,000,000; but through the confidence inspired by the result of the Civil War and by a belief in the legislative policies adopted by the American Congress, manufactures were encouraged, and in 1870 our output was equal to that of France. At the end of another 10 years it was equal to that of Great Britain or of Germany. In another 10 years, in 1890, the products of our mills were equal to those of Great Britain and France combined, and in 1900 they amounted to more than the combined manufactured products of Great Britain, Germany, and France. Since that time, in the last 10 years, the increase in the manufactured products of the United States alone has been more than seven thousand millions of dollars, while between 1880 and 1909, a period of 29 years, the products of our mines and quarries advanced from $252,000,000 to $1,238,000,000 annually.

It is unnecessary that I should go further into statistics. This growth in manufactures and mining has been phenomenal—something that the world has never witnessed in any other nation. As early as 1870 it was known that labor was demanded in these industries, and this new immigration began to flow into the United States to supply the demand. It naturally went to the seats of the industries. Since that time every succeeding influx of immigrants has followed that of the same nationality which came before; and you may lay it down as a rule, I think, they will continue to do so. They come to a large extent in consequence of letters which they have received from their friends in this country. That has been observed among all nationalities, and it has continued from year to year, until you can demonstrate the fact that wherever the first from a country or from a portion of a country settled others from that same section have also settled in the succeeding years.

To illustrate what I am saying and as a proof of the fact, let me say that 80 per cent of all the immigrants admitted in the year when a record was kept had in their possession when they landed railroad tickets from New York to the point of their destination, which had been sent to them from the United States, presumably by their friends, with whom they had been in correspondence. That explains why one generation follows another of the same nationality in seeking homes in this country. Substantially 94 per cent of all who were admitted during a given year gave as a reason for coming that they were to join friends or relatives. That is an additional circumstance indicating that the proposition I have made is correct.

MOVEMENT OF THE NEW IMMIGRATION IN THE UNITED STATES.

Where has this large immigration come from, and where has it gone? I have indicated in a general manner that it has gone to the cities, and that is true. I have in my hand a table showing the countries from which immigrants came for the fiscal year 1913, ending on June 30, from which I find that the whole immigration of that year amounted to 1,197,892. Of that vast number 899,308 were of the new immigration. Only 263,226 represented the old immigration, and only 35,358 represented that coming from the Asiatic countries. Of this immigration only 13,469 out of 1,197,000 were professional men, and only 160,108 out of that entire body were skilled laborers. All of the rest, 1,024,315, were either unskilled laborers or without occupation. That represents, of course, women and children.

Where did the immigration of 1913 go? I have chosen this particular year as indicative of others. I will speak of the immigration movement as a whole later on. Of the 1,197,000 immigrants of 1913, 168,952 went to the New England States; 574,633 went to the Middle Atlantic States, New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey; 265,355 went to the east North Central States, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin. So, it appears that 1,008,940 out of the entire number went to the States east of the Mississippi River, north of the Ohio, and north of Maryland. Almost the entire body, you may say more than 75 per cent of the whole, went to an area that constitutes only about 13½ per cent of the area of continental United States. That is the area in which, in round numbers, 75 if not 80 per cent of all the wages earned in manufactures in the United States are paid. It represents the district in which from 75 to 80 per cent of the manufactured products of the United States are produced; and it is to that area, east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio, that the great bulk of this new immigration has gone.

Mr. President, I have full tables upon this subject, which I ask leave to insert.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Emigrants have departed from our shores for the countries comprising the "new immigration" to the number of 229,194 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913; for the countries comprising the "old immigration" to the number of 74,572 (of this number, 46,981 went to Canada) and 3,301 to Asiatic countries.

Of these, only 13,469 were professional men, 160,108 were skilled laborers, and 1,024,315 were unskilled or without occupation.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me to give notice of a motion?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. In just a moment. I want to finish one table of figures here. It will take me only a moment, if the Senator will wait.

RELATIVE INCREASE OF NEW RACES WHO DWELL IN CITIES.

The impress which this new immigration is making upon the character of the population of the United States is very clearly shown by the census of 1910, covering the census years between the years 1900 and 1910, from which it appears that there was an actual decrease in the number of foreign-born population of the United States which came from Germany of 11.1 per cent, a decrease in those born in Ireland of 16.3 per cent, and a decrease of those born in Wales of 11.8 per cent. On the other hand, what was the increase coming from the nationalities of the new immigration? It was as follows: Those from Greece, 1,089 per cent; those from Italy, 175.5 per cent; those from Russia and from Finland, 170.4 per cent; those from Austria, 139.2 per cent; Hungary, 240.1 per cent; and of this vast number 75 per cent went to the cities of the Nation.

Now I yield.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment to give notice of a motion?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I had yielded to the Senator from New York. I will be glad, of course, to——

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment to give a notice?

Mr. O'GORMAN. The motion I have to make will take only a moment. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I move that we take a recess——

The VICE PRESIDENT. We might just as well know "where we are at" right now. The Chair has been in the habit of treating Senators on each side of the Chamber courteously. They have been in the habit of doing things which were not provided for by rules, but have grown out of custom. It has been done as much by one side as by the other. All this day Senators have been coming up and serving notice that they desired to be recognized, and the Chair has recognized them in regular order. The Chair promised to recognize the Senator from Tennessee, and the Chair does not recognize the Senator from New York for the purpose of making a motion.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Does the Senator from Vermont now yield to me, then?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have no objection to yielding to the Senator. I do not want to be taken off the floor; that is all.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I send to the desk and ask to have read notice of a motion I intend to make.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, what becomes of my motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair had not recognized the Senator from New York for the purpose of making a motion.

Mr. O'GORMAN. With great deference, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no appeal from recognition by the Chair. There is no occasion to have any trouble about this proceeding; it is just, fair, and decent. The Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] gives notice of his intention to offer a motion to amend the rules as follows:

Insert after the words "to lay on the table," in Rule XXII, the following:

"Any Senator arising in his place and asserting that in his opinion an attempt is being made on the floor of the Senate to obstruct, hinder, or delay the right of the Senate to proceed to a vote, the Chair shall, without permitting any debate thereon, put the question to the Senate, 'Is it the sense of the Senate that an attempt is being made to obstruct, hinder, or delay a vote?' And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative, then it shall be in order, to the exclusion of the consideration of all other questions, for any Senator to move to fix a time for voting on the pending bill or resolution and all amendments thereto, and the said motion shall be decided without debate: Provided, however, That the time fixed in said motion for taking the vote on the pending bill or resolution and all amendments thereto shall be at least two calendar days after the day on which said motion is made, during which period no one Senator shall occupy more than one hour of time."

Mr. GALLINGER. It will go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over under the rule.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Do I understand the ruling of the Chair to be that under the circumstances the Chair will not entertain a motion from a Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will entertain a motion now.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. I should like to know whether he has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. THOMPSON. I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 40, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 12, 1915, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 11, 1915.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Increase, O Lord, our devotion in the things which make for righteousness in the soul that faith may abound, hope increase, and love bind us together more closely in our homes, our friendships, and as citizens of a great Republic, that we may march on under the white banner of peace toward that kingdom for which we pray that it may come in all fullness, and Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21318, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21318, the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21318, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21318) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Executive Mansion: For ordinary care, repair, and refurnishing of Executive Mansion, and for purchase, maintenance, and driving of horses and vehicles for official purposes, to be expended by contract or otherwise, as the President may determine, $35,000.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The chairman of the committee the other day made some comment about economies of the Committee on Appropriations which I at that time questioned. I have looked the matter up, and I find the facts rather confirm the statement of the gentleman. I find that in the session 1914–15 the appropriations made by Congress amounted to $1,116,000,000, whereas the estimates which were sent in amounted to $1,152,000,000; so in that year the estimates exceeded the appropriations by $36,500,000. In the year preceding the appropriations were $1,098,000,000, while the estimates were $1,150,000,000; so in that year the estimates exceeded the appropriations by $51,500,000. In the year preceding that the appropriations were $1,019,000,000, while the estimates were $1,040,000,000; so the estimates then exceeded the appropriations by $21,000,000. In the year preceding that, 1911–12, the appropriations were $1,026,600,000, while the estimates were $1,026,200,000; so that there was a difference of $400,000, and for the first time the appropriations exceeded the estimates. In the year preceding that, 1910–11, the appropriations were $1,027,900,000 and the estimates were $1,028,100,000; an excess of estimates over appropriations of $200,000. This indicates that year by year for the last five years the estimates have been increasing over the appropriations, until for the last year the estimates were $36,000,000 more than the appropriations. This confirms the statement that the legislative is more economical than the executive department, and yet, if you think of it for a moment, it does not really reflect much credit on either Congress or the Executive. It does not show that there is much real economy in either branch of the Government, and under our present system of passing appropriation bills and the present system of making estimates that must be so, because the executive departments need some reform just as much as Congress does.

According to the present system each department sends in its estimates, not to the head of the Government, the responsible head—the President—but each department sends in its estimates simply to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Treasury transmits them to Congress, and they do not go to the President at all, I presume, unless under the circumstances prescribed by the Smith amendment, where the estimates of expenses exceed the estimated revenues; then the President is called upon to make some recommendation to Congress to relieve the discrepancy. Otherwise, unless the President wishes to go into this enormous detail of figures—and I suspect that no Presidents have ever done so—there is no head who looks into the estimates of expenditures and tries to reduce them or to see whether they are proportionate to the condition of the Treasury.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Upon what theory are we proceeding that would suggest that the President should see what the appropriations should be, whether they should be higher or lower?

Mr. GILLETT. Well, I do not say he should. Very likely he has too much else to do there to study these figures. But I think it would be wise that there should be somebody who has the responsibility and who should compare the estimates and appropriations and before they come here suggest what is desirable and what is not, but under the law now each head of a department simply recommends what he wants, because each head of a department has a motive in getting just as large an appropriation for his department as he can.

Mr. FESS. Why would it not be better for us to have the budget system?

Mr. GILLETT. I agree entirely that it would. What I am suggesting now is along that line, that there is need of a budget system and that there is some need of the executive as well as the legislative branch contributing its efforts toward a budget system. I am simply illustrating now that at neither end of the Avenue is there any arrangement which conduces to economy, because, as I say, each head of a department wants to get all he can and each committee has something of the same disposition. I do not say it in the line of criticism of the departments, because I think it is not only natural but human.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. It is not only natural but it is commendable that the head of a department should have that disposition, because I suppose every head of a big department and every head of a bureau under him sees before him possibilities of doing good in his department for the country at large. If he does not see such possibilties, if he is not a man of enthusiasm who, when he gets into a department, constantly sees the outlook broadening and reaches out for methods by which he can make improvements, I do not think he is a proper man for his department. Such enthusiasm and ambition and desire to broaden the activities of his department is a necessary qualification of a good Cabinet officer.

But while he sees these opportunities there must somewhere be another agency which shall compare the expense with the resulting benefits and also with the condition of the Treasury. So that it seems to me it is wise and proper and to be expected that the different heads of departments and heads of bureaus will always be reaching out for money and reaching out to enlarge their functions; and then it is the duty of the other department—it is our duty—to look over the whole field and say where they shall be checked and where it is extravagant and where it is not. So that simply points to the result which I meant to bring out, that as at present constituted there is nowhere, there is not in the executive department, anything which tends to check expenses, but, on the contrary, the whole tendency is to increase expenses. And I say it without any reflection upon the individuals; but it is simply a part of our system. And in the House and in the Senate a similar system prevails, so that we as individuals are always wanting to increase expenditures, and everybody is looking for an appropriation, because all our districts are pressing upon us. So everywhere in the executive department, which makes the estimates, and in the legislative, which passes upon them, there is a constant impulse toward expenditure and no impulse toward economy except what the committee may have for the good of the public service.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GILLETT. I do.

Mr. GOULDEN. It seems from the statement just made that no one short of the Congress has the power to examine into and determine the necessity of the various estimates made by the different departments.

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, yes; the President has the power, but it is not in practice part of his duty.

Mr. GOULDEN. Let me ask this question: Would the various committees on expenditures in the different departments created by Congress have any power to investigate as to the estimates made by the various departments over which they are supposed to exercise at least some authority?

Mr. GILLETT. You mean the committees on expenditures in the departments?

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. I suppose they have that power.

Mr. GOULDEN. Then those committees could be quite useful, it seems to me, to investigate and examine into these things, and——

Mr. GILLETT. I will agree to that——

Mr. GOULDEN. And would almost take the place of the budget system. At least they would act as a check, and tend to keep the expenses down to the actual needs of the Government.

Mr. GILLETT. They could do that, but they do not.

Mr. GOULDEN. I wanted to know if they have the authority, in the judgment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, for one I am obliged to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] for collecting these figures, and it will be observed that they confirm the suggestion I made a few days ago, that the estimates from the various departments for a number of years have been considerably in excess of the actual appropriations made by Congress.

I think the question which is under consideration as to how to bring about real economy in the administration of the Government and the apportioning of appropriations is a very vital one, and I think the Smith amendment is in the right direction. If the Executive and the executive departments in the first instance were expected to and actually did make some serious comparison between the anticipated revenues and the anticipated expenditures and should send their estimates to Congress, the one having reference to the other, that would be beneficial, so far as a contribution can be made to this subject of economy from the Executive and the executive departments.

On the other hand, as I believe I stated a day or two ago, the real responsibility in these matters is in the last analysis upon the Congress, where the Constitution has placed it. I think it is placed wisely upon the Congress, and that the Constitution has been the result of the experience of governments for many centuries, that the representative branch of the Government and that of the short-term representatives, comparing with our House of Representatives, should be the body that initiates revenue and appropriation measures.

Now, as a practical way of holding down appropriations in the legislative body, in Congress, I believe that a suggestion made a few days ago has a good deal of practical merit. If there could be a general advisory committee on expenditures, consisting, perhaps, of the chairmen of the appropriating committees of this House and the chairmen of the appropriating committees of the Senate, it would be beneficial, because despite whatever we may do here, unless it receives some cooperation at the other end of the Capitol, we find ourselves constantly in controversies over these matters, and the House ideas are increased uniformly at the other end of the Capitol. If there could be an advisory committee of that kind, which could take up the estimates of expenditures and the estimates of the revenues for the coming fiscal year during each Congress and then render a report, upon which they would make what in their judgment would be a proper apportionment of the expenditures for the coming fiscal year, which would be advisory to Congress, it would at least give us something to work to, and while in the end Congress would itself determine these questions, we would have before us constantly the result of a very capable committee advising both Houses of Congress as to how the apportionment of the appropriations for any fiscal year should be made with reference to revenues.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BATHRICK. I am very much interested in the gentleman's outline of the means of curtailing unnecessary appropriations, and I think his judgment is very sound in the matter. But I would like to get into the RECORD here, very briefly, if the gentleman will permit, the fact that last year I introduced a bill in the House designed to have a new committee authorized, known as the "buying and selling committee," the purpose being to coordinate our buying facilities, which I think would operate also to a very great degree toward reducing the expenditure of money, which is a coordinate branch of appropriations.

Mr. MARTIN. That, I think, is a very good suggestion in the interest of economical expenditures, but of course it does not meet the general problem which we are constantly facing, namely, in every session of Congress to keep a proper relation between the expenditures and receipts for the fiscal year for which we are providing on a basis that will make the Public Treasury always sound, and not bankrupt, when we come to the actual expenditures of the moneys of the people. And the mischief of our present system, in my judgment, is that there is nowhere a body, either in this House or in the other House, or what would be more efficient, to my mind, a combined committee of both, that takes into serious consideration the question of expenditures and receipts.

I do not think the problem would be solved by giving any particular committee of this House further powers than it now has. I think it must be in the nature of things a union of both Houses in the sober effort to compare and adjust probable revenues with probable expenditures and the meeting of the problem; and I think the advice of that sort of a committee, while it would not be final, would be observed at both ends of the Capitol with a great deal of seriousness.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment, I would like to talk a few minutes in regard to the survey of the Alaskan coast at this time. I will be frank with the gentleman; I expect to leave the city by the middle of the afternoon to go to Boston for the purpose of speaking to-morrow night.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that the gentleman will not be present when the item is reached.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Probably not. It is on page 133, and I will ask permission to speak on it at this time.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is going to talk on the subject?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am going to try to.

Mr. DIES. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think I can get through in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 10 minutes to address the committee on an item under the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlemen of the committee for the courtesy. The item I refer to is on page 133:

For surveys and necessary resurveys of coasts on the Pacific Ocean under the jurisdiction of the United States, including $50,000 to be immediately available, $200,000.

NECESSITY FOR SURVEY OF PACIFIC COAST WATERS.

The President, in his message at the beginning of this Congress called attention to the neglect in making suitable appropriations for the survey and the proper lighting of Pacific coast waters, and particularly along the coast of Alaska. In so doing the President deserves the thanks of the people of the United States and all humanity. He especially deserves, and has received, the thanks and praise of the people of the Pacific coast for thus bringing to the attention of Congress this important matter.

The whole Nation owes a debt of gratitude to Secretary Redfield for the forcible and persistent way in which he has brought this matter to the attention of Congress and to the attention of the country. Our neglect to take steps to increase the safety of navigation in the waters of the Alaskan coast can only be characterized as shameful and discreditable, for, notwithstanding all the efforts of the Secretary of Commerce and of the Members of the Washington delegation, Congress at the last session refused to make any appropriation for this purpose whatever.

The waters of Alaska are among the most dangerous of all the seas, and, to the everlasting discredit of this great Nation, which annually pours out its countless millions, these waters are the poorest lighted and the most inadequately surveyed of all the navigable waters of the world. This is the universal testimony of all seafaring men who are familiar with the Alaskan coast. This neglect of this great Nation of these waters is most graphically written in many tragedies. Since Russia sold us that Territory more than 280 ships have gone down in Alaskan waters, over 400 lives have been lost, and more than $12,700,000 worth of property destroyed. Most of these frightful disasters have been within recent years. I have here a list of these tragedies of the sea, giving the date of the wreck, the place, and the loss in lives and property. This list, long as it is, gives only those vessels that were totally wrecked, and even that is not complete. I have no list of the many accidents where vessels were badly damaged but not completely destroyed. I shall insert in the RECORD this list of vessels, that Congress and the whole country may look upon it and behold the result of our negligence. I will insert it in the RECORD, where it will ever "cry out, trumpet-tongued, against the deep damnation" of the indifference and the ignorance and the criminal neglect of this great and rich Nation. It is, indeed, a gruesome list. The one I hold is most appropriately printed upon black paper. It is a long list of disaster, destruction, and death. I hope it may burn its way into the memory of every Member of this House so deeply that all the speeches and selfish and ignorant cries about economy that may hereafter be made against these appropriations will not dim it.

CONGRESS NOW ALONE TO BLAME.

No adequate steps have been taken to lessen the menace to life and property in these most dangerous seas. Each year the death toll increases as our trade with Alaska increases. For this present criminal neglect Congress alone is responsible. Secretary Redfield has done his part courageously and well. He has pointed out definitely and with a detail of humiliating and discreditable facts that none disputes where the trouble lies and what should be done. He has asked for money that the Alaskan coast may be properly surveyed and lighted, in order that life and property may be reasonably well protected. He points out definitely how this money should be used. He does not ask for a vast sum of millions, but asks only for a comparatively insignificant amount when compared with our aggregate expenses or when compared with the appropriations we make for many other purposes that are neither cases of emergency nor of great necessity.

The President, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Representatives from the Pacific coast, both in the House and Senate, have now so clearly brought the facts before Congress that ignorance can no longer be pleaded in extenuation if we longer neglect to make the proper appropriation for the protection of the Alaskan coast. If we longer refuse to make these necessary appropriations, then Congress is willfully responsible for the tragedies that will occur through our refusal.

EQUIPMENT.

You may ask, Is the Government doing anything in the way of surveying and charting the Alaskan waters? Very little, but it is no fault of the department. Congress has refused to give them suitable equipment, or even to make sufficient appropriations to adequately carry on the work with such equipment as they now have.

What of the outfit that this richest of all the nations furnishes the Coast and Geodetic Survey to work in the stormiest and roughest of all the waters of the world along more than 25,000 miles of Alaskan coast? It is with a feeling of shame for Congress and the country that I relate some of the humiliating facts.

I wish I had the power to draw you an adequate word picture of the antiquated, dilapidated, rotten, and rusted rendezvous of cockroaches and rats that are called Coast and Geodetic Survey vessels that we have compelled the department to use for this work.

There are three of these vessels, and I am pleased to report that one of them is so old and unseaworthy that it could not be taken to the Pacific coast and so remains, much to our profit, on the Atlantic. There are two of these aged sea coffins that even "the ancient mariner" would have considered antique, on the Pacific coast. Both of these vessels were built over 40 years ago. Their age only commands reverence and respect. One is called the McArthur. I will attempt to describe it, for the other is like unto it in decrepitude, decay, and approaching dissolution. The description of the one is a description of the other.

The McArthur has been in use by the Government over 39 years. It cost $55,000. It has cost the Government to keep this hoary old craft in repair for the last 10 years $31,234. This expenditure did not make it efficient. It simply kept it from sinking. It can be used only in quiet waters and is dangerous in a heavy sea. For this reason it can be used only a small portion of the time in even attempting to work. This is also true of the other vessel. Neither of these vessels has wireless equipment or a cold-storage plant or a condensing outfit for fresh water or bath or adequate quarters for either officers or crew. The officers live, eat, and sleep and do their work all in one room. After the evening meal is served hammocks are swung above the dining table; in these the officers sleep. Two petty officers sleep in one room 8½ by 4 feet; three men sleep in another room 5½ by 11 feet; three sleep in another room 12 by 5 feet; three in another room 5½ by 7. Eighteen men are provided with three washbasins. If this was a commercial vessel, the Government inspectors would not permit it to go to sea, and the quarantine officers of any port would put its commander in prison and order a cremation of this floating pesthouse to protect the public health.

If this symbol of our country's greatness is anywhere matched upon all the "salted seas," it is by its ancient companion in decrepitude and inefficiency the Gedney. The Gedney is of the same age as the McArthur and in practically the same condition. It cost $63,400, and the repairs for the last 10 years made upon it have cost $21,600. Her equipment is similar to that of the McArthur and the arrangements for the officers and men practically the same. Of course with all the large expenditures for repairs these ships have never been fit to properly or economically do the work for which they are assigned.

MENACE TO NAVIGATION.

The waters of Alaska are deep, but during many months of the year they have but little daylight, and much of the time are beset by storms and fog. All these deep waters are filled with sharp, pinnacle rocks, many of them coming near the surface. These rocks are the greatest and most deadly of all menaces to navigation. But few of these many rocks along the Alaskan coast have been located. They can not be found with an ordinary lead line. Often the lead line will show a few feet from one of these dangerous points, coming almost to the surface, 50 or even 150 feet of water. Our charts report many fathoms of water at the very spot where many ships have struck one of these pinnacle points and gone to the bottom. A typical case is that of the California, in the very center of the channel, where the Government chart shows 60 feet of water. The California struck one of these rocks, her whole bottom was torn out, and she sank in three minutes. The vessel, the cargo, and 31 lives were lost. The Pennsylvania, the Armeria, a Government vessel, and many others have met the same dreadful fate in the same way. There is as yet known to men but two ways to locate these rocks—one by striking them with a vessel and the other with a wire drag. The first method has been generally followed in Alaska, and for the following of this method Congress is largely responsible. This method has cost millions of dollars and many lives. The second plan would cost but a few thousand dollars, but Congress, in its wonderful wisdom, still insists on the first method. It refused last year to appropriate anything for a wire drag.

In Tongass Narrows alone to-day are found the Potter Rock, the Ohio Rock, the Idaho Rock, and the California Rock. Each of these rocks bears the name of the doomed ship that struck them and went to the bottom. Each of these rocks is a gravestone telling of disaster and death. Each of them is a costly monument proclaiming the ignorance, the indifference, and the neglect of Congress.

Last year, out of money that was badly needed for other purposes, a small amount was used for working a wire drag in one of the main channels of navigation between Alaska and Seattle, a channel through which approximately 2,000 passages were made last year. The vessels passing through this strip of water carried last season over 43,000 passengers. A portion of this main channel of navigation, 40 miles long and from three-fourths of a mile to 5 miles wide, was surveyed by a wire drag. The result was appalling. In that comparatively small space of one of the most traveled highways of navigation 14 dangerous pinnacle rocks were found. The presence of none of these was known before. These rocks rise abruptly from a depth of from 40 to 600 feet. In six cases these rocks were less than 8 feet from the surface, and in no case more than 30 feet.

With these facts before us, of the immense number of rocks found in so limited an area, and when we remember the vast coast line of Alaska of more than 25,000 miles, it is no wonder that so many vessels have been wrecked in these waters, but the wonder is that so few have gone to the bottom.

With these facts now called to our attention specifically in the report of the Secretary of Commerce, with the President urging the necessity upon us of these appropriations in the name of commerce and humanity, if Congress should again refuse to give the necessary sums for this purpose we would be little short of being personally responsible for the awful tragedies that would be certain to occur hereafter as the result of our neglect. Last year, be it said to our everlasting shame, we refused to appropriate $40,000 to be used in operating a wire drag in these most dangerous of all waters to locate these pinnacle rocks, the greatest of all menaces to navigation.

In the name of economy we refused to appropriate $40,000 to protect $67,000,000 worth of commerce and the ships that carried it that traversed these waters. Last year we refused in the name of economy to appropriate $40,000 to protect from these hidden dangers the lives of more than 43,000 passengers. Last year in the holy name of economy we refused this small appropriation, but in the same bill we appropriated $400,000 to purchase additional land for the site of a public building in Richmond, Va. Forty-three thousand lives, $67,000,000 worth of commerce, and many ships could wait for protection, but even the virtuous cry of economy could not prevail against the terrible emergency for an immediate appropriation of $400,000 to buy additional land for a public building in this southern city.

In this same bill, while $40,000 was denied to protect life and property in the waters of Alaska, $50,000 was appropriated to erect a monument to the memory of some great man whose name I do not now recall and whose name not one-half of the American people ever heard. This was another emergency against which holy economy could not prevail. What monstrous deeds are committed in the name of economy! Fifty thousand dollars to erect a monument to the memory of one that is dead, but nothing for the protection of the 43,000 living!

I make no criticism of the appropriation for the erection of this monument to honor one of our heroic dead; I make no criticism of the appropriation at Richmond; but doing these things, and then refusing in the name of economy to give a penny to protect life and property in the waters of Alaska, and to do this in the name of economy, is what I am criticizing. It is such performances as this that make many doubt our sincerity or our sanity.

AMOUNT NEEDED.

But what would it cost to provide a wire drag to locate the dangerous rocks in these dangerous waters and bring reasonable protection to life and property? It would cost about $50,000 per year. And how long would it take to do this work and clear the main passages? Not more than two years. Yet, notwithstanding these facts, last year Congress absolutely refused to appropriate a single dollar for this purpose.

The total amount asked for by the Department of Commerce to be used by the Coast and Geodetic Survey in this work on the Pacific coast, including the construction of three vessels, one of them a lighthouse tender, would be about $800,000, a sum less than the value of the ships belonging to the Government that have been lost in Alaskan waters within the last four years. Leave out entirely all questions of commerce; leave out the value of human life endangered; consider only the protection to Government vessels, and still it would be economy for us to survey and light Alaskan waters for this purpose only.

The Department of Commerce has asked for an immediate appropriation of $800,000, to be used in this work. Every cent of it should be appropriated at this session. No other appropriation that comes before this House is so urgently needed, except only those necessary to keep the departments of Government running. We are expending millions of dollars to construct railroads in Alaska. We are trying to develop the wonderful resources of that wonderful Territory. Our commerce is rapidly increasing; each year more ships navigate these dangerous waters; but so far we have viewed with indifference the losses of property and life along the stormy coasts of Alaska.

THE ECONOMY OF IGNORANCE.

Leave out of the question the fact that millions of dollars' worth of property and many ships have been lost because the character of vessels that are furnished to the Coast and Geodetic Survey has made it impossible to perform the same work that would have been done by modern vessels, and still the keeping in service of these old ships by the Government, owing to the heavy repairs necessary and their unfitness, has made it the grossest and most inexcusable extravagance. These vessels have been a continual source of waste of public money and have given no adequate return.

The refusal to replace with new and modern vessels espepecially designed for the work they should perform those ancient derelicts now used, those floating palaces of a nation's generosity that declare the glory of the great Republic and the serene wisdom of Congress; the refusal to provide the best and most modern means of surveying these Alaskan waters; the refusal to properly light these stormy shores; the refusal to furnish a proper vessel for the Lighthouse Service—this neglect and refusal to give appropriations necessary to protect the great commerce of the Alaskan seas and the lives of those who must traverse them is the most striking, shameful, and costly example in our Nation's history of the economy of ignorance.

Mr. MARTIN. How near the surface do these pinnacle rocks come of which you have spoken?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. All these 14 were within 30 feet, and I think, with the exception of perhaps 2, were within less than 20 feet, and most of them from 8 to 10 feet below the surface.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. After these pinnacle rocks are discovered, what is done with them? Are they charted?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. As soon as these pinnacle rocks are located they are marked with buoys, where that is practicable, and in some places with a light; sometimes they are removed, but the Secretary of Commerce has said that in some instances, even after they have located these rocks, they have been unable to mark them, because these old vessels to which I have referred were in such condition that it was not possible for them to take the material to these rocks or to carry the buoys to them for the purpose of marking them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ESCH. Has the gentleman called attention to the fact that in the list of vessels lost there were two Government vessels, one a revenue cutter and the other a lighthouse tender, within the last four years, and the loss to the Government was $375,000, or almost enough to make this wire-drag survey.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I did; that is the fact.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is it not practicable to remove some of these rocks by blasting, after they have been discovered?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I presume that would be practicable in a great many cases, where they were small and close to the surface. That would be the easiest way in such a case, but the great purpose is to locate them. That is the principal object.

And I just want to say this in conclusion, that I want to thank the Committee on Appropriations for the courtesy they have exteaded to me and to the other members of the Washington delegation in giving us hearings in relation to this matter.

I also want to express my thanks for the appropriation they have given us in the bill. I am not disposed to criticize the committee. I am not complaining. But I wish they could make the appropriation larger.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman in his prefatory remarks referred to an invention which I assume was patented by the inventor. I rise for information.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I did not intend to convey the impression that it was patented. What we want is the money to operate one or more of these wire drags to locate these rocks.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the wire drag has been in operation in the Northwest for years.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; and on the Atlantic coast also.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is surprising that its use has not been extended to Alaskan waters.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. But when I was interrupted I was saying I did not intend to criticize the Committee on Appropriations for the size of the appropriation which has been reported. The committee have at least given us something. As I understand, it will enable two crews to operate these wire drags. And I especially want to express my appreciation to the chairman of the committee. While I do not always agree with the distinguished gentleman, I recognize that he occupies one of the most difficult positions in this House, and I recognize that this country is leaning very heavily upon the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I take pleasure in saying that when it comes to integrity and ability he is the peer of any man on either side of this House. [Applause.]

I have sometimes listened with surprise and a feeling of regret when some of my friends on the Democratic side have criticized him. They ought at least to leave that to us. I think, when you look back over the two years just gone and in the years to come when you take a retrospect, that you will find that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has done as much for his country and for his party as any man in the Democratic Party. His position is a hard one. But he performs it with courage, great ability, and absolute integrity. [Applause.] I take pleasure in paying him this merited tribute.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. I want to ask the gentleman the name of the old, antiquated arrangement on the Atlantic coast. What is the name of that vessel? I should know it, but confess I do not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not recall the name of it, but I know it is the oldest one of the three. We did not get it, because it could not be brought around to the Pacific.

Mr. GOULDEN. It must be in much worse condition than the two on the Pacific coast.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I will insert the list of lost ships, and also "An appeal to Congress from the steamship companies of Puget Sound and Alaska."

[From the Pacific Fisherman, Seattle, Wash., November, 1914.]

SECRETARY REDFIELD SEEKS TO MAKE ALASKA WATERS SAFER.

Never before have the fishing, shipping, and allied interests of the Pacific coast been so worked up as they have by the energetic fight which Secretary of Commerce Redfield is waging to secure from Congress sufficient money to provide the absolutely necessary aids to navigation and wire drags for rocks and other hidden dangers, in order to make the waters of Alaska reasonably safe for the large fleets of fishing, commercial, and Government vessels which annually frequent those extremely dangerous waters, and the Secretary has won the admiration and respect of these interests by his resolute refusal to accept as final the defeat of his plans at the last session of Congress and his determination to carry on the fight at the coming winter session.

The chief obstacle the Secretary has met in his fight has been the indifference and also the gross ignorance which prevails generally amongst Congressmen and others as to the local conditions in Alaska and the immense extent of the trade which has been developed with our northern territory.

The customhouse records of Alaska show that during the fiscal year 1913, 220 American vessels with an aggregate tonnage of 132,283 tons, and 85 foreign vessels with an aggregate tonnage of 65,112 tons, or a grand total of 305 vessels with a tonnage of 197,395 tons, entered at the customhouses of this District. The clearances during the same period were 190 American vessels with a tonnage of 84,628 tons, and 84 foreign vessels with a tonnage of 66,318 tons, or a grand total of 274 vessels with a tonnage of 150,946 tons. These represent mainly commercial vessels as distinct from fishing and Government vessels.

The total value of the domestic and foreign merchandise shipped in vessels to Alaska during the same period amounted to $22,461,618, while the total exports from Alaska amounted to $45,110,251.

In 1913 the various fishing fleets operating in Alaska waters amounted in the aggregate to 2,221 vessels, with a total net tonnage of 143,078, and valued at $8,013,315. The home ports of these vessels are either in Alaska or in Seattle, Tacoma, and Bellingham, in Washington; Astoria and Portland, Oreg.; or San Francisco, Cal., which makes every part of the coast vitally interested in anything which may adversely affect them.

The Government vessels which operated in Alaska at least a portion of the year 1913 were 5 revenue cutters, 1 lighthouse tender, 1 naval vessel, 7 Coast and Geodetic Survey vessels, 1 Bureau of Fisheries protection vessel, and a chartered vessel for the Seal Island work.

The list given below shows that the Government has lost in Alaska waters two revenue cutters—the Perry (1910) and the Tahoma (1914)—and the lighthouse tender Armeria (1913). These vessels, including outfits, were valued at $860,000, a sum which would have gone far toward furnishing sufficient aids to have made the greater part of the waters fairly safe.

In the waters of southeast Alaska are a number of aids to navigation, but they are grossly inadequate for the purpose and there are still many sections where there are very few or no aids. In the great central Alaska region are but two lighthouses, very few small lights, and a beggarly number of buoys. In Bering Sea there is one lighthouse—at the entrance to Unimak Pass—and almost no other aids. In Bristol Bay the fishing companies have had to place their own buoys to mark the channels in the bays and rivers. In the Arctic there are no aids to navigation. And all this, despite the fact that we have owned Alaska since 1867, a period of 47 years.

It is small wonder that in waters which improvident Congresses have failed to safeguard there should be a heavy annual toll exacted of the shipping which frequents them. The record of wrecks in Alaska waters has never been accurately kept, but the list given below shows a portion, at least, of the large number lost. This list includes only the vessels which proved total losses, and does not include the vastly larger list of vessels which met disaster in Alaska, but yet were enabled to escape total loss. Owing to incomplete statistical data it has been impossible to show the heavy loss of life which resulted from the wrecks shown in the list, but it is positively known that in the case of 19 wrecks out of the total of 281 shown, 449 lives were sacrificed:

AN APPEAL TO CONGRESS FROM THE STEAMSHIP COMPANIES OF PUGET SOUND AND ALASKA.

AN ARGUMENT FOR WIRE-DRAG SURVEY OF ALASKAN WATERS, SUITABLE STEAMSHIPS FOR UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY, CHARTING ALASKAN WATERCOURSES, ESTABLISHMENT OF AIDS TO NAVIGATION, AND CREATION OF OFFICE OF SUPERVISING INSPECTOR FOR PUGET SOUND AND ALASKA.

SEATTLE, WASH., 1914.

To Senators and Representatives in Congress.

GENTLEMEN: Actuated by the urgency of the case, we, the undersigned, representing the steamship companies engaged in Alaskan trade, herewith respectfully present for your careful reading some brief and pertinent facts relating to the need for aids to navigation on the coast of Alaska and the proper survey of its dangerous channels. We ask that you give this communication that attention which we feel the importance of the subject demands.

It is not our intention to go into detail at this time, for the annual report of the Secretary of Commerce, a thoughtful document covering the situation in full, has but recently been published, and no doubt read by Members of Congress generally. We indorse that report for its plain straightforward statement of facts, and we desire to emphasize the need of certain work being carried out in the resurvey of Alaskan waters and the establishment of aids to navigation from the viewpoint of those engaged in operating steamships along that coast.

Alaska has a rugged, rocky coast line of some 26,000 miles, or relatively a greater length of coast line than the United States proper. Its annual commerce has reached a total of $70,000,000 in one calendar year, and will steadily increase from now on, with the prospect of a much greater activity in steamship operations. This is due to the proposed plan of the United States Government to build a 1,000-mile railroad and to develop coal, copper, and other heavy tonnage. It appears to us that now is the time to abide by the judgment of the Government officials in charge of the Department of Commerce and pass such appropriations as may be recommended by that department. It should be thoughtfully considered in this connection that the U. S. S. Tahoma, of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and the Armeria, of the Lighthouse Board, were wrecked on the unlighted shores and upon unknown rocks in Alaska, and the total valuation of the Government vessels and property lost in those two catastrophes would represent a figure that would accomplish much toward the proper charting of those dangerous channels.

These are but two instances where the Government has suffered loss. But what of the privately owned and operated steamships that for years have pioneered the water routes to Alaska? Hidden rocks are best remembered or named by the unfortunate vessels that have found them. Too often such vessels have gone to the bottom, leaving no record save that of heavy financial loss and deepest sorrow among those whose relatives or friends have been lost. A detailed and absolutely correct list of wrecks, loss of life, and value of hulls and cargoes taking place in Alaska is impossible to obtain, but from the list of the larger vessels and those of which official record is at hand the grand total in vessels lost is 85, representing a valuation of nearly $7,000,000.

There is nothing new about this statement. It has been published in the press of the country and has even found its way into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The total loss of life is not known, but it is very great, some of the ships that have gone to the bottom having lost nearly all on board, while history records that several, with their entire list of passengers and crew, have never been heard from, and their fate can only be conjectured.

It is proverbial that those who go down to the sea in ships must be ready at all times to manfully face the perils of the deep, the perils being largely due to action of the elements. Those who are endeavoring to operate regular steamship service to and from Alaska must at all times meet additional contingencies and face unknown danger due to the devious watercourses, rocky formation of the shore line and sea floor, the absence of beacons and guides to navigation, and the ever-present danger of striking a pinnacle rock.

This caused the wreck of the State of California with its awful toll of human lives. That steamship, wrecked on August 17, 1913, struck an uncharted rock where the chart showed 12½ fathoms (75 feet), and yet the State of California had made 16 trips in and out of that same harbor during the two years preceding, since a new and important industry had been started at Gambier Bay. The year before, on August 13, 1912, the steamship Mariposa struck an uncharted rock off Port Baker in Sumner Straits, just west of where the chart shows 111 fathoms (666) feet). On January 14, 1909, the steamship Ohio struck an uncharted rock in Tongass Narrows, just north of Ketchikan. The charts showed the soundings where she struck at 30 fathoms (180 feet).

In the case of the Ohio and Mariposa these vessels were saved and later repaired. Mention is made of these three cases to show how steamships traveling the regular routes to and from Alaska may, under certain conditions of the tide, strike a pinnacle rock at points where they had previously crossed and recrossed without any idea of the menace to navigation lying beneath the surface of the water.

Every great industry that is started in Alaska means an increased steamship service. The only possible avenue of transportation between the United States and its northern Territory is the water route, and as the greater portion of its populous towns and mining camps are located along the inside passages, which abound throughout the southern and western coasts, it will always be necessary for any vessel serving Alaska to use those inside routes. This condition extends from the thriving fishing city of Ketchikan, in the southeast portion of the Territory, in a great arc, to the extreme end of the Aleutian Islands and takes in such well-known places as Wrangell, Petersburg, Metlakahtla, Juneau, Douglas, Treadwell, Haines (Fort Seward, United States of America), Skagway, Sitka, Yakutat, Cordova, Latouche, Valdez (Fort Liscum, United States of America), Ellamar, Seward, Portage Bay, Knik, and all the salmon canneries and other points where industries flourish.

It seems strange, indeed, that a great catastrophe in which property loss and a heavy death toll is recorded should be the means of bringing these great needs of Alaska before the people, but such has been the case, and, with the expected large addition to the number of steamships operating, while not anticipating trouble, it is apparent that unless something is done immediately to better these conditions the danger of such disasters will greatly increase.

It is not our intention to suggest an especial appropriation covering any particular lighthouse or other aid to navigation, as those are matters which should be left to the department, but we do most earnestly urge upon each of you gentlemen the necessity of giving immediate heed to the seriousness of this situation and request that you work for such appropriations as may be recommended by the department:

First. For a thorough survey and search of the channels and passages of Alaska for the purpose of locating pinnacle rocks, this work to be accomplished by wire drag.

Second. For suitable steamships and other vessels to be used in such work by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Third. For the proper charting and surveying of the watercourses of Alaska.

Fourth. Such lighthouse establishments and other aids to navigation as may be recommended by the department from time to time.

Fifth. The creation of the office of supervising inspector for Puget Sound and Alaska, headquarters Seattle, to take care of this immense coast line; also additional assistant inspectors for the Seattle office of the Steamboat-Inspection Service.

You have already been informed in detail that the steamships now used by the Coast and Geodetic Survey are entirely inadequate for such service. These vessels are such that if they were being used by any privately operated company in regular commercial traffic their owners would be most severely criticized. The cost of conducting the wire-drag survey and the cost of proper vessels for the survey would represent but a very small sum when compared with the tremendous valuation of the steamships operating in those waters, to say nothing of the more humanitarian view of the case in considering the protection of the thousands of people whose lives are imperiled by traveling through those passages.

Alaska is America's last frontier. Alaska is a land of great industrial promise. At the present time its development seems to be assured by legislation which makes for the opening of its great interior mineral storehouses, but it should be remembered that all that interior development must for all time depend upon the successful operation of the steamships connecting that Territory with the United States proper, and it is in behalf of all of the present companies operating and of those who may later join in that important traffic that this appeal is addressed to each of you gentlemen representing in Congress the great States of this Union, each one of which has been greatly aided and encouraged in its development by the cooperation at all times of its representatives. We now petition you in behalf of a great Territory of the United States, feeling sure that when these facts are brought to your personal attention you will refer to the detailed reports covering the subject and grant to that frontier country the protection her growing commerce justifies.

Yours, very truly,

J. C. FORD,
President Pacific Coast Steamship Co.
R. W. BAXTER,
Vice President Alaska Steamship Co.
H. F. ALEXANDER,
President Pacific-Alaska Navigation Co.
M. KALISH,
Vice President Humboldt Steamship Co.
H. C. BRADFORD,
Vice President Northland Steamship Co.
JOSHUA GREEN,
President Puget Sound Navigation Co.
W. L. GAZZAM,
President Puget Sound Steamboat Owners' Association.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] in discussing the wire-drag proposition has had brought into the Hall of the House a picture showing a wire drag. I suppose that picture was prepared and painted for the Coast and Geodetic Survey at Government expense.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I just want to say that I am not responsible for it.

Mr. MANN. It is a useless expenditure of money to have had it painted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman think the picture must have been painted at low tide? Otherwise they could not have located the old timbers and other things that appear with such accuracy on the bottom. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. This painted picture is a copy of a picture that appears in the regular report of that department. I want to call attention to the accuracy of the picture, for it is probably equal to the accuracy of the work that is done by the department. Here is a wire drag pictured as stretching across a considerable expanse of water, supported by buoys, the drag being attached to a boat at either end and to one in the middle. One can see that the boat at one end is moving away from the center at an angle of more than 45° from a forward course while the boat attached at the other end is moving away in the opposite direction from the center at an angle also of more than 45°. It would be impossible, therefore, Mr. Chairman, for those boats to proceed for 20 feet without breaking the wire drag.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman knows that that is an artistic license. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. But they purport in their report to give a picture of what was being done, and then they have had it painted. They were so entranced with the idea that they had a painting made of it, but apparently they did not know enough to realize that if they had a wire with a boat attached to it at either end, the boats going in opposite directions, if the boats proceeded the wire would break.

Mr. GORDON. Or the boats would stop.

Mr. MANN. That is accurate knowledge on the part of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. When I saw this picture printed in their report I wondered if they had ever operated a wire drag, even though they have several in operation, and whether they knew how it was operated, or knew what the effect would be, or whether they knew enough to locate a pinnacle rock, if they found one, or what good did it do to locate it? Certainly whatever else they may be able to do, they do not know how to picture a wire drag in operation. I expect they know as much about that as they do about a good deal of the other work that they do. I think the picture may be taken out, now, for we are done with it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that that sort of layman's criticism would destroy many of the masterpieces in paintings, including the one out in the rotunda in which one individual is pictured with six toes on one foot.

Mr. MANN. That is true; but that was not painted by a scientist purporting to show a scientific operation. When a scientist or a purported scientist attempts to picture the method that he pursues, if he is not accurate, he is no good.

Mr. Chairman, in reference to the question of economy and the relation to it of a suggested budget system, a committee of the House or a committee of the two Houses, about which so much has been said, I desire to make one or two observations, if I have the time, and I desire to make the observations based upon my experience in the House and the watching of appropriation bills. What I say, Mr. Chairman, is not in criticism of the present administration, because the present administration, like the administrations which have preceded it, has followed the same course. I doubt whether it is practicable for Congress to have a budget committee composed of Members of the two Houses to determine in advance how much shall be appropriated in the various departments.

I have heard several gentlemen say there was no method under our present Government system of reaching that end. In every country in the world, practically, the executive power prepares the appropriation bills. They are handled by members of the executive as members of the legislative bodies. Of course in every country which has a responsible ministry that ministry prepares all of its bills, which are submitted as coming from the Government, which carry appropriations. If the ministry wants money, it has to understand from what source it will get the money. It figures out the receipts and the expenditures. It is responsible. We do not have that system of Government, but we have this: We have a Cabinet of the President. The President gathers to himself and his Cabinet the heads of all of the executive departments of the Government, minus a few of the outside establishments, and the proper place to determine the probable expenditures or appropriations and the probable receipts is at the President's Cabinet, where the President has the authority to say to the members of the Cabinet, "You are here at the head of these executive departments all of the time, and you estimate that we will have about so much money for expenditures, but you must bring your estimates of expenditures below the estimates of the receipts." It is perfectly feasible. The old system that we have had has been for every Cabinet officer, or nearly every one, to constantly seek to get more money for his department and less money for some other department. They ought to be brought together and made to bring the estimates of appropriations within the estimates of receipts, and then leave something over, and instead of Congress being forever engaged in refusing appropriations which are asked by the executive departments, we ought to be engaged in considering the advisability of granting appropriations which are not asked by the executive departments. They ought to be compelled in making their estimates to come well within the probable receipts, and those appropriations ought in the main to be made as a matter of course, and then let Congress determine whether it will provide other appropriations.

The body exists; they are here all the time. They know the conditions and the needs of their departments. They are better qualified to determine in advance what reductions they can make in their expenditures than we can be. Since I have been a Member of this body they seldom have helped us, but always ask for more. Knowing that they will not get all they ask for, knowing that they can not have all they ask for, they have been going on the theory, to a large extent, that if they are to get $100,000 they ought to ask for $200,000; that if they want one new item, they ought to ask for two new items; that they ought to ask for a great deal more than they expect to get. What they ought to do is to ask only in their estimates for those things which they must have, which they really need, and the estimates of appropriations submitted to the Congress ought always to be less than the estimates of receipts. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there has been a good deal said of late in regard to a budget and in regard to methods of appropriations, and this is a peculiarly apt and interesting question in the present state of the Public Treasury. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is generally very sound, and with whom I generally agree on fundamental propositions of appropriations, suggested the other day that it would be better, in his opinion, if there were less initiative on the part of the Members and we depended more largely on the departments on the matter of appropriations. It seems to me that the history of estimates for the past 20 years, let us say, scarcely supports the gentleman's contention.

I ran over rather hurriedly a day or two ago the estimates of appropriations under the sundry civil title in the last 10 years. My recollection is that the appropriations under that title in that length of time, perhaps a little longer period, were about a hundred million dollars less than the estimates, so that it seems that the departments were more extravagant than the Congress. We all of us realize that our Government is so very different and our conditions are so very different from those of European countries that we can not well compare many of their methods of legislation and appropriations with ours. A country that is developed, that is simply moving along, keeping up its public service, not greatly enlarging or extending it or opening up new avenues, a country under monarchal institutions, may very properly depend very largely on the executive for suggestions of expenditure, and that is particularly true in a Government with a responsible ministry, where the party in power goes to the people when not supported by the popular branch of the legislature. Things are very different here. The bureaus are in no wise responsible as they are under other Governments. Congress is responsible——

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. The responsibility is on the Congress itself, but, unfortunately, it is a very dissipated responsibility—that is, it does not rest heavily on any one Member, and it is difficult to fix it on any group of Members. In a way we attempt to fix it on the party in power, but even then the responsibility is more or less shifted, but whatever responsibility there is is on Congress and not on a responsible ministry.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. FESS. What is the significance of the gentleman's statement that when the party in power loses a measure before Parliament it goes out of Parliament? It does not do that. They can make an appeal to the country.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course everyone understood, I assume, what I meant, that they lost out unless the country supports them. If they appeal to the country on a proposition they may win or they may lose.

Mr. GORDON. They must resign before appealing to the country.

Mr. MONDELL. Not necessarily. In the case they lose support of the legislative branch, however, it would be an unheard of thing if they did not resign, or at any rate seek an appeal to the country.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. FESS. They do not have to resign before appealing to the country. The leader simply asks the King to prorogue Parliament. It is not a resignation, but it is a referendum to the people. Now, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONDELL. I thank those gentlemen who are students of this subject for correcting me in the matter of detail. I was not attempting to give the detail of the methods of other countries, because in a five-minute speech one can not go into great detail. Discussing this matter is difficult, much less a matter that is only distantly related to it.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. FESS. Would it not be better for us to have one body in the form of a budget commission to ascertain the expenditures than to have 15 or 20.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, of course, that is quite a different question. The question of the budget is one question and the question of how we shall handle the estimates here is another question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I would ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. On the latter question, while there are good arguments on both sides, I have never been able to come to a conclusion that I felt altogether certain about. I think, however, it were better for all if the estimates were to come to one large committee with a goodly number of subcommittees. I believe that would result in economy. I can see that there are objections to it, but I doubt if we will ever adopt that method in Congress. There will always be a larger number of Representatives who will be inclined to divide the jurisdiction and responsibility than would be favorable to placing the responsibility on a smaller part of the membership. But I am inclined to the opinion that it would be well if all of the estimates could come to one committee, and I think we would in that way save a good many millions of dollars every year. I say "I think we would." Of course these are all matters of opinion, and in a matter of this sort, where there are so many arguments on both sides, one is not justified in being too cocksure or certain in his opinion.

But there is another side to the matter. The departments, in submitting their estimates, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggests, should be well within the estimates of receipts. Yes, very well within the estimates of receipts, under our form of government; because, while our appropriations under a certain single head or under a variety of titles generally run considerably below the estimates, the aggregate of our appropriations, in the long run, is above the aggregate of estimates, because under our system the departments ordinarily do not initiate new projects or new enterprises.

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, yes; they do.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Minnesota says "Oh, yes; they do." That is true in matters of detail, but it is not true by and large. The departments do not start new river and harbor work. The departments do not initiate new public-building projects. The departments do not now initiate new reclamation projects, or will not in the future, and there is a large field of expenditure that is under our form of government necessarily the field of congressional initiative only, and, without a very profound change in our system, could not very well become a field of executive initiative. To make it so would be to tremendously increase the executive branch of the Government, and our people—at least Members of Congress of the minority, whichever side happens to be the minority—are always restive over the proposition that the Executive is exerting too much influence, even as matters now stand.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. It would also be necessary to amend the Constitution to transfer that control over expenditures to which the gentleman refers—that control over the initiative. What power has the Executive to initiate anything which involves the expenditure of money?

Mr. MONDELL. I think we could under the Constitution give them more authority than they now have, although I do not like to have my friend, who is a constitutional lawyer, propound these constitutional questions to me, a layman. But I think under our constitutional power we could to a certain extent, or to a very considerable extent, transfer the initiative with regard to certain classes of expenditures to the executive departments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I would if I had more time, but the committee has been good to me and I do not want to impose on the committee by asking further time.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, the question of whether the Executive should initiate any legislation which would involve an expenditure of money is quite a live question now, apropos to the initiation of the ship-purchase bill, which is stirring the country a good deal. I wish that that theory might receive careful consideration by the Congress. The question of the budget is one to which I think every Member of Congress has given more or less attention. I think I am safe in saying that this is the only country that does not have a budget system, and I am persuaded that every State of the Union, or most of them, have a budget system, and it does seem to me that a Government which has the largest business of any single concern in the world, involving an expenditure of a thousand million dollars in a single year, should concentrate its methods by which we can have a clearing house of these expenditures, instead of having so many different committees dealing with them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand the gentleman to say that every State in the Union, or nearly every State, has the budget system?

Mr. FESS. I can not say every State; I think most of the States have.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman define what he means by a budget system? The budget system, as commonly spoken of, exists in hardly any and not more than half a dozen States in the Union. What does the gentleman mean when he speaks of the budget system?

Mr. FESS. I think there are 42 States, to speak specifically, that have adopted a budget commission to clarify the estimates and recommend appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What does the gentleman mean by a budget system?

Mr. FESS. A budget system is a commission created by authority of the Government which has to do with weighing the estimates and expenditures and making the recommendations for those expenditures to the legal legislative body providing for them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I made a speech in 1913 in which I summarized the various provisions of the statutes relating to the submission of estimates. If the gentleman will read that, he will find that we have the most comprehensive and carefully compiled set of laws to properly regulate the submission of estimates of any political body in the United States; and much of the discussion which takes place about our system is due to an entire ignorance of what the laws relative to the estimates and appropriations by the Government of the United States are.

Mr. FESS. Well, Mr. Chairman, that is the sort of an answer that a gentleman who does not believe in a budget system will be apt to give. In other words, there is no reason why I should ask for it other than that I am ignorant of what there already is. That is usually the argument that is offered. I resist that statement. The facts are that the chairman of this committee is one, if not the one, member that keeps down the appropriations that are asked for by every department; and instead of his being at the head of a large committee, to which every interest in the Government applies seeking to drain the Treasury, it would seem to me that there should be a commission that is not to be changed with every Congress that comes in and not to be changed by the administration for political purposes, as the Cabinet is changed every four years when the administration changes, but a commission that should have a standing here, nonpartisan in administration, whose business it would be to continue to bring to light the demands in the past, and with that light to know what demands of the future should be recognized.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. FESS. I do, because he is a member of the committee.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman made a statement in the beginning that every other country has some system for the preparation of a budget. I think he is possibly correct in that statement, but is it not also true that in every other Government except the United States the appropriation of money is confined to one of the legislative branches?

Mr. FESS. I think the appropriation is thus made, but it is recommended by the commission.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. But if the gentleman will allow me to follow that up, under our system, of course, this body and the other legislative body can appropriate money. I would like the gentleman to tell the committee what plan could be devised, or what plan he would suggest that would restrict in the amount of appropriations both the legislative bodies?

Mr. FESS. Well, a budget commission which is not subject to the whims of a political election, because its existence does not depend upon it, certianly avoids the pressure that one which is subject to such pressure of political election could not avoid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman a moment ago to say something about budgets and concentration, and so forth. I sincerely hope there will be some one to look after those things besides the gentleman from Ohio. I believe yesterday was the first day he was here in a long time. If everybody attended to it as he has been attending to it since he has been a Member of Congress there would be nobody to attend to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, the British system that was mentioned here a while ago is in a sense continuous. In other words, the ministry in Great Britain continues until it loses the confidence of the public. Whenever a measure is proposed by the ministry in the British Parliament and it fails to meet with the approval of Parliament, then the ministry has its choice. It can either resign and give over the power to the opposing party or it can ask the King to prorogue Parliament and go to the people as a referendum upon the question. That makes it a continuous body, so that there is no such thing as a change every four years, as we have in the Cabinet, by the change of administration.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know of any country in the world where the ministry has resigned because the legislative branch of the Government refused to pass the appropriation bills prepared and presented by the ministry?

Mr. FESS. I do not know of any case of that sort. That has nothing to do with this. What I am insisting upon is that the British system is continuous. It does not change with every administration that changes.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly.

Mr. FESS. But the administration there does not change as it does here.

Mr. MANN. Just as much there as it does here.

Mr. FESS. Oh, no. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; it does.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman is speaking without information about that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought not to assume that he is the only one who has information about the British Parliament.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE]?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois propounded the question I wanted to ask.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I do, but for no innuendoes. If the gentleman has a question, I will yield.

Mr. TOWNER. I have nothing to ask the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. It is a very significant thing that when anyone announces a change from a system we have in vogue somebody will undertake instantly to answer by the sort of a remark that the gentleman from Illinois has made here, assuming that I am the only one who is supposed to know anything about the British system. I resent that statement. I did not make any such reference.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had just told me that I knew nothing about the British system.

Mr. FESS. I did not. I said you spoke without information on that point, and that is what I repeat.

Mr. MANN. I do not resent that statement, because it is not necessary at all. The gentleman was mistaken. He made an incorrect statement.

Mr. FESS. How did I make an incorrect statement?

Mr. MANN. By stating that I knew nothing about it.

Mr. FESS. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MANN. I think I know as much about it as the gentleman does.

Mr. FESS. I think from what I can learn by sitting here from day to day that any man who assumes to know anything that the gentleman from Illinois does not know has no place to stand on the floor of this House. [Applause.] I am a student of these problems. Of course, teaching the subject for years is no suggestion that I know anything about it. I do, however, know that men who speak without information dogmatically ought not to insinuate that one who does speak with information is the only one that knows anything about the subject that is being discussed.

Countries that have the budget system have a system that does not change with every administration. The budget system in Great Britain continues from time to time, and is not subject to the whim of an election, while in our country the Appropriations Committee changes with the change of an administration, and the Cabinet changes with the change of an administration, and the biggest business in all the world ought not to be subject to the whim of every administration that changes; and if we had a budget system that would be avoided here.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I do.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course the gentleman must agree that the budget system, as it affects England, for example, not only levies the tax but makes the appropriation at the same time, and the tax is levied every year.

Mr. FESS. The budget is recommended to Parliament; yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And the budget fixes the tax at the same time it makes the appropriations, and that is not possible with us.

Mr. FESS. I do not see why it would not be.

Mr. MADDEN. We have a tariff that is fixed during a given administration. If it is a Republican administration, there is one system of taxation. If it is a Democratic administration, we have another system, but all systems are alike fundamentally in England, and all budgets there include the tax as well as the appropriation, and that would not be possible in this country under this form of Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more to answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Replying to my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], he says that our system would not permit the budget system as it is in vogue in England and gives as a reason that we have a different system of raising revenue; that is, if the Republican Party were in power it would differ from what it would be if the Democratic Party were in power, because we have a different view on the tariff question, which raises the revenue. If we had a budget system, I do not see why a change of administration from time to time from Democrats to Republicans and from Republicans to Democrats would necessarily change the methods of appropriations. Whatever way we raise the revenue might be left to Congress, but what should be appropriated and how much this department should have and how much that ought not to be left to each department or to a committee representing each department, but ought to be left to a central commission whose existence is continuous and will make the recommendations. That is what I mean.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio has made one statement about the British system that I wish to refer to briefly. I have asserted several times that many who discuss the so-called budget system discuss it with an entirely different meaning than that given it when some other persons discuss it. I have undertaken to show that so far as the budget, in the true sense of the term under our system, is concerned, we have a provision for a budget. The gentleman from Ohio is mistaken when he says that the Government goes on and the budget does not change with the change of control of the Government of Great Britain. The very control of the Government may depend on the budget itself. It is only within a few years that a proposed method of obtaining money by novel methods of taxation, probably by the chancellor of the exchequer, Lloyd George, precipitated an election, and the people passed on the question and continued the Government in power.

Their civil service differs from ours in that the great bulk of the subordinates go on regardless of a change of control of government, but the whole fiscal policy of the Government may be entirely changed by reason of the proposals for taxation.

Every time it is proposed by the party in power in Great Britain to put a tax on foodstuffs, which would be an essential feature of a proposed budget, it might involve a control of the Government.

Their budget consists in this: They submit to Parliament their proposed expenditures and they have to show where the money is to be obtained, and, if existing law is not sufficient to obtain the money they propose to spend, they propose new laws by which they will obtain additional money. If in their proposals it is shown that there will be a surplus over what is required to meet the expenditures of the Government as set forth, they propose a method of distributing that surplus in some other way. How could we have a nonpartisan, independent commission to study the needs of the Government and determine apart from the administration and Congress what was to be spent? For instance, the naval program itself is a very vital matter as affecting our expenditures. No nonpartisan commission apart from Congress would pass on that.

The entire bill as reported to Congress provided for a naval program to cost $53,000,000, and the naval appropriation bill carried $22,900,000 on account of construction for the next fiscal year. What that program was to be was a matter of policy to be determined, not by something apart from those in control of the Government, but to be determined either by the Executive with the approval of the legislative body and initiated by the legislative body regardless of the will of the Executive. As a matter of fact, the program submitted to the House combines both of these elements. It had some features that the administration recommended and it had some things that the administration protested against. There is no way in which any independent body or commission or outfit of any kind can prepare for Congress a statement of how much it has spent for the maintenance of the public service in any fiscal year, because that question hinges to a considerable extent upon the policies to be adopted for the extension of the public service, the initiation of new projects, and many other activities. That must be settled as a matter of political policy, and the control must be political.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman make any distinction or difference between the policy-determining function and the administrative function? The policy-determining function belongs to Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Theoretically Congress has the power, but practically it never exercises it unless the Congress is of a different political complexion from the administration. But when the administration and Congress are of the same political complexion, as a matter of fact the legislative body is largely a reflection of the Executive desires. Occasionally it does not acquiesce in the views of the Executive, but in the long run the legislative body is merely a ratifying body.

Mr. FESS. Is that right?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. It is at the present time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The history of the country demonstrates that beyond question. It is futile for practically well-informed men to attempt to deny it. I have not obtained my information, as the gentleman from Ohio has, from teaching in the schools. I have obtained the information that I have about the practical workings of this Government and other governments from a service of 16 years in this body. All of that time has been devoted to an intensive study of methods of expenditures, not only in this Government, but in other governments. I think I have some knowledge of the various systems, and when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] spoke a few moments ago in a somewhat, possibly justifiable, but boasting strain of the fact that he had been teaching these things for many years it reminded me of the experience of a friend of mine in a court in New York. He had been a coroner's physician for a number of years and had actually performed 8,000 autopsies. He was a witness for the people in a murder trial and was being cross-examined by the attorney for the defendant accused of murder, and the following series of questions and answers occurred: The cross-examining lawyer said, "Have you ever read Jones on such and such?" "No; I have not." "Did you ever hear of it?" "Yes." "Is it a standard work?" "It is." "Have you ever read Smith on such and such?" "I have not." "Have you ever heard of it?" "Yes." "Is it a standard work?" "It is." "Have you ever read Brown on such and such a subject?" "No." "Ever heard of it?" "Yes." "Is it a standard work?" "It is." The attorney then said, "Well, where do you get your information if you have not read these standard authors," and the reply of my friend was, "I get my information upon the operating table and in the autopsies that I have performed in the last 10 years. I have performed 8,000 in the last 10 years, more than any man in the United States." So I might reply to my distinguished college professor friend that, while I have not been teaching young men these various theories of government, I have obtained my information on the floor of the House of Representatives and in the Committee on Appropriations where I have served for 10 years, and I think I have some information on the subject in respect to both our system and the British system, which I have been compelled to study in connection with my work. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, has debate been exhausted on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Replying to the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois, of course under the rules of the House debate is exhausted.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we better read the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; let us move along.

Mr. TOWNER. I only want two or three minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Very well.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty in discussing a great question of this kind in this manner is that nothing except the fringes of the subject can be considered in such a merely desultory debate. It is very easy for gentlemen to talk about a budget system and declare that it is desirable. In the first place, it would be necessary to define what a budget system is. Gentlemen have said on the floor of the House that many of the States have a budget system. If by that is meant the English budget system, then I should have to take issue with the statement at once, because there is no State in the Union that has the English budget system. If we are to understand by the budget system the English budget system, I think no careful student of American affairs but would come to the speedy conclusion, from even a cursory examination of the question, that it is impossible for use to ingraft upon our system the English budget system. It would be impossible for me even in the brief time that I desire to occupy to say why that is true. Very often I have heard gentleman say on the floor of the House that we ought to adopt the English system regarding this, that, or the other thing. I have heard it very often said here that we ought to adopt the English budget system, but with our parliamentary system of Government the English budget system is impossible; and so it is with most of the suggestions about ingrafting upon our system a system so vitally different from our own as is the English parliamentary system. I think no one who has studied our governmental affairs but wishes we might have a closer coordination between the power of fixing the revenues of the Government or the obtaining of the means for carrying on the Government, and that power which expends the money which is thus obtained. The Committee on Ways and Means has jurisdiction within the House of one branch, and the various appropriation committees have jurisdiction over the other branches.

It is, of course, always necessary that the expenditures should bear some relation in amount to the revenues of the Government, and that we secure in a very halting, in a very inefficient, and in a very unsatisfactory manner. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to say, from my experience here and with a desire to adopt a more perfect system or form, that it would be exceedingly unwise for us, in my judgment, to venture upon any radical experiments of change. I think that our system as it has grown up here through more than a century is adaptable to our form of legislation and our form of government. I believe that there are many improvements that might be made, but not radical ones; not the adoption or ingrafting of another system upon our own. I think it would be wise if we had a committee of this House appointed to take into consideration these minor changes that might be made greatly to our advantage and greatly to the saving, as I think, of the revenues of the Government. I think we might effect many changes of that kind, but I am compelled to say, after a somewhat careful consideration of the matter, that I do not believe that any radical change will be very beneficial or possible to ingraft upon our present system.

I desire also to say this: Very much fault is found and very severe criticism is indulged in in respect to these various appropriation committees. I think that there is more fault to be found with the membership of the House than with the membership of the committees. The pressure that is brought to bear upon the various members of these committees by the membership of the House is sometimes, as we know, tremendous. The pressure that is brought to bear by individual interests, acting through their Representatives on the floor of this House—and I do not mean by that ulterior and wicked influences, but those that are considered by everyone as purely legitimate—is tremendous upon the various members of these committees. I think that it is only fair that we should take these things into consideration when we indulge in extravagant criticism of committees. I think that Congress itself is very much more extravagant than any appropriation committee that we have in the House. I think Congress itself is more responsible for passing legislation that appropriates the public money that is without justification than are the various appropriation committees. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 66 of the bill to offer an amendment, in line 25, striking out "$1.85" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1.80."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to recur to page 66 to offer an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, for the purpose of obtaining information, can the gentleman inform the committee how much reduction has been made in the price of laying asphalt during the past 10 or 20 years? This price of $1.85 has been running for a number of years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, some years ago the price of asphalt was over three dollars and a quarter a yard. Now it is $1.49.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the purpose of this amendment is to fix a maximum price of $1.80?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; this is to make the limitation in this law the same as in the District of Columbia act.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that the limitation in the District of Columbia bill on asphalt is $1.80, and this amendment is merely to make the item in this bill conform in amount to the item in the District bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why is the rate so high when you can contract at a much lower figure?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In making contracts for laying asphalt the price depends to some extent upon the quantity of the work to be done. If it is a very large job, the price will be in the neighborhood of $1.49 to $1.50. If it is a small job, the price will be considerably higher.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. In addition to that there are certain characters of asphalt that are occasionally laid in small quantities that is of a stronger character and it costs more.

Mr. STAFFORD. And there is more asphalt in it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes; and it costs approximately these figures, but there is very little used; but if the limitation was less than $1.80 they could not use it at all where a heavy or thicker asphalt was required.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course this limit goes above the regular price, $1.80 a square yard, whereas it is much less under the contract system.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. This is simply a limitation placed upon it, placed at a sufficiently high figure to enable them to contract for this asphalt, whereas the gentleman from New York has said they made these contracts at about $1.49, but there is occasionally a small amount of asphalt needed that might cost as high as $1.75.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long has the rate been at about $1.50?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think three or four years ago the break came in the prices. There had been a consolidation prior to that time, or an understanding among the companies here, and then there was some mix up and competition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Prior to that time the contract price was in the neighborhood of $1.70 to $1.80.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It was $1.75 or $1.79; I am not sure which.

Mr. STAFFORD. A dollar and seventy-nine, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 66, line 23, strike out "$1.85" and insert "$1.80."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is a District item, and I was out when page 66 was read, and I want to ask the gentleman what is the theory of making the District of Columbia pay for the cost of installing water mains for the National Museum?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is that?

Mr. MANN. Lines 14 to 18, to provide for laying water mains for the benefit of the National Museum. Why is one-half of that charged to the District of Columbia?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, it is a fire main, and the District pays one-half of all fire mains. It is to make a more direct connection through the grounds there.

Mr. MANN. Well, the item says this is for furnishing additional water supply for the National Museum building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. By extending the present——

Mr. MANN. The present 12-inch water main. It does not require a 12-inch water main for fire purposes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is for fire purposes, and the chief reason is for fire protection.

Mr. MANN. It is not for furnishing water, then?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is to get the water now coming here in an indirect way, and this gives a direct access to the main, and it is chiefly for fire protection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lighting and heating for the public grounds: For lighting the public grounds, watchmen's lodges, offices, and greenhouses at the propagating gardens, including all necessary expenses of installation, maintenance, and repair, $18,500.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In reference to the budget system, which has been much discussed here this morning, it seems to me that some plan ought to be devised by which the appropriations could be controlled in some systematic as well as economic way. A nonpartisan budget commission will never be secured. We have no nonpartisan commissions. That kind of a commission is impossible. I assume gentlemen who use the word "nonpartisan" mean "bipartisan." There is no such thing as nonpartisan. All men are partisans, and the mortal has not yet been born who is nonpartisan. All men are partisan. Men are unable to prevent their inclinations, their prejudices, their environments from warping their judgment. Their judgemnt leads them into the field of partisanship. Now, how would you appoint a budget commission so as to avoid politics? The administration and Congressmen, the Chief Executive or Congress, would select a commission, and most naturally it would select it of the same political faith or, at least, a majority of it. That is true of either the Executive or Congress. The trouble, in my judgment, with appropriations is in this: The departments are dictating the appropriation bills. There is where the difficulty comes. By this I mean no reflection on the Appropriation Committee. They are writing them according to their peculiar views of making the department which they represent greater and stronger, as they desire them, and much of the legislation that comes into the House and the Senate is not a representation of the views of committees which present the measures as much as it is the view of the department which oversees the preparation of such bills, and they reflect the view of the department for which it is made.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt my friend?

Mr. CULLOP. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. We tried having what we called a nonpartisan or independent board known as the efficiency board, on which we spent $260,000, to tell us how to carry on our business, and they made a number of suggestions to various departments how to transact the Government's business.

Mr. CULLOP. And they were absolutely ignored, I presume.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; we tried to follow out their suggestions and found out that instead of helping business it rather retarded it, and Congress abolished it after spending $260,000 on it.

Mr. CULLOP. Such is the usual result in all such instances. Now, in 1882 a tariff commission was appointed to revise the tariff.

Mr. BARTLETT. I was speaking of an efficiency commission.

Mr. CULLOP. I am only speaking as to the work of the commission system and the inclination of Congress about following reports made by the same. As a rule the report of a commission in such cases is ignored and the views of the Congress are substituted. Many instances of this kind could be given. The result of the work of the Tariff Commission was ignored because it did not coincide with the views of a majority of Congress. It made a voluminous report, constituting two large volumes, recommending a reduction of the tariff in nearly every schedule, and when Congress convened after the work of that commission for the purpose of revising the tariff it took the opposite direction and increased the tariff in nearly every schedule in the entire law. Such has been the usual experience in such matters. Right or wrong, it binds no one.

Now, when questions are asked about certain appropriations in the House the reply comes frequently that the department wants this, that, or the other thing in the bill, and that is the only answer and the only reason that is given for the proposed appropriation in many instances. The same is true of much of the legislation. And this Government, unless a stop is put to this practice soon, is rapidly drifting into a bureaucratic government. The different bureaus are writing the legislation of the country, and they are writing it according to their views. These men having made a study and devoted perhaps years to the different departments they represent, their inclinations, their learning, is all along the lines of their departments, and they become enthusiasts in it and attempt to legislate according to their peculiar views. The people and their wishes are ignored.

That is one of the troubles in controlling the appropriations, as well as the legislation of this House. Some system ought to be evolved by which appropriations can be controlled and reduced. What is true of appropriations is true of other legislation. But as long as the present system continues it is almost impossible to do it, because the departments are able to have their way too often in regard to the appropriations and the legislation made in this House and in the Senate.

This system should be reformed in this respect. Departments are in an indirect manner performing the work of the Congress, shaping it to suit their ideas and ignoring in many instances the desires of the people who must bear the expense. A reform in this regard is essential, and I hope some plan can be devised which will correct it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP]. Much of what he said is unquestionably true. The departments do recommend a great majority of the appropriations that get into the appropriation bills. That is necessarily true, first, because the law requires the estimates to be submitted in detail, and, second, even in the absence of such a law the natural recourse for information as to what was needed by the various branches of the Government would be to the departments. But the gentleman has probably never served actively upon any appropriation committee, or he would realize that these estimates are only the basis upon which the committee begins to act. It conducts hearings of the officials who have made the estimates, and——

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. I do not want it to be understood that I was reflecting upon the work of the committee, but here is what I am insisting on, that the committees hear the men from the departments. The people whom the committee represents, the masses of this country, have no hearing before the committee. It is an ex parte hearing.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this: The committee acts as cross-examiners of those gentlemen who represent the departments and are the ones who are giving the testimony as to the various items of their recommendations. Of course they act as such cross-examiners to the best of their information and ability, which may not in many cases equal the expert knowledge of the men whom they are cross-examining, but which in all cases fully equals the average information of Members of the House on that subject, and usually exceeds it, because they have usually had experience in the committee before. Now, it is perfectly true, as the gentleman says, that every department of the Government seems to feel a natural pride in reaching out and expanding its activities and enlarging its jurisdiction and in making itself strong and popular before the people. Sometimes we think they go entirely too far in their manner and method of getting themselves before public attention. They constantly demand enlargement, and point out to the committees wonderful avenues in which their usefulness to the people can be enlarged. They frequently try to back up those propositions with an assumed expression of public sentiment.

Now, the committee discounts all of that. It discourages it. It tries to confine the department as much as possible to the duties which it was created to perform, and insists that Congress only ought to have the full right to enlarge the duties of a department and to increase and add to its activities, and that duty does not rest with the department, although the departmen assumes that it has that function. But the newest department in the Government, the latest man appointed, begins work with the idea that his powers and duties embrace the enlargement of his department or bureau, and we have to impress upon that gentleman the fact that Congress is the sole judge of its activities.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. In other words, the departments are attempting to usurp the function of the Congress in regard to appropriations and the work of the departments?

Mr. BORLAND. We frequently think so, and when we think so we try to restrain them and to call their attention to the fact that they must not recommend things that the law does not authorize them to perform, however much they may think those things would be beneficial as branches of the public service.

But I wish to say that Congress itself is not entirely free from blame in this regard. Congress frequently tries to override the Appropriation Committees and put in items that it thinks are popular, but which have no weight or merit or importance at all, in the judgment of the committee. Frequently the committee is placed in a position of resisting that kind of a demand on the part of Members of Congress, either individually or collectively.

What we need in this country is a central authority. We need it more under a Democratic administration than under a Republican administration. We need a central authority which shall measure the outgo of the Republic by its income, or, turning it around the other way, if you choose, measuring the income by the outgo. I think that if the American people want activities performed by the Government, and enact laws providing for those activities, such as the physical valuation of railroads, the Children's Bureau, the Bureau of Mines, and other activities that we go into, we should say to the people, "If you want those things, you must pay for them. It is not a question of giving you something for nothing. The money in the Treasury is your own money, and it can not get in there without public taxation, and if you want certain things done certain taxes must be levied to meet the expense."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. It is manifestly necessary that if the people want certain acts performed by the Government and those activities involve expenditure for clerks and other expenses, some taxes must be provided to meet those expenses. I want to say, although in no particular partisan spirit, even though I think that is perhaps justifiable, that the Republican system is directly the opposite from the Democratic spirit in that respect. The Republican Party has taught the public for generations that taxation is a means of prosperity, and the more taxes you levy of a certain kind, the more prosperous the country is; that it did not make any difference whether you had need for the taxation or not, but that the very levying of a certain class of taxes was a guarantee and a means of prosperity. Under that system the American people have seen a recurrence of surpluses and deficits in the Federal Treasury. The surpluses have been almost as frequent as the deficits; but the last administration of the Republican Party was under a heavy deficit, and so reported by its official leaders. It left the Treasury under a deficit.

Mr. GILLETT. Only one year. There was a surplus three years and a deficit only one year.

Mr. BORLAND. It makes no difference whether there was a surplus three years or not. The gentleman talks as if there was no deficit until the Democrats came in. The Republicans went out under a deficit.

Mr. MANN. They left plenty of money in the Treasury, though.

Mr. BORLAND. That you had obligated and could not pay.

Mr. MANN. Oh, there was plenty of money there.

Mr. BORLAND. Their idea was that the more taxes you raised the more prosperity you had, and that therefore there must be some way found to expend that money, and the attention of the people was always diverted from the levying of the taxes and centralized upon the expenditures for their supposed local benefits. Now, in my judgment, the Democratic theory is precisely the opposite. It is that the revenues of the Government must meet the expenditures, and no more; that the taxes must be limited to the necessary, honest, and proper expenditures of the Government. That makes it necessary for us to go before the American people and practically educate them to understand that the Congress is their servant to perform the governmental activities, to conduct the Government, but that it can only be paid for by the taxation of the American people; that taxes are not a means of prosperity, but a burden to be distributed as lightly and as justly as Congress, in its wisdom, can distribute them. If we can adjust our financial system to that theory, there will be neither surplus nor deficit, but we will do as I understand the British Chancellor of the Exchequer does when he goes before Parliament and explains his program. He says: "Here is what the Government purposes to spend. Here is how it purposes to raise this money. If you do not want us to expend this much, we will not raise the taxes. If you do want us to expend money for these purposes, then we must raise taxes in this particular way." Now, when Congress gets down to that point and really opens the eyes of the American people and deals with them above the table, aboveboard, we will quit this talk about deficits in the Federal Treasury. We have a rich Nation, with our means of taxation hardly touched by our Federal Government; we have not begun to touch the sources of taxation in this country that other countries have had to use and abuse for years; there is no overtaxation of the American people. There is none at the present time. They are not paying a dollar more into the Federal Treasury under Democratic rule than they paid under Republican rule, but they see where they pay it, and they see where it goes to.

I take it we are going to have a system that will, under the authority of the administration in power, through the proper committees of this House, provide what is popularly called a budget system; that is, that the administration will curtail the activities of the departments, and Congress will cooperate to that extent that we will only appropriate for the needs of the Government which the administration wants to make itself responsible for before the people. If it needs so much for the Army, it ought to have it. If it needs so much for the Navy, it ought to have it. If it needs so much for internal improvements, it ought to go before the people and say so, and we will put it in the tax bill and the American people will pay for it with their eyes open, and that is my idea of the budget system.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, it seems impossible to suggest any subject on this floor that is not given a partisan aspect. In some respects I agree with what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has said. But the Republican Party in levying taxes, to use the expression of the gentleman, has simply enacted legislation that has kept the people of this country at work; and when the people are industriously employed legitimate taxation becomes a mere bagatelle. [Applause.]

The greatest mission of the statesman, so far as the material prosperity of a people is concerned, is to provide conditions that will keep the people in productive industry.

In times like these it is a pennywise economy to stop all public works. We need good roads. Now, while work is slack and men are out of employment, the Federal Government, collaborating with the States, should build a billion dollars' worth of roads. It would be the best investment we could make and a godsend to many men now out of work. As an investment it would begin to pay dividends at once. Increased taxation? Of course; but what would that signify when people are at work? After all, it costs no more to support people at work than in idleness. It would cost society as a body no more to support men at work than in idleness. And when the people are contentedly and industriously employed, taxes are a negligible quantity; besides, we would have the roads.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. HULINGS. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Did the famous Republican tariff keep the people employed in 1907–8?

Mr. HULINGS. In 1907–8 we had what was called a bankers' panic.

Mr. BAILEY. That is what you called it.

Mr. HULINGS. That was designedly brought about by the money interests, but it really did not greatly affect the industrial activities of the country at all. People were kept at work.

Mr. BAILEY. Not in my town.

Mr. HULINGS. Whatever legislation you enact that will keep the people industriously employed will put them in such shape that they can afford to pay taxes. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is what the Republican Party did by its tariff policy, and that is what the Democratic Party undid with its tariff policy. Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] has referred to a subject that has attracted my attention frequently. In my service on committees in this House, which is inconsiderable, I have observed that the very first thing that is done is to refer a bill to the department to see what the department thinks about it; and if the department turns it down, in nine cases out of ten that is the end of the bill. This Government has become bureaucratic, especially with regard to these appropriations. But what are you going to do about it? I long since found out that it is not much good simply to kick. You must be for something. And if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], with his great experience, finds that our practice is objectionable, that it ought to be changed, what does he propose? It seems to me that is a question that should commend itself to the experienced legislators on this floor. How are you going to go about it to better it? The department knows more about these things than any committee to which bills are referred. If you do not take advantage of their knowledge, where are you, and what are you going to do? How do you propose to better the system? I should like to ask the gentleman from Indiana what he proposes in place of the present system of what he calls bureaucratic legislation?

Mr. CULLOP. What I would propose is that somebody who in not a member of the department investigate carefully the recommendations of the department, and that person should be a disinterested one in regard to the appropriation and in regard to the work of the department. The trouble is that when a person has been employed in one of these departments for a good while he has his judgment warped, just as a man employed in any other department of life becomes an enthusiast and a partisan in favor of the department and loses sight of the wants of the people who have the burdens to bear in furthering the work of the department. So that some system ought to be evolved where the matter would be investigated by a disinterested party who is independent of the department, and ascertain the facts and report on the same.

Mr. HULINGS. I understand; I heard the gentleman say that before, but will he not put in concrete form a proposition to better the present system?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, attention was challenged by the comparison made between 1907 and the present time. I want to state that in 1907 there were 6,494 less failures than there were in 1914; that the excess of liabilities of failures in 1914 over what they were in 1907 was $66,513,407; that the number of failures in 1914 in this country was 1,251 more than in the banner failure year in the history of this country, which was the other Democratic year of 1893.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Those figures which the gentleman is quoting are for 1907.

Mr. SLOAN. 1907, 1914, and 1893.

Mr. BAILEY. How about 1908? The real effects of the panic of 1907 were not felt until 1908.

Mr. SLOAN. The failures of 1914 were 16,759, and in 1908 they were 14,044.

Mr. BAILEY. There was no great war raging then.

Mr. SLOAN. The war raging now is the only salvation of the party on that side of the Chamber.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, I think not.

Mr. SLOAN. For the benefit of the gentleman I submit a record of the number of failures and the excess of liabilities over assets for these record years in our recent history:

Years.	Number.	Excess of liabilities over assets.
1914	16,759	$162,313,407
1913	14,553	134,800,000
1908	14,044	127,500,000
1907	10,265	95,800,000
1896	15,094	99,100,000
1893	15,508	150,600,000

This shows 1914 as having 1,251 failures more than the next highest year in our history. It shows the excess of liabilities over assets for 1914, $11,713,407 more than in 1893 and $66,513,407 over 1907.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] said that we have been teaching the American people. Yes, we are being taught by Democracy—it, like experience, is a very dear teacher. You have been teaching people along the lines suggested at the expense of the losses of millions of dollars in business—60 or 70 per cent higher in 1914 than in the banner failure year in the history of the country, which was in 1893. They have not only been teaching expensive lessons to the people, but been teaching the Government an expensive lesson. In February, 1913, about the time the change of administration was to take place, there were $140,000,000 in the general fund in the Treasury of the United States, and in the last report—I have not seen the report this morning—we have only $50,000,000. In other words, a reduction for every business day since that time of $150,000. A king's ransom is lost from the Treasury of the United States.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, because matters are not working in the smooth and ideal order that they ought to be, that we should look to England or Germany or anywhere else for the budget system and do it reverence. I think we have the best system here in America that there is in the world, with the best opportunity to work it out, and I believe that if every man on the floor of this House and the floor of the other Chamber would follow as he understands his duty under the Constitution and say to everybody else, "Keep your hands off," instead of criticizing our own system and institutions and lauding those of other nations we would be standing on the floor and upon the platforms elsewhere lauding the wisdom and the efficiency of the American system. I believe that under the American system which we have now and under which we are working, JOHN J. FITZGERALD, chairman of this committee, and aided by its able membership, can work out a better system than Lloyd George with his budget system over in England. [Applause.]

Of course I reserve the statement that if we had a chairman from this side of the Chamber he could even improve upon the excellent work of the chairman of whom I have spoken. There is not, it seems to me, sufficient pride in the American people and the Members of this body in what we have. I think we ought to stand up for it and see some of its good qualities, some of its strength, and some of its wisdom, and instead of criticizing it and finding fault, let us see its strength, its dignity, and its basis for good government in the years, decades, and centuries to come. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $22,320, or so much thereof as may be necessary, one half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to comment at this point on the use of the American flag over the Federal buildings and elsewhere in the United States. I do not know whether in this particular instance the cost of raising the flag is divided between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia or not, but that makes no difference so long as the flag is raised and the proper spirit of patriotism results from its floating over the Federal buildings of the Nation. We can not make too great a display of the flag for legitimate purposes. Some time ago by reason of complaints that had come from various quarters, I introduced a bill to protect the flag against desecration. The fact was that there was no Federal law on the subject; that if the flag was desecrated or abused in any way it was up to the legislatures of the various States to protect it, and some of them had no such laws. A more serious question has now arisen; the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] has introduced a bill which looks to a greater respect for the American flag on the high seas. An emergency has arisen in this regard. It is reported in the newspapers this morning that a second ship, apart from the Lusitania, that does not belong to the American Nation has adopted the ruse of flying the American flag in order to avoid the attack of a belligerent. I find on inquiry that there is no law of the United States which in any way protects the American flag upon the high seas as against the improper or deceptive use of it by a foreign or belligerent nation or by a pirate. In times gone by it was customary for merchantmen desiring to save their lives in time of war to raise the flag of a foreign nation or of some other nation than the United States, but that was in the days of the old wooden ships when the conditions were vastly different from what they are now. Recently the Lusitania, a great British ship, in order to avoid the possibility of being blown up by a submarine or a gunboat, adopted the ruse of flying the American flag, the flag of a neutral nation, so far as the foreign war is concerned.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Does the gentleman know whether any other foreign nation has laws similar to the one proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. MOORE. I am informed that some of them have laws which prevent the use of their flag, so far as their ability to control its use is concerned.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. COX. Did the gentleman hear read from the Clerk's desk yesterday a letter written to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] by a former officer of the United States Navy, citing the case of an American vessel during the Spanish War hoisting the British flag?

Mr. MOORE. I did not hear that letter read, but I read it in the RECORD, and I am thoroughly informed in respect to it, and, it seems to me, by reason of the fact that that letter was inserted, showing the American Navy itself had resorted to the misuse of a foreign flag in order to deceive an enemy, that perhaps it was appropriate that we should call attention not only to the bill introduced by the gentleman from South Dakota in respect to our flag on the high seas, but to other bills which have been introduced in this House with reference to the desecration of the flag in the United States. The point I am raising is this, that there would be no safety for any American merchantman if, having full confidence in the Stars and Stripes floating yonder 6 or 7 miles away, he permitted himself to draw near enough for one shot to send him to the bottom.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BARTLETT). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. FESS. What effect would this have if we could pass this law?

Mr. MOORE. I am not speaking for any specific law.

Mr. FESS. I do not mean any specific law, but I mean legislation of this character.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I once introduced, and probably will introduce again, a bill to prevent the misuse of the flag for advertising or for other purposes in the United States. There is no Federal law to prevent that now, and I believe it would be wise, it would certainly be honorable, it would certainly not conduce to the perfidy that men sometimes resort to in the misuse of the flag on the high seas, if we had a law in the United States which would provide that if any foreign vessel used the United States ports and adopted the ruse of stealing the American flag, and thus sailing under false colors to deceive anybody, it should not have the further use of our ports.

Mr. FESS. How would we enforce that?

Mr. MOORE. I think that is possible by fine or otherwise.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the particular bill that I introduced, I think, if the gentleman will permit, that it is a recognized principle of international law that each nation has complete control over its own flag. There is no doubt that when the United States or any other nation takes a position as to how its own flag can be used all civilized nations will observe that requirement. Furthermore, of course all we can do in the enforcement of any statute pertaining to foreign commerce on the high seas is in respect to isolation to our own harbors or to our own jurisdiction, and we can enforce such a law by confiscation of the boat which offends when it comes into the American jurisdiction.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon this subject. I desire to speak further, but I ask unanimous consent at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, it would be entirely possible for this Congress to say to the Navy Department that what it did in the case of Santiago shall not be done again. We have got to be fair and square with other nations if we expect them to be fair and square with us. We have no more business to sail under false colors than any other nation. It is unfair and unwarranted.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I will.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman know the United States Navy has done that on a good many occasions—that a transport going to the Philippines hoisted the Spanish flag?

Mr. MOORE. I do not know of many of these cases.

Mr. PLATT. It has been done a good many times.

Mr. MOORE. I referred particularly to the letter in the RECORD yesterday introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING], in which an officer of the Navy stated specifically that when they were sailing in belligerent territory and in danger they raised the flag of the British nation in order to escape the Spaniards. Now, if the American Navy permits this thing to be done, and the American Congress permits the American Navy to permit this thing to be done, then there is no ill grace in the English nation saying to its merchantmen or men-of-war, "If you are in danger anywhere, raise the American flag, because that is the flag of a neutral nation just now." Now, I want to say this, that there are regulations governing the Army of the United States at war which prohibit the use of any foreign flag or any deceptive measure or the sailing under any false colors to avoid an enemy.

Mr. MANN. If my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania had had the luck to be one of the officers gracing the Navy instead of gracing this House, as he does, and he were in command of a naval vessel where an enemy was superior in strength and came in sight, and where if they knew he was in command of the vessel they would blow it out of the water or down in the water, what would he do? Would he rather raise the flag of some other country or have them sink him to the bottom?

Mr. MOORE. If I were going to die upon the land or on the seas, having a commission from the United States Government, I would rather die under the Stars and Stripes of my Nation than to go down under any other flag. I think that answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. No; I was asking the question whether he would rather live or die. The gentleman only gives the case where he would rather die.

Mr. MOORE. As to that, I recall a celebrated incident in the Revolutionary War. I can see in my mind now the gallant Capt. Lawrence as he was being carried below say to the sailors about him, "Don't give up the ship." I think if our gallant sailor boys were in a fight they would rather go down under the Stars and Stripes than any other flag.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in this question both from reading what the newspapers have said and from what gentlemen have said on the floor, and from reading the history of the regulations of the different navies, and from reading history where we frequently have read of the raising of a flag by a foreign nation in order to protect the vessel. All I want to say is this: I think the captain of a vessel, naval or merchant, who would prefer to send his crew to destruction, to the bottom of the sea, rather than tell a lie has a superior morality to anybody who has common sense. [Applause.] Why, the very essence of warefare is lying and deceiving the enemy. That is what everybody engaged in war is trying to do, and to say that you will be so high-minded that you send word to the enemy where you are, and how many people you have got, and how you are located, and what your strong points are, and what your weak points are, gets me. Here you refuse to raise a little bunting, the flag of a foreign nation, or otherwise, in order to protect your vessel, which may be essential to the success of your country. I think that anybody who was in danger—and I am afraid my friend from Pennsylvania, if he were in danger, would seize the opportunity, as he seizes all opportunities—would run up any kind of a flag to save his vessel.

Mr. MOORE. Take the other horn of the dilemma, where a designing captain raises a false flag for the purpose of deception and steals up on a neutral. What would the gentleman say to that?

Mr. MANN. I can see no object of a designing captain stealing up on a neutral. What difference does it make; he can steal up on a neutral, but he is not at war with a neutral, and if a captain, designing or otherwise, can steal up on a neutral and fire a gun, that would be an act of war.

Mr. MOORE. Well, take a neutral carrying contraband.

Mr. MANN. A neutral carrying contraband is not subject to be fired upon unless they refuse to stop. Of course, I appreciate the fact that if all the British vessels should fly American flags in a territory where the German submarines were seen to approach to the surface there might be an accident happen; and I am very sure that would raise a good deal of trouble, because, whether that is done or not, it is the duty of any war vessel before it attacks a merchant vessel to know whether it is a neutral vessel or not.

Mr. MOORE. In extension, I desire to incorporate an excellent treatise that has just been prepared for me on this subject by Jasper Yates Brinton, Esq., a former assistant United States district attorney at Philadelphia. He has grouped his information on this subject so admirably that I think it will make profitable reading. Mr. Brinton's statement is as follows:

THE RIGHT TO THE FLAG—ACTION CALLED FOR BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO PROTECT OUR COLORS ON LAND AND SEA.

[By Jasper Yates Brinton.]

It is clear that the Lusitania violated no rule of international law in raising the flag of the United States as a ruse to escape capture by a German torpedo boat. The incident, however, will serve a useful purpose if it directs public attention to a situation in which all neutrals are deeply interested, but one which has been completely neglected in international conventions and conferences.

There are no clearly established rules of international law regulating the display by merchantmen or flags of another nation.

In a general sense, however, the right of a State to take action for the protection of its flag and to prescribe the conditions of its use is well recognized, although in the absence of affirmative action by statute or treaty no ground for diplomatic complaint exists. The matter is one which in the first instance must be dealt with by the municipal law of a State or by treaty.

The strongest expression of the general principle is thus voiced by Calvo, a distinguished European authority on international law, who observes:

"The flag is a visible sign of the national character of a ship. Each State has its own colors under which his nationals sail, and it can not be used without its permission. The assumption of the flag of a foreign State without its authorization is considered a violation of international law, as a device both fraudulent and injurious to the flag of such State. Both the State whose flag is wrongfully used and that in regard to which the use of the false flag is made have the right to demand the punishment of the guilty persons and, according to circumstances, to punish them themselves."

The same principle is recognized by Oppenheim, perhaps the leading British authority on the subject:

"It is another universally recognized rule that men-of-war of every State may seize and bring to a port of their own for punishment any foreign vessel sailing under the flag of such State without authority."

International law is silent, however, as to the enforcement or definition of this general right. Certain it is, if there is to be "punishment" for its violation, such punishment must be dependent upon statute or treaty, according to the locality of the offense and the nationality of the ship, upon such a statute, for instance, as the British shipping act of 1894, which punishes by forfeiture of the vessel any misuse of the British flag, except it be for the purpose of avoiding capture by an enemy or by a foreign ship of war in the exercise of some belligerent right.

So far as such affirmative action is concerned, the record of the United States is one of complete silence. Congress has not even taken action to protect the national flag upon land, leaving its protection to the uncertain guardianship of the several States.

In 1879 Secretary Evarts observed: "It may have been the intention of Congress when it prescribed the national flag that it should be used only by vessels of the United States as defined by law. No such intention, however, is expressed in any statute."

In line with this conclusion vessels purchased by American citizens abroad, although not entitled to American registry or to be classed as vessels of the United States, have always been held entitled to the American flag, although no declaration has ever been made as to when, if ever, vessels should not be so entitled.

This omission is not the result of oversight, for in 1872 the Solicitor of the Department of State, in commenting on the absence of any law upon the subject, remarked:

"Congress, under these circumstances, should, in my judgment, either forbid any vessel to carry the flag of the United States which is not a registered vessel of the United States or to provide for the giving of some official certificate to vessels wholly owned by citizens of the United States, wherever built."

In this connection it is of special interest to note that the use of false colors by war vessels was made one of the several topics for general discussion at the annual conference of the United States Naval War College at Newport in 1906. The conclusion of the conference was that the use of false colors by public vessels in war should be prohibited. In the course of this discussion reference was made to the question of the merchant flag. The reference is timely and of particular interest as being practically the only utterance of an official character bearing on the topic:

"It is held by some that the prohibition of the use of false colors should be limited to their use by the public vessels of the belligerents. It is argued, with much force, that the use of false colors by a neutral vessel would be in itself such strong evidence that the vessel was carrying contraband or engaged in unneutral service that the practice would be rare; and, further, to prohibit a private or merchant vessel of a belligerent from using her enemy's or a neutral flag as a possible means of diverting her enemy's attention and thus escaping capture is to deprive her of a legitimate stratagem, which involves only permissible deceit, not the slightest degree of perfidy, and no injury to the neutral in case a neutral flag were used."

In the light of the allegations now made by the German Government in respect to the alleged misuse of neutral flags by Great Britain and of the measures of retaliation now proposed by Germany, which include a statement that "in view of the misuse of the neutral flags ordered by the Government of Great Britain on the 31st ultimo, and of the hazards of neutral warfare, neutral vessels can not always be prevented from suffering from the attacks intended for enemies' ships," the problem suggested in the above paragraph assumes new and significant proportions.

On the one hand every neutral is likely in its turn to become a belligerent, and sooner or later possibly to find occasion for the temporary use of the neutral flag as a protection for its shipping. On the other hand, it is equally clear that the continued use by a belligerent of the flag of a neutral would inevitably tend to deprive the neutral of the full measure of protection which rightly belongs to its flag, as it might compel the opposing belligerent, under the exigencies of war, to adopt a course which, notwithstanding the obligation on a belligerent to ascertain the character of a merchant vessel and cargo before capture, might prove of no little inconvenience, and possibly of some danger, to neutral vessels flying their proper flags.

Upon this point the following language from the arguments presented in the discussion held at the Naval War College conference referred to, in support of the conclusion reached that the use of false colors by war vessels should be prohibited, applies with equal force to the use of false colors by merchantmen:

"It is now generally considered that a neutral has an exclusive right to the use of his own flag and the right to prescribe under what conditions it may be used. Of course this right to the exclusive use of his own flag may place upon the neutral certain obligations to guard against its misuse. A neutral would seem to be acting reasonably in demanding that his national emblem shall not be used by a belligerent to cover any act which may work injury to the other belligerent, which, as regards the neutral, is a friendly State. While the practice has hitherto been tolerated, it seems to be an infringement of the natural rights of the neutral State. It may also work hardship for a neutral vessel, for when the use of its colors is permitted to either belligerent it can not surely establish its identity by raising its national flag. Such standards of action have long been eliminated from land warfare, and its continuance on the sea is hardly in accord with the standard of fair dealing which generally obtains in naval warfare."

As has already been indicated, however, the conclusions here expressed are merely suggestions as to what should be made the law by international treaty or convention, and do not express the law as it exists.

So far as the use of false colors by war vessels is concerned, the situation is equally unsatisfactory. The present rules of international law clearly permit the use of false colors up to the point of the firing of a gun, before which time, however, the true national flag must be displayed. The attempt of Rear Admiral Stockton to change the American rule by a regulation which was embodied by him in the Naval War Code, as adopted by the Navy, was subsequently defeated by a rescinding of the regulation at the instance of naval officers.

As pointed out in the discussion before the War College, the existing rules of international law upon the subject are an inheritance from the early days of wooden sailing vessels and short-range guns. Since that time the conditions of war at sea have fundamentally changed, but the rules have not been changed to keep pace with them. At the time they were formulated, neutral rights were little considered, and the use of a neutral flag would have been regarded as a matter in which the neutral party had little concern. The approach to each other of the slow sailing vessels of the seventeenth century readily permitted time for the determination of the identity of a vessel, and thus furnished opportunity for action in case of mistake. Surprise, therefore, was not a matter of grave importance. To-day, however, a speedy and concealed approach has become a matter of first importance in naval warfare, as the first shots are often decisive of the battle.

Thus the whole reason for the rule which tolerated the use of false colors has been removed, and it seems clear that the use of a false flag by a belligerent should be effectively prohibited. Such use of the neutral flag in war should now be held to fall within the general class of offenses involving perfidy and, as such, forbidden by international law; and the rule of respect for a neutral flag and of just protection for neutral shipping should equally forbid the misuse of a neutral flag by the merchantmen of a belligerent power.

The rule as to false colors is, of course, altogether distinct from the rule which has been generally observed both by Great Britain and the United States requiring the display of the national flag before the firing of a shot.

The British Manual of Prize Law above referred to specifically provides that "before firing, the commander, if he has chased under false colors or without showing his colors, should be careful to hoist the British flag and pennant."

Similarly the Regulations of the United States Navy, 1905, provide that "under no circumstances shall he (the commander) commence an action or fight a battle without the display of the national ensign."

While, therefore, the failure to display the colors until the moment immediately preceding the opening of hostilities can not be regarded as an act of perfidy, it being for the enemy to find out for himself the nationality of the approaching vessel, it is clear that the rule which permits it, when applied in conjunction with the existing rule, or, rather, lack of rule, as to the use of false flags, it is a potent instrument for deceit and perfidy. As pointed out by the War College, the most essential part of a modern action may be not the firing of a gun, but the getting within range. To permit an enemy to come within range under a neutral flag and then to hoist the true standard at the moment of dealing the death blow is shocking to all modern conceptions of honorable warfare.

In sharp and illuminating contrast with the situation as to naval warfare are the rules applicable to war on land. Upon land the use of false colors is universally recognized as a form of deceit involving perfidy, and is strictly prohibited. As long ago as 1863 we find in the instructions to the United States Army for the following:

"The use of the enemy's national standard, flag, or other emblem of nationality for the purpose of deceiving the enemy in battle is an act of perfidy by which they lose all claim to the protection of the laws of war."

So, too, in the Oxford Manual for 1880, we find it provided:

"It is forbidden—

"(d) To make improper use of the national flag, of signs of military rank, or of the uniform of the enemy, of a flag of truce, or the protective marks prescribed by the convention of Geneva."

Under The Hague convention of 1899 it is provided:

"Besides the prohibitions provided by special conventions, it is especially prohibited—

"(f) To make improper use of a flag of truce, the national flag, or military ensigns, and the enemy's uniform, as well as the distinctive badges of the Geneva convention."

The discrepancy between the rules of the flag for warfare on land and at sea has long since ceased to be based on solid reasons of public policy. It would seem to be highly fitting that the United States should take measures to abolish it forever and to extend this abolition to warships and merchantmen alike.

Such action, however, must look to an international agreement that would prevent the United States from being placed at a disadvantage with the powers in times of war.

It is high time that this country should lead the way back to the writing of this rule into the law of civilized nations.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, near the end of the session on Monday afternoon I made some remarks upon this subject. I have taken some pains to investigate international law, so far as it is available upon the question. The House is certainly under obligation to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] for the item he proposes to put in the RECORD in connection with his remarks under leave to extend. He has done me the honor to give me an opportunity to read it, which I have done with very great interest. It is a better compilation of international law as to a nation's control over its own flag and what ought to be done with it than can be found in any single work on international law.

We find this curious situation in the development of the law of nations on the subject of their flags: More than half a century ago all civilized nations provided in their rules of warfare that nothing but the flag of the nation actually in conflict should be used in war upon land, and that has been our law ever since 1863. The instructions to the Army in 1863 contained this paragraph:

The use of the enemy's national standard flag or other emblem of nationality for the purpose of deceiving the enemy in battle is an act of perfidy by which they lose all claims for protection under the laws of war.

The same is the law of Great Britain in fighting upon land, but by reason of some curious anomaly, which is understood only when you look into it carefully, the use of a foreign flag as a ruse has been allowed on the sea. Of course land warfare has always been a hand-to-hand combat, and therefore the need of fairness even in war has always been recognized on land. On the other hand, battles on the sea have been of a very different character. But in the march of progress, now, as soon as a vessel may come in sight over the horizon, a modern gun may destroy it; and recently, with the use of the torpedo, and particularly now with the use of the submarine, the whole damage may be done in an instant, and therefore any nation that has afloat on the high seas either a warship or a merchant marine is vitally interested in the integrity of its emblem of nationality.

We use a flag. What does it mean? It means American sovereignty, and will be defended in connection with all that American sovereignty means. At our War College in Newport in 1906 the advanced thought on this subject was formulated and embodied in their report, and I will just read from the recommendation of our military experts upon what should be the treatment at sea as well as upon land. This was the recommendation of our War College at Newport in 1906. I read:

It is now generally considered that a neutral has an exclusive right to the use of his own flag and the right to prescribe under what conditions it may be used. Of course, this right to the exclusive use of his own flag may place upon the neutral certain obligations to guard against its misuse. A neutral would seem to be acting reasonably in demanding that his national emblem shall not be used by a belligerent to cover any act which may work injury to the other belligerent, which, as regards the neutral, is a friendly State. While the practice has hitherto been tolerated, it seems to be an infringement of the natural rights of the neutral State. It may also work hardship for a neutral vessel, for when the use of its colors is permitted to either belligerent it can not surely establish its identity by raising its national flag. Such standards of action have long been eliminated from land warfare, and its continuance on the sea is hardly in accord with the standard of fair dealing which generally obtains in naval warfare.

Now, I want to emphasize again the statement that I made the other night. In my judgment, if we permit any of these belligerent nations indiscriminately to use the American flag in order to disguise the actual nationality of their ships, it will inevitably lead us into serious international difficulties, even if it does not lead us into partisanship in this war. Under present conditions of naval warfare we must perform our duty as a neutral, because unless we protect our own ships by our own flag and prohibit its indiscriminate use by belligerent nations—and one belligerent has just as much right to use it as any other—we are bound to become involved in international complications.

And I might say, touching the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois as to what would be the first inclination of a man in saving himself or those under his command in a war at sea, that those considerations do not do away with the fact that there are some standards even in warfare, and it does not do away with the importance of this Nation's maintaining upon the sea as well as upon the land absolute neutrality as between the belligerent powers and the absolute safety of its own craft.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Taking a concrete illustration in this case, suppose England insisted that she has the right to use the Stars and Stripes in case of danger, and we insisted to the contrary, would not that bring about some complications?

Mr. MARTIN. International law has gotten to this point, beyond all controversy, that while all nations have not agreed as to the conditions of naval warfare as they have upon land, yet they have agreed to this by all recognized conferences, that every nation has the right to prescribe how its own banner shall be used, and therefore if the United States shall make it clear that in its opinion it is not consistent with its rights and duties of neutrality that its flag shall be used indiscriminately on the high seas by belligerent powers no nation will question that position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask three minutes more, if the Chair please.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. But just at this particular time, if the United States did insist that its flag could not be used by one of the belligerent powers, and the other power said it would be used, what would be the result?

Mr. MARTIN. Oh, well, that is a contingency that you do not need to anticipate. It is not a contingency that contains anything like the peril which will follow if we do not protest against the indiscriminate use of our flag, which would mean that every boat rightfully flying the American flag would have to remain in an American port or under cover.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Is it not true that the American Government has made no declaration on this subject with respect to its flag on the high seas?

Mr. MARTIN. Not except the declaration or opinion of the War College.

Mr. MOORE. If the Government should declare that it did not want its flag used either for decoy purposes or perfidious purposes, what would be the result, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. MARTIN. If we made such a declaration, every nation would be bound to use our flag only in the way that we prescribe.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Our flag is the emblem of neutrality. Now, if we permit it to be used without our protest, what protection would we have?

Mr. MARTIN. Absolutely none. Any merchant marine of ours on the sea, if we did not protest against our flag being used for belligerent purposes, would be in danger of the consequences of such an act.

Mr. MOORE. How would a belligerent ship distinguish between a ship of another belligerent flying our flag and an innocent American merchantman flying our flag?

Mr. MARTIN. It is impossible for them to detect it until they get so close that the whole advantage of warfare is gone. A submarine, for instance, keeps out of sight. It does not closely scrutinize to see what kind of a ship it is. It gets its information from the flag. It does its work by getting in under the craft to be destroyed. A submarine might be destroyed by a single shot fired from a gun that might be carried by a merchant vessel. The submarine keeps out of sight. It obtains its information as to the nationality of a ship from the flag it flies, and if it is the ship of a belligerent power it lays its plans to destroy it, and that is its purpose.

Now, by what I have said I do not mean to intimate that there is any lessening whatever of the right of an American citizen anywhere in the world to be protected by the American flag. If the Lusitania had been in danger of destruction—which I know not—the American citizens aboard that vessel might have gathered in a group and raised the American flag themselves, as indicating by that visible emblem that they desired the protection of the American Nation and that they were American citizens.

That would have been no violation of any rule of war or any rule of peace. In a foreign country an American citizen may raise the American flag to show that he is an American citizen and that he expects to obtain its protection, and his right to do so would be recognized by the laws of nations.

I have called attention to this matter not in any spirit of criticism of the administration at all. I realize that in time of war the difficulty of sailing between Scylla and Charybdis, in the dangers that beset us, is very great, and I would not have anything I might say embarrass the administration to any extent, but I desire to say that the rules of nations, as recognized by advanced international thought upon the subject, consider it as much an act of perfidy to deceive in naval warfare as in war upon the land as to this precise question of the right to use the flag of a neutral nation. And I say, furthermore, that the right of each nation to say how its flag shall be used is recognized everywhere. And in the next place, and finally, unless we do prescribe how our flag may be used, if we permit it to be used by belligerent nations indiscriminately as a means of disguise, we not only imperil our own sea craft but we thereby, in my opinion, desecrate the flag, and the ultimate result would be that it would become a byword between the belligerent powers as well as among neutral powers everywhere.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington Monument: For custodian, $1,200; steam engineer, $960; assistant steam engineer, $840; fireman, $660; assistant fireman, $660; conductor of elevator car, $900; attendants—1 on floor $720, 1 on top floor $720; 3 night and day watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $8,820.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, the discussion seems to have wandered somewhat from the measure under consideration, not only from the bill itself, but to a very foreign field, to wit, the flag of the United States, a most interesting subject and one that I wish I had time to illuminate and adorn. Of course, that is a very interesting question now, because there is a variety of opinion in our country with regard to conditions growing out of the war, not only with regard to the use of the flag, but with regard to other matters. I know that down in my own country we are very solicitous about the soaring price of wheat, and we are very anxious that there be less of it shipped away from our country, because it is making the price of bread very high among our people. I will say in passing that there is no clamor in my section of the country—which I imagine to be about as patriotic as the balance of the country—with regard to the flag or with regard to ships to take away any more wheat from our country and get it abroad; although I understand those who have wheat to sell are still quite anxious for new and more rapid facilities with which to get it abroad.

Mr. BRYAN. How about cotton?

Mr. DIES. I was just coming to that. Our people have been somewhat alarmed at the slowness with which cotton has been moving abroad. However, I notice that in the last few weeks the movement has grown to be quite heavy, having broken all previous records—almost 4,000,000 bales, in fact, for the eight weeks ending January 30. And I understand, although I have not the exact figures at hand, the last week has greatly increased the weekly exportation of cotton, and that it is now greater than it was the week before—so great, in fact, that some of the newspapers down in my country are beginning to warn the growers of cotton and the exporters of cotton that the tremendous exportation is likely to break the price of it. Cotton, as you will understand, is now going steadily up, and there is some fear that this great exportation of it that has set in from the ports of the United States to European countries is likely to damage the cotton farmer, because he will dump his cotton in too great a quantity upon the European market. For instance, it was pointed out in the Texas papers a few days ago that this extensive exportation of cotton had already broken the market in a certain European country 3½ cents a pound in one day.

Mr. BRYAN. I was just going to suggest that the great exportation of wheat is likely to have the same effect on the price of that commodity.

Mr. DIES. That may be true, though I dare say that the bread eaters in my country are not alarmed at the breaking of the price of wheat. In fact, the alarm down there is over the fact that they will not get any bread to eat if we keep on shipping wheat into European countries.

But I did not rise for the purpose of taking the time of the committee in the discussion of the price of wheat. For one, if I may belabor you with my opinion, while I regret for those of my constituents who are using wheat bread that the price of wheat is so high—for one, I would not be willing, if I could do it, to put the price of wheat too low, because I believe the man who raises wheat is entitled to a fair share of the prosperity of the country, and if it happens that his product goes up, why, I want him to have the benefit that falls to him from the high price of his product.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. From what port is the cotton raised in the gentleman's district shipped?

Mr. DIES. From Port Arthur, Galveston, New Orleans, and some from Mobile.

Mr. MOORE. Can the gentleman say whether there has been any great congestion of cotton at that port or in the ports of the vicinity that the ordinary ships could not carry?

Mr. DIES. At the outbreak of the war there was a great deal of congestion, no doubt, as most every gentleman knows—and I expect I know less about it than others—those who use raw cotton carry a reserve on hand. I imagine that is the case in Europe, and they were carrying a good deal, and when the war broke out, in the excitement and turmoil ensuing, they were using the reserve. Now the reserve is in danger, and they are beginning to import cotton, and I have no doubt taxing the carrying facilities.

Mr. MOORE. To the ports or from the ports?

Mr. DIES. That is according to what ports the gentleman is speaking of. If you are taking our ports, it is from, and if you are taking European ports, it is to.

Mr. MOORE. Take my port of Philadelphia, and the shipments have been proceeding in an almost normal way. There has been some congestion due to conditions on the other side. I was wondering what the conditions were at the ports of shipment in the gentleman's vicinity, whether there was such a congestion as warranted our purchase of additional ships.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I had not purposed to go into a discussion of the shipping bill, and I shall not do so now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, of course there are a number of vessels that have been destroyed during the war. Moreover, I understand that a great many of the waters of the country have been strewn with mines, and that there is a great amount of danger and delay now attendant on the interchange of commerce between our country and Europe. That was the case after the war broke out. That, of course, is making some congestion and some confusion, and inevitably so.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that at the beginning of the current month there were on shipboard ready for exportation at the various ports from which cotton usually comes 582,000 bales, and that last week on one day 136,000 bales were exported, breaking the record?

Mr. DIES. And breaking the price.

Mr. SLAYDEN. To some extent, but not much. The price stands up amazingly well.

Mr. DIES. I have no doubt that if the country could exhibit its usual patience about these troublesome matters that they would right themselves in the course of a few months, or in the course of a little while.

It occurs to my mind that recently the Secretary of the Navy, in his report for 1913, recommended to Congress that the Government go into the business of operating oil wells and refineries. At that time I remember very well that the Government was paying $1.73 for oil; oil was quite high. We were getting $1 a barrel in my country at the well. However, Congress, with its usual sluggishness, did not make the appropriation to put the Government into the refining business, and now the price of oil has dropped down to 40 cents a barrel; and, I understand, although not officially, that the Government is getting oil at a satisfactory price, and the necessity for embarking the Government into the oil-well production and refining business has passed for the moment, and that the demand to have the Government go into all fields of business endeavor by waiting a few months or a year would pass away.

Of course I make no indirect allusion, nor do I desire to allude now, to the purchase of ships. [Laughter.] Far be it from me.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. It may be interesting to the gentleman to know that the three commodities that have gone out of the port of Philadelphia are grain, in the rough, wheat, and oil. There has been a very large increase in the shipments of oil. The normal business of the port has not been quite so strong during the month of January as it was the preceding January, and therefore the necessity for new ships would appear to come largely from the demands of those who desire to export oil and grain and, possibly, cotton in the gentleman's own section. I thought that might interest the gentleman.

Mr. DIES. I do not know as it does interest me. I do not want to influence this body by saying that the Standard Oil Co. is behind the proposition to buy ships. That argument is quite threadbare.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman knows that we established a Government insurance bureau, for which we appropriated $5,000,000, and that we have insured the cargoes of many ships that have been compelled to do business by reason of the war.

Mr. DIES. I had not quite finished my observation about the Government going into the oil business. Of course I knew perfectly well that when the Secretary of the Navy, for whose political sagacity and learning I have the most profound regard, would be forced to concede once the Government embarked in the oil-producing business and in the refining business—as a man who has had some practical experience and opportunity of observation, I knew that the Government would be compelled to go into the pipe-line business, because the oil at the well would avail the Government nothing unless it was transported to the refinery, nor without ships to engage in the regular business. I knew, too, that the pension bill and the public-buildings bill and the rivers and harbors bill would be very mild abuses compared with what would happen should the Government enter the oil business; and, of course, the Government would be a victim at almost every turn. But, if I am not tiring your patience—and you seem to have great patience in the discussion of this bill—that is a subject that is disturbing my dreams as a Member of Congress.

If I am earnest about anything in this world, if I am wrought up over any public question, it is this cry of having the Government of the United States take over the activities of individuals and putting the Government into Government ownership. You will be my witness when I say that I have tired this body of men often, not only in this Congress but in every Congress of which I have had the honor to be a Member, with this question. I am glad now that in this Chamber, and in another Chamber not far from here, other gentlemen, whose words carry more weight than mine, are beginning to become alarmed at this proposition of having the Government become the manager of business and the handler of pay rolls.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIES. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman has expressed himself so strongly against Government interference in private business that I take it he was against the cotton-loan proposition.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, my friend did not do me the compliment to follow my expressions upon that question or to have observed my vote. I had the great pleasure, Mr. Chairman, of raising my voice against that monumental piece of sophistry, to use no harsher term, notwithstanding the fact that my district is one of the very largest producers of cotton in the United States. I voted against undertaking to vitalize the so-called Henry bill at the beginning of this session.

No, Mr. Chairman, whatever faults I possess, that of hypocrisy and that of a desire to occupy a seat in this Chamber at the expense of palming off gold bricks on the farmers of my district is not one of my vices. [Applause.] I am not a particularly brave man, but I did, however, give up the first office I ever had because I would not support free silver. [Applause and cries of "Good!"] I had just gotten back from the university and had been elected county judge. I might have been wrong about it, but I got it into my head in some way or other that that thing was not for the good of the people in my country, and I did not know much about any other country at that time; but I believed then, as I believe now, that a stable currency is as much to the interest of the farmers of my district as it is to the bankers of Wall Street or Lombard Street. I will tell you another thing. I never have brought myself, in my most selfish moment, to a point where I am willing to occupy a $7,500 berth at the expense of the taxpayers of this country by palming frauds off on those whose backs are bended in my district with toil. As I occupy a place in this Chamber—and I am no saint; I have enough holes in my armor to drive an ox team through—my mind goes back to the farmer in his field, rising with the sun in the morning and toiling until it sets at night. Probably he is trusting me or you in this Chamber to deal fairly with him, to come square with him and tell him the truth about public questions. Of course I knew, and we all knew, that the Government was not going to buy 5,000,000 bales of cotton any more than it was going to buy 5,000,000 mules or 5,000,000 bushels of corn or wheat or anything else. Of course I knew and you knew and we all knew, down to the pages who work in this Chamber, that the Government was not going to lend any money to the cotton farmer directly upon his cotton. I knew and we all knew that the Government did not have any money to lend; that it was just at that particular time sitting in solemn conclave, deciding which pocket of the taxpayers to insert its hand into in order to get a little more money for itself to run the Government. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, without criticizing my colleagues who see the matter differently—and they are as honest as I am, and many of them are better informed—and only speaking for myself, if I had committed myself to what I conceive to be a monumental fraud on the farmer and had told him that the Government was about to lend him money on his cotton or buy his cotton, then I would as soon try to trade him a gold brick, or I would have felt just as if I were perpetrating a fraud upon the men to whom I feel more grateful than any men in this country—the farmers of my district—who are toiling in their fields, depending upon me to come square and honest with them upon that question as upon other questions.

Mr. Chairman, this discussion has wandered far away from the budget matter. Where it will wind up nobody, of course, can tell. I regret that it has gotten into the war zone, because I think that is one of the most dangerous and dynamic questions that we could discuss in this Chamber. I was in hopes that the discussion would cling around some plan to curtail appropriations. I think if there is a serious thing for the Congress it is to find some plan to put an end to this friendly rivalry between a few committees to see which can appropriate the most money. Of course I appreciate and sympathize with a supply committee, for instance, like the River and Harbor Committee.

If we go to them and say, "Gentlemen, you ought not to appropriate so much money," they will say, "Yes; we know that; but there is old Gen. SHERWOOD sitting right by the door of the Treasury ready to grab anything that lies around loose for his pensioners if we do not get it." [Laughter.] Then I sympathize with the man who wants a public building in his district, but who also informs you that it is a losing game for the Government, and that the Government could get along a whole lot better by renting instead of building. He says, "Yes; but if I do not get it for a building in my district, HOBSON and these fellows will take it for another battleship or a gunboat." And so, Mr. Chairman, we see this rivalry of committees, each anxious to appropriate more money every year, each anxious to acquire more power every year, and I do not know how much further it can go. We are taxing incomes; we are taxing a good many things under the war tax; we are taxing almost everything in the country, and the ball goes merrily on, so far as appropriations are concerned. I remember when I first came to Congress—and it is only a little while, and I fear it is going to be just a little while more that I shall stay here—the appropriations for the Agricultural bill amounted to about $15,000,000.

Mr. GARNER. Eleven million dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is now $24,000,000.

Mr. DIES. In any event, it was a small sum compared to what it is now. I do not blame the chairman of that committee or its members. Power is one thing that every rational man wants. Next to self-interest it is the most universal of all of the passions—power. That is one reason this Government was made with three independent coordinate branches. Mr. Madison said that he wanted it so fixed that each branch would have that power and influence to prevent encroachments of the other branches of the Government, and that is the reason why this Congress is so independent of every other branch of the Government. [Laughter.] It is because men love power.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take any more time.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not object; but reserving the right to object, I would like to know why——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and amendments thereto expire in five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I hope there will be no objection, because we must make some progress with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NORTON. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee why this unseemly haste in the passage of this bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. DIES. What I was about to say was this: I commend the activity of the Agricultural Committee and all the committees of the House in the service of their country, and we know they have to go a long way to stretch the blanket in a great many instances and increase these appropriations in the rapid manner in which they are doing. Now, I have no doubt that much of the money, probably three or four millions of the money, spent in this Agricultural appropriation bill is doing a great deal of good for the farmers of this country, and I have no doubt if this matter is not halted, and if you do not get some sort of a correlation of the powers that appropriate the money, that this thing will go on until the farmer can not walk around his haystack without running over some fellow on the pay roll of the Government. I do not doubt if some check is not put to it, if some period is not placed on this disposition of these committees—that is, if the people do not rise up in revolution and cast us out—I do not know what will happen.

It seems that there are certain high-browed and intellectual persons in this country whose knowledge of farming has been generally obtained from the window of a Pullman palace car, who think that all the people of this country have gotten to a point where the Government should establish a guardianship over them, lest they break some of their bones or strain some of their muscles. The farmer must not only be taught how to get ticks off of cows, but he must actually have a man go with him and hold the cow in the vat, and, if necessary, coerce him into seeing that the ticks can actually be killed by inundation in the vat. We will so continue unless gentlemen can evolve some system that will give assurance to one of these committees if it does not appropriate the usual and unnecessary millions that these unnecessary millions will be licked up by some other committee standing ready to grab them. I say I regret the discussion is getting away so rapidly from that branch of the public service, because this body does not pass appropriations in the sense that we consider the legislation. Do you consider the merits of a public building outside of your district? Do you consider the merits of a pension bill that does not go to some man in your district? Do we consider carefully and on their merits appropriations for rivers and harbors unless they are in our district? So that these committees, backed up by persons interested in the bill, prize at each other, and the wonder to me is not that the appropriations are growing, but the wonder is that they have not grown in greater proportion than they have. Now, just this other word. I wish some system might be evolved, might be worked out by sensible men, so that some control should be given to these tremendous expenditures of public money. I know as well as I am living that the day is going to come when the taxpayer is going to look to the manner in which we pass these appropriation bills, and we will not be able to deceive him longer with hollow promises. The less learning a man has the deeper his prejudice is when he is aroused to the truth that you are not playing fair with him. The day is going to come when the wheat grower will look out over the wheat fields, when the cotton grower, bending his back over the fleecy staple, will rise up and ask the question, "Are you playing fair? You told us you were going to legislate so that we could borrow money. You told us that you were going to give us Government ownership; you told us that you were going to decrease freight rates and improve our condition, and in the meanwhile you have gone on and taxed us more and more, and you have eaten up our substance, and I have just found out the whole thing is a fraud." And woe betide the man or the party detected by the enraged and aroused public. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. COLLIER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 9584. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to sell the present old post office and site thereof in the city of Jersey City, N. J.;

H. R. 16896. An act for the relief of Col. Richard H. Wilson, United States Army; and

H. R. 18783. An act to increase the limit of cost of the United States post-office building and site at St. Petersburg, Fla.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bill of the following title:

S. 2334. An act for the relief of S. W. Langhorne and the legal representatives of H. G. Howell.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 5, 1915:

S. 5614. An act for the improvement of the foreign service.

On February 6, 1915:

S. 6839. An act extending the time for completion of the bridge across the Delaware River authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co., or their successors, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River," approved the 24th day of August, 1912.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Birthplace of George Washington, Wakefield, Va.: For repairs to fences and cleaning up and maintaining grounds about the monument, $100.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to continue for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to continue for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What about?

Mr. POWERS. It is on a matter pertaining to my district.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the gentleman to wait a little while until we get further on in the bill.

Mr. POWERS. I would like to proceed now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will wait a little while I will not object.

Mr. POWERS. I will wait then, as the chairman suggests.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriation of $5,000 made in the sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, for unveiling and dedicating the memorial to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including erecting and taking down viewing stands and putting the grounds in sightly condition, is hereby made available for said purposes during the fiscal year 1916.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the latest information about when the Grant Memorial will be finished?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Col. Harts stated to the committee that the time for the completion of the memorial had been extended to the 1st of August, 1915. It is very doubtful, however, if it will be completed at that time. Mr. Shrady at work on it is in a poor physical condition. The general plan has been going on for 11 years. The Artillery group, which is in position, is completed. The Infantry group, which is to occupy a corresponding place on the other pedestal, has been designed but not cast.

It has been made in a design, and one-quarter size has been made, and they are now working on the full-size design. In addition, the statue of Gen. Grant has not yet been commenced, and there are two tablets that have not yet been commenced.

The Artillery group, which is familiar to the Members who have examined it, is one of the very striking and fine pieces of sculpture in the city, and Col. Harts says the Cavalry group will be equally fine. While the work has taken more time than was estimated, yet when finished it will be one of the most striking and artistic monuments in the city of Washington. So by request this appropriation is continued, although probably it will not be used in the next year.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arlington Memorial Amphitheater: For continuing the construction, under the direction of a commission consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, Ivory G. Kimball, representing the Grand Army of the Republic, the commander of Camp 171, United Confederate Veterans of the District of Columbia, and Charles W. Newton, representing the United Spanish War Veterans, of a memorial amphitheater, including a chapel, at the National Cemetery at Arlington Va., and in accordance with the plans of Carrere & Hastings, architects, of New York City, adopted by the commission heretofore appointed, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, $400,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. First, Mr. Chairman, may I ask what is the necessity for reciting this commission in this bill? Why is it not sufficient simply to make this appropriation for continuing the construction? The commission is already authorized. What is the object of repeating it here? And, second, what is the reason for adding to the commission, without naming him, the commander of Camp No. 171, United Confederate Veterans of the District of Columbia? What object is there in having that official, unnamed, on this commission?

Mr. FITZGERALD. A number of Confederate soldiers are buried in Arlington, and the Confederate camp in Washington presented a petition to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, requesting that the commander of this camp be added to the commission. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds made some inquiries and ascertained that there was no objection, that it would be perfectly satisfactory to the members of the Grand Army of the Republic. The Committee on Appropriations, at the formal request of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, made provision so that the commander of this camp of Confederates in Washington might be added, the belief being that these little acknowledgments of the fact that the spirit of controversy had died out continually helps to cement the better feeling now existing among the survivors of that great contest.

Mr. MANN. This commission is now in existence. It has adopted certain plans. The work is under construction. For aught I know at least the adding of some gentleman, however good he may be, to this commission may upset all the plans they have. Here is a commission now consisting of five persons, I believe.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would not embarrass them.

Mr. MANN. A commission consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, Mr. Kimball, and Mr. Newton. Now, it is proposed to add another one, name unknown.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the statement was made that the plans had been adopted and approved unanimously, to my recollection, and the addition of one other person would not make any difference. It was thought that it would be gracious to have a representative of the Confederate Veterans on the commission. They desired it particularly, and the committee thought it would be a nice thing to acquiesce in that proposition.

Mr. MANN. Well, it seems to me to be rather an impertinent thing to do. I do not know that I shall object to it; but here is a commission created and in existence, and no one would probably have objected in the first instance to naming a man from the United Confederate Veterans on the commission. But it is in existence and running along, and no question of sectionalism has entered into it, and somewhere, somebody, probably with hatred in his heart, has proposed to add somebody else to it, which introduces sectionalism in itself. It is not designed, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] says, to make any difference; it is not to have any effect. Then what do they want it for? If it does have any effect it ought not to go in, and if it does not have any effect it is ungracious on their part to suggest it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on it.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] makes the point of order on the paragraph. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] on it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the addition of this gentleman will not in any way affect the work. There are several thousand soldiers buried in Arlington Cemetery. A monument has recently been erected there to perpetuate their memory. The spirit of antagonism and division which for years existed between the survivors of those engaged in this conflict has gradually been eliminated. In their closing years they have come together in a kindly and friendly spirit in the patriotic support and love of their common country, and at the request of this camp, that a representative of the Confederate veterans might be included on the commission, the Committee on Appropriations thought it was one of those gracious acts which, if done by the Congress, would tend very much to promote that fraternal and friendly spirit that is so desirable. The war, with its rancors and bitterness, has passed. A great reunion a short time ago at Gettysburg of the survivors of the two contending armies has undoubtedly done much to remove the rancor and misunderstanding, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not press his point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I insist on the point of order. It is a change of existing law. The words on line 1 of page 71, after the word "Republic," down to and including the word "Columbia," on line 3, reading, "The commander of Camp 171, United Confederate Veterans of the District of Columbia," are new law, and I make a point of order to that language.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman from Illinois withhold it until a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, at whose request the provision was inserted, may make a statement? He is present.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well.

[Mr. BURNETT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] for his indulgence in withholding the point of order. Nor do I believe I could add one word to what has been said by the chairman of the committee, Mr. FITZGERALD, and by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] as to the reason why this item should remain in the bill; but I should like to have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who made the point of order, so that he may listen to an appeal from a Member of this House who is the son of a Confederate soldier, one who has in his heart no spirit of bitterness or feeling because of that great struggle which ended half a century ago. I have on many occasions addressed the Union soldiers, and on one occasion up in the gentleman's own State I had the honor of addressing a body of Union soldiers, perhaps 800 or 1,000 of them. And it was my pleasure to carry to them a message of peace and good will.

Now, this provision will not cost the Government a penny. This added Confederate commissioner will not cost the Treasury one cent, but serves for nothing. This was placed in the bill not only at the instance of the Confederate camp here in Washington but also of the Union veterans, who requested that this Confederate commissioner be added. The representatives of both these organizations have united in this request. The committee of the House who have charge of public buildings and grounds have seen fit and proper to recommend this item. Not only the Subcommittee on Appropriations, but the full Committee on Appropriations, have recommended it to the House. If the gentleman will withdraw his point of order and permit the membership of the House to vote upon the proposition, I feel that we may safely leave the item to that side of the aisle. I have yet to find a brave private soldier who fought in the Union Army and wore the blue who has any bitterness in his heart toward his brave adversaries on the other side. If the Union veterans themselves are willing to request that this be done, will not the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his point of order and permit the membership of the House to vote upon the item? It is not so important a matter that it should even be suggested that the Rules Committee bring in a special rule.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the Committee on Appropriations did not suppose that there would be any point of order or objection to it, because, if there is to be objection to this item, then we have done harm and not good by putting it in here. We want to do good. Those of us who live in the South want this Union to be cemented not only by law, but cemented by love. I want to have it so that wherever I may go in the Union I may feel not only that I have all the rights and privileges under the law that any other citizens have, but that I have in the hearts of those to whom I go the same feeling that we would accord to you.

Next to the last speech that the great McKinley ever made in this world was made at Memphis, Tenn., to the Confederate Veterans' Association. It was there that the great martyred President said, in the presence of the Confederate Veterans' Association wearing the gray uniform and speaking with tears of love in his eyes as he talked to them, that it would be his ambition as President of all the people to see all the Confederate cemeteries taken over, with the permission of the people who were now controlling them, and have the great Government of the United States mark each Confederate soldier's grave with a little slab, just as the graves of the Union soldiers are marked. The Confederate veterans gave him a reception at Memphis, and there was never anything of the kind more beautiful. And what a beautiful recollection all of those people have of the great President. When he left Memphis he came by Washington, and a few days after that the news was flashed over the wires from Buffalo that President McKinley had been assassinated. And in every single town and village in the South of any size there were emblems of mourning displayed, and the Confederate Veterans' Associations were foremost in making that display of mourning, because Maj. McKinley was loved and revered by the Confederate soldiers, and many a Confederate soldier's face was wet with tears as they discussed in their memorial meetings mourning his loss.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask the indulgence of the committee for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. It was an act like that, coupled with the action of the great veterans' association that had the reunion at Gettysburg of the Confederate and Union veterans, that has caused so much of the sectional bitterness to be eliminated, until now we can say in truth and in fact that the country is united in heart. Let us not permit this little item to show that there is still some feeling of bitterness or sectionalism in one single heart in this House. I do not believe it would come from the heart of a brave Union soldier to make that point. This provision will cost nothing, and I believe it will result in much good to permit this item to remain, a simple recognition of the fact that Confederate veterans are buried in that cemetery; and when this auditorium is dedicated and when a ceremony takes place in that sacred spot all, both from North and South, may go and participate and do honor to the brave men who saved the Nation and do honor to those brave adversaries who fought for what they believed to be right, foes worthy of the great chivalry of the great Union soldiers. Let this auditorium be and symbolize in real truth a reunited country. Let it be a place where every Confederate soldier, their sons, and daughters may assemble with every Union soldier and their sons and daughters and do honor to their sacred dead. Let them have a place where the blue and the gray can always meet, for it will be only a few years when there will be no answer to the bugle call by either side.

Both of these great Armies will have crossed over the river and will be resting under the shade of the trees. Let the Union soldier know in his dying years that he has lived to see in truth and in fact the thing nearest his heart—a reunited country—the greatest consummation of that wish of his as a soldier in the ranks. Let him learn and know that we are politically united, united in heart, united in hand, and let no discordant vote on a little item like this be heard in this Hall. [Applause.]

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, as a Union veteran and as a member of the legislative committee of the Grand Army of the Republic, the committee on legislation, of which I was chairman last year and am now second on the same, I desire most heartily to approve of this section to place on the commission the commander of the United Confederate Veterans' camp of this city, to indorse most cordially what has been so ably, eloquently, and patriotically said by the chairman of the committee, Mr. FITZGERALD, by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], as well as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], and to say that I think this ought to prevail by a unanimous vote. I hope my good friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who is always fair, and in whose heart beats the strongest impulses of true American patriotism, will withdraw his objection and let it become a law.

I want to say in answer to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama that there are no two sides to this question, no two parties to-day in citizenship nor in love of our common country. We are all marching shoulder to shoulder, whether we live in the South or in the North—marching with the touch of elbows to the music of progress and the good of all sections under that starry old banner we all love and of which we are so justly proud. I trust that this will become a law and that my good friend from Illinois will withdraw his objection to it in the interest of harmony, good will, and brotherly love. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist on the point of order. I want to say to him that this item would not have been in the bill if the minority members on the subcommittee or on the committee had raised any objection to it. It did not occur to us that there would be any objection made anywhere. Had we believed that there was any probability of a point of order being raised we would have suggested that the item be left off the bill, because, while we hoped and believed that the insertion of this provision in the bill would be helpful, we realized that it might have an opposite effect if there were any objection made to it.

I want to remind my friend from Illinois of the fact, as I understand it, and as the gentleman from Alabama has suggested, that this memorial is one to the heroism of the women of the Nation during the Civil War. I do not recall the language of the bill, but I am sure that no one has any disposition, or would have any disposition, not to accord as much of praise and honor to the heroism of the women of the South during that great struggle as to the heroism of the women of the North. The women of the southern section, of the two, suffered the most. While it is true that the addition of this representative of the Confederate veterans to the commission will not in any wise affect the plans or the procedure in letting the contract in executing the work, we felt that it was a gracious recognition of the conditions of a reunited country and of the fact that in this cemetery at Arlington rest the remains of a large number of Confederate veterans, and that the monument was a monument to the splendid devotion of all the women of the country during the dark days of the Civil War. [Applause.]

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, this proposition was originally before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. My colleague from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], a Republican member of that committee, made the motion to direct a favorable report to be made on the bill providing for an additional member of this commission. I introduced the original bill in the House providing for an appropriation of $750,000 for the construction of the Arlington memorial amphitheater, and it was prepared by Grand Army men and delivered to me by Judge Kimball, a member of the commission.

I am sure had it occurred at that time to the Grand Army men they would have inserted in the bill the name of a representative of the Confederate veterans. This item we are considering does not provide for an appropriation, and we have proceeded with the work where the contract has been let, and the work will begin at an early day.

As has been stated by all of the speakers, there are a large number of ex-Confederate soldiers buried in Arlington Cemetery, and last summer a Confederate monument was completed and dedicated in the cemetery. In addition to the Confederate soldiers who rest at Arlington, the men brought back from Habana Harbor, drowned on the battleship Maine, are buried there. In addition to those men who served in the Navy in the Spanish-American War there are a large number of Spanish-American soldiers in the Army, either in the Regular or the Volunteer Army, who served in that war, buried in Arlington.

Gen. Joe Wheeler, a distinguished Member of this House for many years, is buried in the Arlington Cemetery. In the list of former soldiers in the Spanish-American War sleeping in Arlington are many sons of ex-Union and ex-Confederate soldiers. Decoration services which take place in the cemetery are not only for Union soldiers, but also for the Spanish-American soldiers and for Confederate soldiers, and on the completion of this amphitheater it will be used by the people every year to pay fitting tribute to the soldiers who served in the various wars and on both sides during the Civil War. So it is quite appropriate that the Confederate veterans should have a representative on this commission. When this matter was brought to the attention of the House and this discussion begun, I was in the act of reading a patriotic speech delivered 14 years ago on the 27th of January by the late Hon. William Richardson, of Alabama. It was a speech in which he favored an appropriation of $250,000 for the beginning of the construction of a home for the ex-Union or Federal and ex-Spanish-American soldiers in the South, near Johnson City, Tenn.—a speech made by an ex-Confederate soldier, and in which he said that since the close of the Civil War he had always favored just and fair pensions for those who defended the Union, and that it gave him great pleasure, as a Member of the House and as an ex-Confederate soldier, to vote to establish a home that would care for and protect old ex-Union soldiers in their declining years. He expressed a regret that the bill did not carry an appropriation for twice the amount mentioned. So I appeal to my Republican colleagues to join the Republicans on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in asking that this provision be inserted in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that anything that I may say on this subject will go far toward inducing the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] not to make the point of order, but I do wish to express the hope that he will not insist upon it. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] says, the Union veterans in the District of Columbia have no objection to the incorporation of this provision in the bill. The Committee on Appropriations unanimously inserted it in the bill, but did not do so until the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, by unanimous action, requested that it be done. I have no doubt but that if the proposition had been made when the bill authorizing the erection of the building at Arlington was passed by Congress to have this provision incorporated in that bill, there would have been not the slightest objection on either side of the aisle. It is but a few months ago that we all listened to an eloquent address by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] appealing to all sections of the country for a reunited country, and I am sure that his appeal touched the heart and mind of every man on either side of the aisle.

I thank God that the bitterness which was engendered by the Civil War has completely passed away; that the blue and the gray, grand old heroes of a great war, and in whose bravery, shown on a hundred battle fields, we all take a common pride, now meet in friendly reunion, each paying generous tribute to the valor and devotion to duty of the other during those years of civil strife. We all love the same flag and bear loyal allegiance to a common country. And let me say to my brethren of the North that the flag has no more devoted adherents and none who would more willingly brave shot and shell in its defense than those same soldiers who, in the dark days of 1861 to 1865, so bravely followed the great Robert E. Lee in defense of principles which they believed to be right. But that issue, Mr. Chairman, was settled as a result of the war, and there is no one in the South who would seek to question, if he could, the wisdom with which it was settled. The verdict of the war was accepted without rancor or complaint, and the South, suffering no humiliation from an honorable defeat, turned its attention to restoring its ruined homes and building up its great industries. So well have they succeeded that there is to-day no happier, more prosperous, law-abiding, and patriotic citizenship in this great Union than is to be found in the Southland. Go where you will in the South, and the war is remembered only because its history tells us not only of the courage and self-sacrificing devotion to duty of our own fathers and kindred who wore the gray, but also of the courage and chivalry of their adversaries who wore the blue—all Americans and all now, thank God, copartners in all the blessings of liberty and opportunity which is guaranteed by our flag.

There is no sectional feeling in the South, Mr. Chairman, and we are happy to know that there is no such feeling either in the North, East, or West. This could not have been more strongly emphasized than by the excellent speech made a few moments ago by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN], who as a mere boy gave the Union splendid and highly creditable service in the terrific struggle at Gettysburg and other places, and who is now rendering the people of his State and the Nation important and valuable service in this House.

Congress has determined to build an amphitheater at Arlington, which will not only serve as a monument to the brave dead buried there, but also as a place where Decoration Day and other exercises may be held in honor of both the blue and the gray who sleep there. By oversight, I am quite sure, when the bill authorizing the building was passed the commander of the Confederate veterans here in the District of Columbia was not named as one of the commission having in charge the erection of the building. The name of the commander of the Union veterans was included, and this provision simply seeks to cure the omission.

This provision does not cost one cent. It will not add one dollar to the cost of the building at Arlington. It does not change the plan in any way, but it is a recognition of a great number of citizens, a loyal number of citizens throughout the South, and, indeed, in every section of our great country. Confederate veterans are interred at Arlington as well as those who belonged to the Federal Army, and it seems to me it is nothing but a fair recognition, a liberal and a generous recognition, of these men who fought under the gray, and who have since that time been loyal, patriotic, earnest citizens of this great country. I do hope that the gentleman from Illinois, liberal and generous as he always is, patriotic, as we all know him to be, will not see fit to insist upon the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, it has always been my hope that I might live to see every particle of bitterness engendered by the Civil War obliterated, and I still hope and pray that that day may come, if it has not already come. Surely nothing that I could do would be done with the intention of continuing any bitterness between the sections of the country, for I believe that every patriotic citizen in America should devote every energy within him to bringing harmony and peace and love into the heart and mind of every citizen in the Union. There can be no reason why this attitude should not be assumed by men of the North and men of the South, and I am glad to know that there is a growing tendency toward greater harmony between the men who fought on the side of the South and those who fought on the side of the North. We are living in a single nation, and of course we should be a single citizenship. There ought not to be any discrimination anywhere against any man, whether he be from the North or from the South. Every man in the land should be accorded the same rights, and if everybody in the country would devote himself to the establishment of a policy which would result in granting every man the same rights there would be no longer any reason for bitterness of feeling or of sectionalism. I certainly would be the last man in this House to do a thing which would continue bitterness or strife between citizens of America. On the contrary, my life has been devoted to producing harmony of thought, producing a higher degree of patriotism, to the upbuilding of a more united feeling of friendship among the citizens of our common country. My only objection to the language in the paragraph under consideration was that it was legislation on an appropriation bill. I made no objection to the language because of the fact that it provided for a commander of Camp 171 of the United Confederate Veterans of the District of Columbia being made a member of the commission. That was the last thing that entered my mind, and if leaving the language in the bill will produce that harmony and that feeling of brotherly love and that sense of justice which the gentlemen who have so eloquently spoken believe it will, I gladly withdraw the point of order. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Marquette, Mich.: For continuing improvement in completion of contract authorization, $100,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am not going to object to this appropriation, but I am going to direct the attention of the House to the fact that we have during the history of this country expended a tremendous amount of money to aid navigation in various ways. We have dragged the bottoms for pinnacle rocks, we have sounded the streams, charted the coasts, established buoys, signals, and lighthouses, provided the Revenue-Cutter Service to enforce the law and patrol the sea. Through the Navigation Bureau we have inspected the boilers and the hulls and licensed the mates, the pilots, and the engineers; our ships of war we have sent out to protect the privately owned vessels of commerce; the brave men of our Life-Saving Service are ever ready to succor them when in distress; our ocean tugs are out to sea, to tow them into harbor in time of storm; we dredge the harbors, so they may berth in safety; we guarantee to them the protection of the entire force and strength of the Navy, and our own lifeblood as well, as they carry the flag into foreign ports and on the high seas of the earth. For all these services out of the taxes taken from the buyers of clothes and sugar and the necessaries of life through customs we have not demanded a cent of return. Under various mail contracts and subventions we have even paid these shipowners vast sums in cash.

The people have borne these sacrifices cheerfully. They poured their treasure into the laps of the shipowners and they protected them with liberal laws without murmur. They took their satisfaction from the thought that the Stars and Stripes were thus made to fly in foreign ports and carry a message of democracy to the ends of the earth; they felt secure in the thought that in time of war the American troops could find transports to convey them to their posts in Alaska, the islands of the Pacific, or elsewhere in the Western Hemisphere where they might be needed, and then the producers of cotton and the producers of wheat and the manufacturers and the laborers said, "We must have vessels in which to export our products; we can not depend on foreign vessels in time of emergency," and so we gave of our revenues with a lavish hand, and then we keystoned the arch with the grandest achievement of man, the job that the foreign builders had rejected, after intermitable digging in the rubbish and débris of decade after decade—we took up and accomplished and presented to the private shipowners, we had encouraged so long, the Panama Canal.

Last July the European war broke out, the emergency against which we had provided arose in mild form, comparatively speaking, and we turned to the shipowners, to find we had been basely betrayed. I will not dwell on the dark chapters that detail that betrayal.

The question arose when the war broke out as to how we were going to protect our own commerce, what we were going to do in the way of caring for our people by bringing them home from Europe, and providing means of carrying our surplus supplies to the ports of the world. Our workers were confronted with idleness and starvation, our farmers with ruin. Soon after the war began an attempt was made to remedy the existing difficulty. A sop was thrown to those who demanded an accounting. It was recognized by all sides that there were great and serious difficulties. A great statesman from New England, who was taught in the school of Cannon, who was sired in his public service as an Aldrich regular, introduced a bill and sent it over to this House to remedy that trouble. That remedy provided for the Government itself to go into the freight, passenger, and mail business. The people cheered its author and talked of him for President. The bill was passed in the Senate unanimously. It provided for the Government of the United States to take its Navy vessels, its transports, with the guns of the Navy upon their prows and the flag of the United States over all and with the officers of the Navy in uniform in command, to carry cotton and wheat and the products of this country to the foreign ports of Europe and to South America, these vessels to run in competition with the ordinary shipping trade and the steamships that might be owned by private enterprise. Brave, courageous men they were. A man of the hour, with the remedy at hand. No Shipping Trust could bluff. Government ownership and operation was declared to be the only remedy in the emergency, and the proponents of that bill were for it. It passed the Senate unanimously and was sent over to this House—the Weeks bill. During the debate it was suggested that war had already broken out, the trouble already existed, and that and defects in the measure could be remedied upon further consideration by the House.

Later the administration took up the fundamental principle of the Weeks bill, but being an administration of peace and not being willing to send the Navy to Europe with supplies, knowing such a course would be dangerous and silly and unwise, and also knowing the proposition was an economic absurdity, because naval transports are not only in need in the Navy but are not built to do the work of merchant ships, and that the attempt to carry freight on them would result in great economic loss, the administration, following the precedent of the Panama Railroad steamships, proposed an effective, workable ship-purchase bill, one that would do two things, first, keep us out of unnecessary complications as a Government with the warring nations, and, second, put us into the shipping trade on terms that are fair and sensible from a business standpoint.

Mr. Chairman, the time and the opportunity is now before the Members of Congress to take up that Weeks bill and remedy the difficulties in it, an opportunity of making it so that there is no danger of war, an opportunity of taking the naval officers off of these vessels, an opportunity of taking the guns off the vessels. That opportunity is given this House as an act of honorable statesmanship, or if the sense of public duty does not force nonpartisan action, if it be a party measure, then the opportunity is to the Democratic Party in this House to take up the Weeks bill now pending and make it a peaceful and practical measure, make it a measure that will really accomplish something that will be worth while. The gentlemen who gave us this measure and stand for it—I suppose they still stand for it—say we will get into trouble with foreign nations if we establish such a merchant marine as the administration proposed and as is involved in the Alexander bill; but they were not afraid a little while ago to send a transport of the United States Navy abroad and carry the commerce of the United States, and they were willing to have naval transports go into foreign ports at war not as a national of this country, but carrying with it the very sovereignty of this country.

The principle of Government ownership and operation that was recognized in the Weeks bill is bound to be adopted. The only difference is that it is a "phony" bill so far as efficiency in an economic sense is concerned. No Shipping Trust worried about it. "Are we not all friends?"

Let us accept the Weeks bill in principle and make it effective, so it will go into the real trade of the country and will affect the ships that carry the trade, so it will force lower rates and really be the means of providing an American merchant marine that the people will gladly support with their taxes. They were not afraid of those awful complications when they passed the Weeks bill, because the economic side for the Shipping Trust was protected. They knew these naval vessels would not effectively compete with privately owned vessels because they were not of the right type; they were not built to do that kind of work; but now, when there comes an opportunity for American-owned merchant vessels that can compete with privately owned vessels to carry the commerce of the United States into the ports of the world safely and without substantial danger, they are afraid of war. They were not afraid of war when the economic question was protected for the Shipping Trust, but they are afraid when the economic question is exposed. Verily did the prophet speak when he said, "The love of money is a root of all evil."

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Hudson River, N. Y.: For continuing improvement in completion of contract authorization, $410,000.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that he may be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object. I want to know if the gentleman is going to speak about the glories of the Hudson River, because I am interested in that myself.

Mr. POWERS. No; I shall not talk about the glories of the Hudson, although it has a great many to its credit.

Mr. PLATT. Then the gentleman is not going to infringe upon my province?

Mr. POWERS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago when the immigration bill was before this House, an attempt was made to pass it over the veto of the President. During the discussion of that measure the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MANAHAN] in the course of his remarks made this statement:

There is not a laboring man in the United States who will not agree with me that the trouble with labor is not in the number of competitors, but in the selfish greed of big business that takes from him the fruits of his toil.

He made other statements along that line, and I asked him this question:

What laws would the gentleman suggest that would bring this opportunity, this panacea, to the laboring man? We would like something specific on that score.

In reply Mr. MANAHAN said:

That is a very simple proposition, and I am surprised that the gentleman from Kentucky would ask a question so elementary; yet I ought not to say that I am surprised when I consider that he comes from a constituency where something in the neighborhood of 30 per cent of the people are illiterate.

After Mr. MANAHAN had concluded his remarks I stated to him that later in the day I would, when an opportunity presented itself, answer the charge of illiteracy which he had made against my constituency. I did that. I pointed out that the statement was unfounded in truth and in fact; that instead of having an illiteracy of 30 per cent it was less than 20 per cent. Mr. MANAHAN was present and made a brief reply to my statement and I thought that the incident had closed. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the following day contained Mr. MANAHAN'S speech in full, together with the little colloquy that he and I had had, and I was sure it was over. In a day or two following that my attention was called to the fact that another issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD contained an extension of remarks on the part of Mr. MANAHAN, in which he made a vicious assault upon the constituents I have the honor to represent. Among other things, he said this:

It will be conceded, I think, that the gentleman's district is in bad shape intellectually, and as it is a part of the United States geographically—

Implying thereby that it was not a part of it morally, intellectually, or otherwise—

I feel at liberty to suggest two remedies. I suggest that the gentleman from Kentucky ask unanimous consent to print as a public document the alphabet, the first reader, and the multiplication table, so that he can, under his frank, send them to the illiterate voters whom he has the honor to represent.

I desire to say that if ever I get ready to make a vicious assault, either upon the gentleman from Minnesota or his constituents, I shall do it upon the floor of this House, and if possible in the presence of the gentleman and not under leave to print. I notified him that on this afternoon I expected to make a reply to his extension of remarks in the RECORD. What I say I would like to say in his presence. I shall not pursue what I was about to say was a cowardly course and attack the gentleman or his constituents under a leave to print; but I will not use the word cowardly as applied to his conduct because I do not desire to be unparlimentary and that would be unparliamentary.

I have never at any time in a speech here attacked the motives of any Member of this House in any position he has taken on any question before this body, or upon any vote he has seen fit to cast. The man who indulges in it, in my judgment, is indulging in a little business. It sometimes happens here, and some of it has been going on recently in another body at the other end of this building. I deplore it. It comes in bad grace. In the private walks of life if one gentleman attacks the motives of another without justification his conduct justly is characterized as that of a coward. I submit that the proprieties, the amenities, the courtesies, the dignity of this body, demand of its Members the practice of at least as many of the ordinary virtues and civilities in their conduct one toward another as are practiced by the average citizen in the ordinary walks of life. If we hear a street urchin or some one from the underworld pouring forth his billingsgate and applying opprobrious epithets to some one who has displeased him, his outgivings throw no light upon the character of the man whom he assails, but they do throw a flood of light upon the individual making the assertions. That is as certainly true in this body as it is elsewhere.

Nor have I ever assailed any section of this great country by reason of its illiteracy or for any other of its shortcomings. I hope I never may. As an American citizen I would despise myself if I should pursue that sort of conduct. I would hate myself if I were to take pride in parading before the public gaze the shortcomings of the people of the State of Minnesota or the people of any other section of this great country.

The gentleman says that I ought to print in the form of a public document the alphabet, the first reader, and the multiplication table and send them down to my illiterate constituents under my frank. The advice of a man who exhibits such poor taste and judgment, as the gentleman from Minnesota has exhibited in characterizing my constituents as being illiterate, could not be safely followed by any decent, self-respecting American. And I want to say to him, and I want him to know, that there are men down in my district who, though they can not read a word or write a line in any language or dialect, if sent as Representatives here would father safer and saner legislation than any that has emanated, or ever will emanate, from the diseased and disordered brain of the windy gentleman hailing from the blizzards and snowdrifts of Minnesota. [Laughter.]

The gentleman casts the obloquy of illiteracy upon my district, and intimates that but for that I would not be here as a Member. There is at least one important difference between the gentleman's constituents and mine, and that is this: Mine know enough to elect me to office. His know too much to elect him. [Laughter.] In the recent primary down in my district I beat my Republican opponent nearly 10,000 majority. I carried 14 out of the 15 counties. I beat him nearly 5 to 1. I won by about 10,000 majority in the final election and carried all the counties. I am informed that in a primary election held not long since out in the State of Minnesota the gentleman was a candidate for the Republican nomination for attorney general out in that State and was beaten by a majority of nearly 2 to 1. His is a wise constituency. [Applause and laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Artificial limbs: For furnishing artificial limbs and apparatus, or commutation therefor, and necessary transportation, $95,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. There is such a notable reduction in the appropriation for this purpose that I would like to know the cause of it. The appropriation for furnishing artificial limbs and apparatus to disabled volunteer soldiers is so small that it attracts attention.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is the off year. Every third year the appropriation is large, and the second year it is smaller, and the third year it is smaller still. Every third year is the large appropriation, and the two succeeding years fall off.

Mr. MANN. That is, we furnish an artificial limb every three years, and most of them come in one year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. This is what they call a low year. In 1913 the appropriation was $275,000. In 1914 it was $85,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Support and medical treatment of destitute patients: For the support and medical treatment of medical and surgical patients who are destitute, in the city of Washington, under a contract to be made with the Providence Hospital by the Surgeon General of the Army, $19,000, one half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. SISSON. The point of order is made upon the ground that there is not only no law authorizing the appropriation, but it is in violation of a positive statute controlling the District of Columbia appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not, Mr. Chairman. The appropriation is authorized under the act approved July 27, 1868, which provides—

For the completion of the Providence Hospital in Washington City, D. C., $30,000: Provided, That all expenditures for said Providence Hospital under appropriations by Congress shall be made under the direction and control of the Surgeon General of the Army, whose duty it shall be to report at the December session of every Congress a full and complete statement of all expenses incurred under and by virtue of appropriations made by Congress.

That is the act under which Congress appropriates for the support and treatment of medical and surgical patients under a contract with the Surgeon General.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to see that statute which was read by the gentleman.

Mr. SISSON. I have sent for it now. I did not know that the point of order would be resisted.

Mr. Chairman, the statute to which I refer is a part of a District appropriation bill passed some years ago. It provides that it shall be against the policy of the Government and unlawful to make any appropriation of money or anything of value, or of any gratuity out of the Federal Treasury to any institution under sectarian or denominational control. I had the act here on another occasion, and called the attention of another chairman to it, and if I had known that there would be any controversy about it I would have had it here. I have sent for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to see the statute before he rules on the point of order. If the gentleman has not the statute before him, the Chair would suggest that the item be passed over.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We will have it here in a moment.

Mr. SISSON. The provision to which I refer reads as follows:

And it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government of the United States to make no appropriation of money or property for the purpose of founding, maintaining, or aiding by payment for services, expenses, or otherwise, any church or religious denomination or any institution or society which is under sectarian or ecclesiastical control; and it is hereby enacted that, from and after the 30th day of June, 1898, no money appropriated for charitable purposes in the District of Columbia shall be paid to any church or religious denomination or to any institution or society which is under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

It is that positive statute which is in contravention of this item of appropriation. For that reason I make the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing before this committee to show that Providence Hospital is under any church or sectarian control. I have before me the act to incorporate the Providence Hospital of the city of Washington. It provides:

Be it enacted, etc., That Lucy Gwynn, Teresa Angela Costello, Sarah McDonald, Mary E. Spalding, and Mary Carroll, and their successors in office, are hereby made, declared, and constituted a corporation and body politic, in law and in fact, under the name and style of the directors of Providence Hospital, and by that name they shall be and are hereby made capable in law to sue and be sued, to plead and be impleaded, in any court within the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia; to have and use a common seal, and to alter or amend the same at pleasure; to have, purchase, receive, possess, and enjoy any estate in lands, tenements, annuities, goods, chattels, moneys, or effects, and to grant, devise, or dispose of the same in such manner as they may deem most for the interest of the hospital: Provided, That the real estate held by said corporation shall not exceed in value the sum of $150,000.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said corporation and body politic shall have full power to appoint from their own body a president and such other officers as they may deem necessary for the purposes of their creation; and in case of the death, resignation, or refusal to serve of any of their number, the remaining members shall elect and appoint other persons in lieu of those whose places may have been vacated; and the said corporation shall have full power and all the rights of opening and keeping a hospital in the city of Washington for the care of such sick and invalid persons as may place themselves under the treatment and care of the said corporation.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said corporation shall also have and enjoy full power and authority to make such by-laws, rules, and regulations, as may be necessary for the general accomplishment of the objects of said hospital: Provided, That they be not inconsistent with the laws in force in the District of Columbia: And provided further, That this act shall be liable to be amended, altered, or repealed at the pleasure of Congress.

Approved April 8, 1864.

That is the act incorporating Providence Hospital. There is nothing in it that puts it under the charge of any ecclesiastic or makes it sectarian in any way. There is nothing to indicate that it is. The mere statement of the gentleman that it is an appropriation for an institution of this character contrary to law certainly is not sufficient to sustain the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, there is another matter that should be considered in this connection. The language to which the gentleman from Mississippi has referred, and which he thinks makes this appropriation subject to the point of order, reads:

And it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government of the United States to make no appropriation of money or property for the purpose of founding, maintaining, or aiding, by payment for services, expenses, or otherwise, any church or religious denomination, or any institution or society which is under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

So far as I have read, that is simply the expression of a viewpoint and not the enactment of any law which in any way controls Congress or makes it unlawful to do anything. The remaining part undertakes to provide:

And it is hereby enacted that, from and after the 30th day of June, 1898, no money appropriated for charitable purposes in the District of Columbia shall be paid to any church or religious denomination, or to any institution or society which is under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

But this is not a case where money is appropriated for charitable purposes in the District of Columbia, within the meaning of that language. This is an appropriation to take care of certain patients, and is not a gift to the hospital. It is not a fund for the maintaining of the hospital, but is a fund to be used in payment of contract services for taking care of destitute patients who may go to the hospital, and I submit to the Chair that it does not come within the language of the act upon which the gentleman relies.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman relies upon the contract, then unquestionably it is subject to a point of order, because there is no law which now authorizes that contract.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I have read the law authorizing the contract—the act of 1868.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to see the act of 1868 upon which the gentleman relies.

Mr. SISSON. Then I want to say furthermore, Mr. Chairman, that my information and knowledge—which might require proof in a court—is that the institution is absolutely under sectarian control. I do not take it that the gentleman will insist that Providence Hospital is not under sectarian control. The charter is one which enables certain trustees to acquire certain property for the purpose of holding it for certain purposes, but it is unquestionably true that the trustees are under sectarian control.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is undoubtedly true that the trustees of Providence Hospital are not infidels or agnostics. The mere fact that the trustees profess some religious belief does not make an institution sectarian. That is very clear. A sectarian institution is one which by its charter is specifically placed under the control of a certain religious body or dedicated to the advancement of certain religion. The mere fact that men profess faith in God in some form or another does not make the institution with which they are affiliated sectarian.

Mr. SISSON. Admitting that a profession of faith in a particular religious denomination of the trustees, that they have some religion, does not, of course, make the institution of which they are trustees an institution under sectarian control, but it is common knowledge that the Providence Hospital is under sectarian control.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the Chair take cognizance of who has control of the hospital; and if not, is there anything in the item under discussion that would advise the Chair as to whether or not the Providence Hospital is sectarian?

Mr. SISSON. There would only be one way by which the Chair could get official knowledge, and that would be by having the hearings before the proper committee—for instance, the committee that reports this bill—to have some proof in the hearings and establish the fact as to whether they were or were not under sectarian control. But I did not anticipate that that proposition would be controverted.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Does the gentleman intend to make another point of order against the succeeding paragraph?

Mr. SISSON. I shall make a point or order against the succeeding paragraph and against all appropriations to any institution of any kind that is under sectarian control. I want to state frankly that it would be immaterial to me as to what denomination might control the institution; my objection would be as seriously made against one as the other.

Mr. DUPRÉ. How does the gentleman propose to care for these patients?

Mr. SISSON. My position is thoroughly understood by the committee, and that is that the District of Columbia should provide a hospital for the care of its own patients and not have to depend on any other institution, either of a private character or of any other character. In order that we may carry out that policy, while it does not affect the point of order, I will say that the only way we are going to be able to have the District of Columbia have its own institutions will be to stop appropriations for these private and religious institutions that make contracts to care for their patients.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Is it not true that the patients to be cared for here in this institution are not charges on the District of Columbia?

Mr. SISSON. They are charges on the District of Columbia, and half of it is paid out of the District revenues under the present half-and-half plan.

So far as the care for them is concerned, it is the duty of every civilized community to take care of the indigent people in the community. They ought not to be charges on the charity of those that happen to surround them. It ought to be a common charge against the whole community, and all civilized Christian communities do make provision for the care of the unfortunate.

Mr. LEVY. In the meantime, how do you intend to provide for them?

Mr. SISSON. We have a provision in the District bill which, if it sticks, will make provision, and there will be no immediate suffering.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Does the gentleman say that all Christian communities do make such a provision for their indigent?

Mr. SISSON. I say they ought to. I do not care whether it is a private institution or a public institution; if it is a private institution, it ought not to be connected with the Government, and if it is under private control it ought not to go to the Federal Treasury or the State or municipal treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order on two grounds against the paragraph containing an appropriation for the Providence Hospital, one that it is unauthorized by law, and the second that it is in violation of the statute prohibiting appropriations being made to any sectarian institution.

The Chair believes that under clause 2, Rule XXI, of the House of Representatives, no appropriation is in order on an appropriation bill unless authorized by law. The Chair is of the opinion that the act of Congress of 1868 authorizes an appropriation made for the Providence Hospital, and therefore overrules the point of order on that ground.

As to the second ground, that the appropriation contravenes the statute and is not in order because it makes an appropriation to a sectarian institution, the Chair is of the opinion that there is nothing in the act or in the item under discussion to apprise the Chair that Providence Hospital is a sectarian institution. And the Chair further believes that the act of Congress cited by the gentleman from Mississippi which prohibits any funds appropriated for charitable purposes in the District of Columbia being paid to any sectarian institution is a matter that should be determined by the courts or the Treasury Department if the money was paid or sought to be paid to some institution that fell within the prohibited class. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the item.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, to any observant man who has anything to do with the appropriations for hospitals or charitable institutions in the District of Columbia it must be apparent that there is a decided difference of opinion between gentlemen in this House as to the method of making these appropriations. So far as I am concerned, I agree in the main with the statement that has been made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] that the charitable patients in the District of Columbia or any other municipality or local political division should be cared for at public expense in institutions provided by that municipality.

There is now pending as an amendment in another appropriation bill a provision for the erection of a municipal hospital, and this question must be determined by the Congress of the United States as to one policy or the other for the care of these charitable patients. I am very glad indeed that the point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] against the provision in the bill did not prevail, because if it had, my information is such that I am sure the needs of the indigent sick in the District of Columbia could not have been provided for at the present time. In the Washington Asylum Hospital, which is a municipal institution, and at present the only municipal institutions for the care of indigent sick, there is capacity for about 175 patients. The situation there is such that to-day there are over 225 patients crowded into the institution. They can not be properly cared for, and it is not humane that an attempt should be made to place that number of patients in that institution above its capacity. I hope to see legislation not long deferred when the city of Washington will make ample provision for the care of its indigent sick, and when that time arrives I shall join the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] in an attempt to cease appropriations to private institutions, whether sectarian or otherwise, because I believe, as he believes, that the public moneys should not be appropriated to private institutions, whether they be hospitals or anything else.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I yield for a question.

Mr. MADDEN. While I was on the Committee on Appropriations I served on the subcommittee of which the gentleman is chairman at the present time, and I entered that committee with a prejudice against the present system of appropriating money for private hospitals. However, after a careful investigation of the conditions under which the money is appropriated, I reached the conclusion that it is much more economical to do it in the way in which it is done than to have an institution owned and controlled by the District of Columbia itself. What does the gentleman think about that?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, so far as my own information goes, I will not controvert the statement the gentleman has made, although I am not satisfied that it is entirely correct. It may be true or it may not be true; but whether it is true or not, merely for the saving of a few dollars we can not afford, if it is not the proper governmental policy, to continue to make contributions to private institutions that continually produce friction among the Members of this body who are interested in these appropriations. I believe it would be vastly better, even though it might cost a few dollars more, for the District of Columbia to construct a hospital of sufficient capacity to care for all of its indigent sick.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman believe, however, that with the great number of private hospitals to which the Government now contributes there is much more opportunity for indigent sick to be cared for than there would be if the Government itself owned and controlled the hospital?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; I do not; because if the Government owned and controlled a hospital of sufficient capacity it would be able to take care of them all, and if the District provides a hospital, it will provide one that has capacity for all of the indigent sick.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman given any thought to the cost of a hospital such as he describes?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that I have, along with other gentlemen, and, in my judgment, a municipal hospital for the care of the present number of indigent patients in the District of Columbia, making ample provision for a number of years in the future for the increase in the number of patients, could be constructed for $1,000,000. That is based on an estimate not of my own but an estimate given by competent people who were called in as to the probable cost.

Mr. MADDEN. The conclusion I reached, after investigation as to the cost of constructing such a hospital, was that it would cost not less than $3,000,000.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It could be made to cost not only $3,000,000 but $5,000,000, if it was constructed in an elaborate way, but ample provision in a suitable building for indigent sick, not only for the present but for a considerable number of years in the future, could be constructed for a million dollars.

Mr. Chairman, my purpose in rising was to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi. While I am in sympathy with his general purpose—with the provision that I hope will be made some time in the near future by the District of Columbia for the care of its indigent sick—I think at this time that to strike out this appropriation of $19,000 for the care of the indigent sick under contract at one of these private hospitals would make it absolutely impossible to care for them in the District of Columbia. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a very brief statement. I am opposed to the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]. I do not believe in the policy of a city like the city of Washington or any other large community having hospitals controlled exclusively by the municipality. The experience of the great municipalities of the country has been that it is a wise and benevolent use of private institutions to have the destitute taken care of in such institutions. The theory seems to be that because a person is placed in a private institution and the cost of maintaining a patient is paid by the municipality or the Government, that thereby some benefit is given to these institutions. At Providence Hospital, under this appropriation, the hospital receives a little over 50 cents a day for each person that it takes, and while a definite contract is made with the Surgeon General of the Army, the hospital never pays any attention to the number for which the contract is made, but accepts all who are sent by the Surgeon General. In another institution where contracts of the same kind are made the cost is a little over $1 a day, and in the Government medical institutions the cost is over $1.30 per day. So that the Government does not actually pay the entire cost of the service rendered. I would regret exceedingly to see the adoption of a system in the city of Washington where the charitably inclined would be divorced from all association of the care of the unfortunate of the community. In this institution and in the Garfield Hospital the Government has invested almost a million dollars in contributions made toward the erection of the hospitals, so that they might be utilized for the benefit of the city. There is no discrimination against persons sent there because of race, religion, or any other condition that might affect them. They are cared for in a proper manner and cared for at a very slight expense. I believe it is desirable to care for them. In any event, at this time there is no place where the persons who will be taken care of under this appropriation can be provided for in the city of Washington except by putting a burden upon private charities which would be too great for them to bear.

The obligation of the Government to take care of these unfortunates can not be met unless the service is rendered in some private institution. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. LEVY. How many average patients are there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The number is 96. The number of hospital days, 34,000.

Mr. LEVY. They would be thrown on the public anyway to be taken care of unless we make this appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The obligation of the Government to take care of them could not be performed. I have no doubt that if the Government refused appropriations for the care of the unfortunate, the destitute, the sick and disabled of the city of Washington that in some manner or other the charitably inclined persons would provide the means to do so, but nobody wishes that private persons should discharge an obligation of the Government. Whatever the Government pays for services rendered under contract does not contribute to the advantage or to the benefit of those institutions, because they render the services which can not be rendered for the amount of money which the Government contributes, and the balance that is required is made up from contributions from their own funds, obtained in many ways.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, it may be thought that because Congress appropriates money to the different hospitals that are already established in the city of Washington that they are enabled to make a considerable profit out of what patients are taken care of there; but I think that is a mistake. It is not the fact that they make any money out of the patients that are sent to them as charity patients. It is true out at the Washington Asylum that the place is very much crowded and it is not in the condition that it ought to be in for the proper care of these unfortunate people. There are, as I remember, two large buildings there, which were erected some years ago, that could be arranged to make accommodations for 250 or 300 people; but for some reason or other, after making some plans and looking into the matter considerably, Congress has taken no action, so these two large buildings out there, which were erected at an expense of $300,000 to $500,000, are used for nothing but storing of models of the Patent Office. The Tuberculosis Hospital in the city of Washington takes care of patients that are sent there who are unable to care for themselves, and I think it costs something like $1.30 to $1.40 a day to care for them. In other hospitals for which the Government appropriates money they usually allow 60 cents a day up to as high as $1.20, but in no case in these hospitals for which the Government appropriates for the care of destitute patients does it cost as much as it does in the Government hospital. Another thing, in the treatment of tuberculosis patients it is less expensive to care for them than it is for surgical patients—those who require more attention than they do there—so that I think, so far as the Government is concerned, that they have not lost any money; in fact, it is an economy for it to remain as it is now.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. In just a moment. I was about to say that in the contracts which have been made in years past with these institutions I think the obligation fell on these institutions to take these patients at a very nominal figure, and it is not a money-making transaction for them in the least.

Mr. SISSON. In speaking of the cost of the tuberculosis patients the testimony before the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia was to the effect that the average cost of caring for the tuberculosis patients was greater than it was for the other patients, unless it were some patients who would require isolation, peculiar care on account of contagion, and the cost of the preparation of their food and close nursing.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I think there is no doubt among medical men or those who have the management of these institutions that tubercular patients are less expensive than surgical or lying-in patients.

Mr. SISSON. If it is a surgical operation——

Mr. FOSTER. If it is true of the Tuberculosis Hospital, in the city of Washington, which I think is true, it is a mistake that it costs more to take care of those classes of patients than those I have mentioned.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman will admit that where you have an institution restricted to a population of about 365 people that the overhead charges would be fully as great with a small number of patients as with a large number, would it not?

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is true. You take the Columbia Hospital out here on Pennsylvania Avenue, and they are building a new building. I will say that the pay that the Government gives to that institution for taking care of those indigent patients does not pay the expense to the Columbia Institution, and the Columbia Hospital is compelled to take from money that it receives from pay patients in that institution to make up the deficit that is caused by the taking care of these indigent patients sent to it from the Board of Charities. So that I do not think the Government loses anything. I think, in fact, the Government is ahead on this arrangement, and we have in the city of Washigton a most excellent system of hospitals.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Is it not a fact that in both these items, for Providence and Garfield Hospitals, the amount appropriated does not pay for the number of indigent patients that are treated there?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; and nothing like it. All of these hospitals take in indigent patients, for which they receive no compensation whatever. They are treating them all the time.

Mr. GOULDEN. They never refuse a poor, unfortunate person who applies for relief?

Mr. FOSTER. No; they do not refuse.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there ought to be any disposition to cut out the appropriation for the Providence Hospital. This hospital does a great work in the District of Columbia. It takes every class of patients that may wish to come. There is no discrimination as to color or creed, and the management of the hospital, as far as it is able to do so, pays its own way, and I believe there are more patients taken into Providence Hospital without any compensation to the authorities of the hospital than in any other hospital in the District of Columbia.

It is true that the Government has appropriated and proposes now to appropriate for that hospital in this bill, but the per capita cost of those who are admitted to this hospital is very small and the service rendered is very great. I hope that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] will not feel called upon to insist upon having this item stricken from the bill. It is quite as meritorious an item as any other that is reported by the committee.

There can be no complaint about the character of the service rendered by the hospital. On the contrary the character of the scrvice is entitled to high praise. I believe that the present method of caring for the indigent sick of the District of Columbia is not only more efficient, but more economical and more satisfactory than would be any system of conducting a hospital owned by the District of Columbia itself. I believe that the cost of operating a large hospital owned by the District would be much greater than is the cost under the present plan.

Moreover, I believe that in a municipal hospital, owned and controlled by the municipal government, no such facilities would be afforded as are now open to those who are obliged to go to a hospital and who are too poor to pay their own way. Here we have so many hospitals that there is never any question about the facilities that may be required by those who are unfortunate and sick.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman surely does not know the situation in the District of Columbia at the present time. There is a municipally owned hospital in the Washington Asylum now.

Mr. MADDEN. That is largely a tuberculosis hospital, is it not?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Not at all. That remark shows the gentleman's lack of information still further. The Tuberculosis Hospital is situated in the extreme northwestern portion of the city, whereas the Washington Asylum is situated down on the Anacostia River, with several hundred patients in it. Why should there be a discrimination among indigent patients? We have 175 or 200 patients there in an inadequate and poorly equipped hospital, and a great many others are provided for in private hospitals. Would the gentleman propose to divide these 175 or 200 and send them among private hospitals, or would he build a new municipal hospital?

Mr. MADDEN. As I understand, the hospital that the gentleman describes is not finished.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No. There is a group of buildings there which are falling down, and they are inadequate. Two hundred patients are crowded into that hospital where there should not be more than 170.

Mr. MADDEN. There are some brick buildings there, are there not, which are not used?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I see where the gentleman is getting his information. There are some brick buildings on this reservation that were abandoned and were formerly used by the workhouse. They were constructed for workhouse buildings. They were connected with the jail. They would go to make a municipal hospital and not a private one.

Mr. MADDEN. That is true, but since we have not that at the service of the indigent sick of the District, the only other thing to do is to provide for their care and provide for them in the only way in which they can be provided for, and that is by making some arrangement with the private hospitals of the District.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. There is no difference between the gentleman from Illinois and myself. I am opposing the motion to strike out this item, because the District has not now the facilities for taking care of its indigent sick that it should have.

Mr. MADDEN. I am glad the gentleman is on my side, because on that account I am confident we will win our case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to my colleague, Mr. Chairman, that one of the great difficulties of the situation is that the secretary of the Board of Charities of the District of Columbia refuses to send patients to these hospitals because he wants to compel the construction of a municipal hospital. They could take those buildings at the Washington Asylum, that are not now used for any useful purpose, and with the expenditure of $40,000 they could be fitted up and make a good hospital to take care of all those patients. The plans have been prepared and the matter looked up.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Has the gentleman suggested a proposition of that sort or made a request for an appropriation of $40,000?

Mr. MADDEN. No; but I have repeatedly spoken on the subject to members of the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to ask my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] if he can tell the committee for how many years appropriations of this character have been made to private institutions?

Mr. SISSON. Since 1906, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. No; they have been made for longer than that.

Mr. SISSON. That is, this particular appropriation has been made since 1906, and some of them go back to a time when the memory of man knoweth not to the contrary.

Mr. MADDEN. Some of them go back to the beginning of the District government.

Mr. McKENZIE. May I ask my colleague another question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Has there been any effort made by Congress for taking care of these unfortunate people in any other way?

Mr. MADDEN. No. No effort has been made at all.

Mr. McKENZIE. Can the gentleman from Illinois give an explanation of that?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I can. I think suggestions have been made time and time again that a municipal hospital should be constructed and operated by the District government, and during the time I served on the Committee on Appropriations the suggestion was made that in the operation of this hospital, established at a cost of $4,000,000, the per capita cost per patient treated would be $2 for every 50 cents that the Government pays now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, in making this motion, I make it with the hope that this item will be stricken out and that the item which immediately follows will also be stricken out. The Government has been called upon to make appropriations for buildings on these two lots, and if Congress had expended these amounts on a municipal hospital, the District of Columbia would now own an up-to-date hospital.

This appropriation has been carried for a number of years; and just as long as certain influences in this District operate in Congress, just so long you will not be able, I fear, to have the District of Columbia perform its duty by its own indigent sick. I want, if I can, to divorce all private institutions and all religious institutions from the Federal and District Treasury. This is a principle for which all of us ought to stand. If, as has been said—and possibly it is true in many cases—the District of Columbia does not pay to these institutions the entire cost of the care of the patients, then the District of Columbia is imposing upon these institutions, and we should relieve them from that imposition.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. In one moment. Not only that, but you will find, as was suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that in many cases they do not send patients to these private institutions, but put them in the institution that is under the control of the District of Columbia. That discrimination is rank, and ought not to be tolerated for one moment. But if the District of Columbia had its own hospital, under the control and management of the District government, where it could control the funds and the terms of admission, then no Government money would pass out from under Government control, but would always be within the control of the Federal or District Government. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Does the gentleman know of any protests or criticisms from these institutions against the so-called imposition which he says is being practiced upon them?

Mr. SISSON. I have not heard of any, but I do know that the moment you try to take away from any of these institutions—those under private or sectarian control—any of the appropriations which they have been accustomed to receive you do hear protests. I take it that, as was suggested by the chairman of the committee [Mr. FITZGERALD], these charitable institutions would, to the extent of their capacity, take care of the indigent patients who knock at their doors whether or not the District of Columbia or the Federal Government contributed one single penny to their support and maintenance. But it is a duty which devolves upon this community, as it devolves upon the various States of this Union, to take care of their indigent patients and their indigent poor, and the District of Columbia ought to do that. And if in addition to that you have private institutions or institutions of a sectarian character that from high and philanthropic motives wish to perform those acts of charity, so much the better. But I do not believe the Federal Government, the District government, or the State government ought to contribute anything to private institutions, where the money so appropriated will be controlled, either by officials appointed by the privately owned concerns or by sectarian organizations. It should always remain within the control of the government that makes the appropriation.

I have no word of criticism against either of these hospitals. I know of no criticism. I am making no criticism against the management. I know of none. I commend them in the great work which they are doing, but I do not feel that they ought to be connected with the Federal Treasury. I believe that it is the duty of this District to make an appropriation that will be ample to construct a building that will take care of the indigent poor of the District. It is the duty of the District of Columbia to care for them.

On two occasions we went into this matter thoroughly. It was contended that it would take $3,000,000 to build such a hospital, and there was another contention that it would take $4,000,000 to build such a hospital. If you should build such a Government building, ornamented with columns, frescoes, painted ceilings, and marble furnishings, with stately porticos, you could make that building cost any amount you might desire to expend; but the municipal architect submitted plans and specifications to your subcommittee when this bill was in conference at one time on an item which had been put into the bill in the Senate, and both the conferees of the House and the conferees of the Senate were then thoroughly convinced that a building could be put up for between $800,000 and $900,000 to accommodate not only the patients that are now charges upon the District of Columbia, but the increased number which might be expected from the natural increase of population, so that the building would not have to be enlarged for 7 or 8 or perhaps 10 years. And the building would be constructed so that when necessary it could be enlarged.

You will not be able to divorce these institutions from the Federal Treasury until you do build this hospital; and I am prone to believe that obstructions will be placed in the way of building the hospital as long as you make these appropriations. For that reason I have made the motion to strike this item out of the bill, because, as was suggested by the chairman of the committee, nobody is going to suffer. You might place the burden for the time being upon these institutions, but just as certainly as these and similar items go out of this bill and the other bills, just so certainly will Congress build a municipal hospital. And so far as the cost is concerned, if a building is put up sanitary, well lighted, modern, and well furnished, it is estimated that it will cost but little if any more than the contract price now in vogue to take charge of the whole business, except the tuberculosis hospital and those patients who have contagious diseases. And if you could consolidate it all under one management the overhead charge for each patient would thereby be very much reduced. And even though it should cost us a little more money, it would be better to divorce the institutions and let the Government perform the public charities and let the private institutions perform their private charities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask for two or three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Now, I have just as serious objections to the next item as to the item which I have made the motion to strike out; and wherever an item of that kind occurs in any of these appropriation bills I will make a motion to strike it out, and would have done so earlier, but we were very hopeful of being able to prepare plans and specifications for a municipal hospital. As soon as we get the right sort of a hospital here then all the thousands of dollars which we now pay for these purposes—I have not added up the items, but they make a considerable amount—can be included in one sum, and will make an enormous amount for the support of the municipal hospital. I believe that if you would concentrate all the public funds and put them under one management, all the charities of the District could be performed within the amount which we are now contributing to these various institutions.

There has been a large amount given to the Garfield Hospital which went into the building. The money appropriated to that hospital and other private hospitals here amounts to some $2,000,000 within the last few years. If all that money had been spent on a municipal hospital, you would have had a Government-owned hospital, ample as the Supervising Architect says, ample as the physicians connected with the board of charities say, to take care of all the patients in the private hospitals or in the Columbia Hospital.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the gentleman support my amendment that I offered in the District bill last year for money to begin the construction of a municipal hospital?

Mr. SISSON. I did not.

Mr. MONDELL. Then the gentleman can not complain that we have not started one.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman offered an amendment to appropriate $3,000,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman's idea was a hospital costing $3,000,000, and your colleagues felt that that was entirely too much money, and when we had the Supervising Architect make plans and specifications for building an unornamented one for merely hospital uses, the estimate he made was in the neighborhood of $900,000 for the building of that hospital. In other words, we could have constructed and furnished an up-to-date building for a million dollars. If we had accepted the gentleman's proposition, it would have cost $3,000,000.

Efforts have been made to start a hospital. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] that efforts were repeatedly made, and the reason that Congress one time several years ago, according to the information I have received from the Members of another body who were then Members of that body, that a municipal hospital would probably have been constructed if it had not been for the enormous sum that the architect estimated that the building would cost. The plan then provided a beautiful marble building, one which ought not to be erected as a hospital. The money that would have been used for such a building should go for the purpose of making patients comfortable; it should be sanitary and with plenty of air and light. In other words, the construction of hospitals are and should be on sanitary lines and not for architectural beauty. We want a sanitary hospital built on modern lines.

The Supervising Architect in the estimate and plans submitted to us, as I have just stated, provided for less than a million dollars. The efforts that have been made to build a hospital have been defeated because they wanted to build for beauty and not for service. I would gladly join with any gentleman who is willing to build a suitable building for hospital purposes for the purpose of caring for the District poor.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the arguments of my friend from Mississippi have been devoted almost wholly to building a municipal hospital, which really has little to do with his motion to strike out the provision in the bill. The truth is a municipal hospital has not been heretofore built in Washington, probably mainly by reason of the state of the revenue. For a good many years the District of Columbia was badly in debt to the General Government. It is getting out of that debt, and with the revenue now coming in to the District of Columbia it is probable that in the next few years they will be able to get a municipal hospital, not such a one as the gentleman from Mississippi would construct—a wholly inadequate hospital—but a respectable building, whether it cost $2,000,000 or $3,000,000.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman know how much the surplus revenues of the District are?

Mr. MANN. I do not know, but I know they are plenty.

Mr. SISSON. Two million and odd thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. They have not wholly paid their debt to the Government, but will shortly. They will then have the means to construct a hospital and make some other public improvements.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not quite differentiate between having an employee of the Government come to the city of Washington and go to a hotel and the Government pay $4 a day for his subsistence at the hotel and for the Government to pay 50 cents a day for the subsistence of some destitute sick person at some institution. The hotel is a private institution. The Government does not maintain a hotel and feed all the Government employees, and they are very numerous, who come here during the winter and get their subsistence allowed to them. This item does not contribute an amount to the support of a private institution. It only pays a certain rate when the District sends to this institution, as it might send to the hotel, some person to be fed and cared for, the only difference being that when he goes to the hotel we pay $4 a day and when he goes to the institution we pay 50 cents a day. We are a long ways ahead of the game.

If the gentleman's amendment should prevail, what would be the situation? The destitute sick of the District of Columbia would have no place where the District could send them for care. To me it is abhorrent to say that the great government of the District of Columbia will not make any provision at all for the care of the indigent sick until we make provision for a municipal hopsital; until we find some other place to send them, we ought to put them in a private house, at a private institution, in a semipublic institution, or some other place, and they ought not to be left to wander on the streets, relying wholly upon private donations.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SISSON) there were 6 ayes and 31 noes.

So the motion was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Garfield Memorial Hospital: For maintenance, to enable it to provide medical and surgical treatment to persons unable to pay therefor, under a contract to be made with the Board of Charities of the District of Columbia, $19,000, one half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not raise the point of order to this paragraph, but make the motion to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Southern Branch, Hampton, Va.: For current expenses, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $6,0004.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 78, line 18, strike out "$6,0004" and insert in lieu thereof "$46,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For farm, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $5,000.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 83, by inserting, after line 2, the following:
"For the construction of permanent steps at the front entrance of the Battle Mountain Sanitarium grounds, $5,509.50."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, of course the item is not subject to the point of order. It is a question of completing a work not only already in progress but that is entirely completed except the putting in of these permanent steps and the putting up of a stone gateway over the entrance to the driveway to the grounds.

This is a small item, but it is an item that is of very great importance and one that ought not to be neglected. It is foolish for the committee or the Congress to neglect the putting in of these stairs. The Battle Mountain Sanitarium is the hospital sanitarium branch of the entire soldiers' home system of the United States, and there the most afflicted invalids are sent for treatment and convalescence. I want to say that the Government has expended over a million dollars or thereabouts in what I believe to be one of the most complete hospital equipments in the United States, and it is providing for the old soldier, the veterans of the Civil War and of the Spanish-American War, the humane service for which this institution was founded something like 10 years ago. It occupies a central position in this town of Hot Springs, which is itself a generally curative place, having about 2,500 inhabitants. The sanitarium occupies in the neighborhood of 100 acres of ground, most of it in the very center and heart of the city, all of which was donated by the citizens of the town when the Government established this palatial sanitarium there, so that the citizens have been very liberal contributors in both money and property. It is situated on a high plateau about 110 feet above the business streets of the town, and it is approached from a central part of the town up a perpendicular declivity of something like 100 feet.

When the institution was constructed the contractors took the material furnished by the citizens and built temporary wooden steps to lead from the center of the town up to the plateau upon which the Government improvement is situated. Those wooden steps are now decaying and are in a dangerous condition. They are traveled by hundreds of patients and convalescents, who go to and from the Government hospital to the town for their mail and other conveniences. It is a public place, where all of the citizens or the visitors must pass in going to and from the Government hospital. A part of the original design of the architect was for cement steps, passing from the street in the town up to the plateau, and the time has now arrived when they must be put in, or, as I have said, accidents and damage may come. These steps are not in a safe condition now. The engineer of the home has prepared the estimates and has sent them on in a letter from the governor and surgeon in chief at the home. The amount desired is a reduction of the architect's estimate from $7,000 down to a little over $5,000, and this is accomplished by leaving out some of the unnecessary ornamentation. It makes a suitable and permament approach, constructed entirely of cement and other permanent material, and it involves a flight of 153 steps in height. I presented this matter to the Committee on Appropriations, and there is no reason for leaving it out, unless it was for the technical reason that it was not in the estimates that come from the department. I know personally that every member who has been any length of time on the board of managers is thoroughly aware of this necessity and favors this improvement. I may say that there is another side to this question, which I think is of some consequence.

In order to get additional ground for an approach to these steps it was necessary to have some other land to connect up with the end of the street, and I know of my own knowledge that the board of managers obtained free deeds from the Evans Hotel Co. and another owner adjoining that street for additional land to round out the grounds and make the place for this improvement by these steps on the representation that these permanent steps would be put in with the least possible delay.

I am about to retire from Congress, and although these assurances were made six or seven years ago they have never been carried out. It is perfect folly, in my judgment, not to include this in the improvement and completion of the plans, and I think the chairman of the committee ought not to oppose the proposition. I wish to put in the RECORD a communication from the governor, specifications from the engineer showing not only the necessity but showing that this was the agreement when the ground was obtained for the purpose of putting in these steps, and another letter upon the same subject.

The matter referred to above is as follows:

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS,
BATTLE MOUNTAIN SANITARIUM,
Hot Springs, S. Dak., January 12, 1915.

Hon. EBEN W. MARTIN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MARTIN: In compliance with your request of the 4th instant requesting data or information in regard to putting in the new steps leading up from the city of Hot Springs to the sanitarium grounds have to state that the old steps are very dilapidated and it is highly necessary they be promptly replaced by new ones. As this is the main avenue traveled by the members in going to and from town, these steps should be of a permanent nature.

On yesterday I had a talk with stockholders of the Evans Hotel Co., Messrs. Humphry, Bennett, and Stewart, also with Mr. Chris Jensen, and they stated to me that there was a verbal agreement between Capt. Palmer, who was the first local manager of the sanitarium, and the Evans Hotel Co. and Chris Jensen to the effect that permanent stairs leading from the top of the hill on the sanitarium grounds down to the foot of the hill, which lands in the middle of National Avenue, would be built.

Because of the above promise the Evans Hotel Co. and Chris Jensen gave a strip of land adjoining the sanitarium grounds, which strip of land straightened the line of the sanitarium reservation and extended the reservation to the foot of the hill, at the landing of the stairs.

When the plans and specifications of the sanitarium were drawn by the architect, Mr. Kimball, of Omaha, plans were also drawn for the proposed entrance by means of permanent stairs at the location of the old stairs. The estimated cost of building the proposed stairs and erecting a suitable approach at the foot of the incline is $7,773.50.

Have requested the chief engineer to make a report and estimate on the cost of building the steps and double arch gates, and inclose herewith copy of same, together with tracing of plan of steps as shown on the original drawings; also pencil sketch of proposed double arch gates at entrance to sanitarium grounds at the foot of the incline.

With regards, very respectfully,

JAMES A. MATTISON,
Governor and Surgeon.

JANUARY 12, 1915.

The Chief Engineer.
The governor and surgeon.
Proposed cement steps leading to the sanitarium grounds.

1. The wooden steps leading up to the sanitarium from the street leading to about the center of the grounds were built by the contractors of the buildings, the citizens of the town buying the material and the contractors doing the work. They have been kept in repair by the home for the convenience of the members and the public and citizens, who have business at the home, and they are the only near way of reaching the sanitarium grounds, the incline or main walk being a long way around. If they are maintained it will be necessary to rebuild them, as most of the stringers are rotten, they are mostly patches, and in a very short time there will be nothing left to nail to.

2. It was understood that there were to be cement steps built in place of the wooden ones, and the landscape artist shows the plan of them in his blue prints. There was a verbal agreement entered into by Capt. Palmer, local manager, and the Evans Hotel Co., that if the hotel company would give to the home a triangular tract of ground so the home grounds could be squared up, the home would build the steps; the Evans Hotel Co. gave the ground—shown in red on the tracing—and it is now a part of the home grounds. This tract of ground was necessary to have if the landscape artist's plans were carried out, as the south end of the oval lies on the acquired ground. The citizens and the Evans Hotel Co. feel that the agreement should be carried out and the steps maintained. If built of stone and concrete, they would last indefinitely.

3. The proposed steps will start at the line of the home grounds with a flight of 24 steps to a landing, where the oval starts, the second flights will swing to the right and left in the form of an ellipse with 26 steps and 2 platforms on each side to a platform and rest place with seats, the third flights continue the oval and will have 26 steps and 2 platforms to the center line of the steps, where there will be a platform and seats, then the steps are in one flight to the sanitarium ground level; this flight will have 36 steps and 2 landings with seats. There will be in all 153 steps.

4. The original estimate on building the steps was $7,000. The steps were to have been 10 feet long, 6-inch rise, and 11-inch tread, with a curbing of 12-inch thickness on each end of the steps, the curbing forming the railing. We propose to do away with this heavy curbing or railing and put instead an iron railing. This will cut down the cost and will be easier to grasp than a 6-inch rounded cement rail. The length, rise, and width of the steps will be maintained. The first flight will have to be carried on stone, as there is a straight rise of 12 feet; the stonework will be native stone rubblework laid in cement mortar. The lower sides of the ellipse will have to have rubblestone retaining walls, the inside of the lower side of the ellipse will have to have a 6-inch curbing to keep the rain wash off the steps, and the outside of the ellipse on the upper sides will have to have a similar curbing. The seats at the rest places will be made of cement, perforated. The rise of the steps will be troweled smooth, the treads will be finished with wooden floats, leaving them rough, the railing will be made of 1½-inch iron turned so the same will be free from splinters, the fittings will be standard malleable rail fittings, and the uprights will be built in the center of the steps. This will make the railing secure and permanent.

Estimate.

Concrete for anchorages, etc., 77 cubic yards; steps, landings, curbing, sidewalks, and seats, 88 cubic yards; total, 165 cubic yards—cement, crushed rock, and sand necessary for making the concrete	$1,372.00
Rubble stonework laid in Portland cement, 2,700 cubic feet	1,755.00
Pipe railing with all the necessary fittings	185.00
10 electroliers, complete with globes	550.00
Conduit and wiring	200.00
Lumber for forms, etc	96.00
Miscellaneous: Includes powder, fuse, iron for anchors, spikes, etc	110.00
Water piping and sewer	116.50
Labor for excavating, hauling, etc.; teams	315.00
Labor for excavating, drilling, blasting, mixing concrete, and such other work as may be necessary	810.00
Total	5,509.50

6. It is proposed to build a double-arch gate at the entrance to the grounds on the main drive. The opening over the roadway to be 10 feet 6 inches wide, and 4 feet 6 inches wide over the sidewalk. The piers supporting the main arch will be 4 by 5 feet and 9 feet high. The pier for the smaller arch will be 3 by 5 feet and 7 feet high. The arch will be circular with a radius of 5 feet and 3 inches, making the height of the opening at center of arch 14 feet and 3 inches. The smaller arch radius will be 2 feet and 3 inches, and the opening will be 9 feet and 3 inches above the sidewalk.

7. The stonework up to the cornice line will be rough-faced ashler native stone. The arch stones on face and everywhere exposed will be crandalled. The cornice will project not less than 10 inches and have at least five members and wash. The cornice to be 14 inches thick and to be rubbed smooth.

8. Over the keystone of the arch, facing the street entrance and below the cornice, shall be placed and recessed a dark-colored grate panel upon which shall be cut: "Battle Mountain Sanitarium" in 4-inch letters, cut in. There will be two ornamental wrought-iron gates 5 feet 3 inches wide and 9 feet high, one ornamental wrought-iron gate 4 feet 6 inches wide and 7 feet high, patterns to be selected, and two electroliers the same pattern as those on the home grounds.

Estimate.

Excavating and foundations	$157
Stonework, completed as per plans	1,667
3 ornamental wrought-iron gates	148
1 electroliers	110
Conduit and wiring	182
Total	2,264

9. Tracing of plan of steps as shown on the original drawings, also double-arch gates on main drive, inclosed herewith.

RAPID CITY, S. DAK., January 11, 1915.

Hon. E. W. MARTIN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Your letter of January 4, 1915, asking for information as to the contract or understanding between the National Sanitarium and the Evans Hotel Co. at Hot Springs, S. Dak., in regard to the property deeded to the Government for the stairway or approach to the sanitarium, received.

It is our understanding that the representatives of the sanitarium stated that it was very important to the Government to have this ground for the main approach to the sanitarium, as it is the only practical place for said entrance, and they agreed with the Evans Hotel Co. that if said ground was deeded to them that a permanent cement approach and stairway would be constructed, in keeping with the other improvements and buildings of the sanitarium. The hotel people were very loathe to part with said ground, as it was part of their park facing the street, but they finally deeded said ground with the above understanding.

It is my understanding that the contract was not put in the deed and am unable at this time to state if a separate contract was made or not, as the old officers of the hotel company are not in this section of the country at the present time.

Anyone seeing the sanitarium property can readily understand the great necessity for this approach and the importance to the Government owning the ground deeded by the hotel company. By having this entrance the officers and employees are at least half to three-quarters of a mile nearer the main business part of the town. The City Park is directly in front of the hotel for the convenience of the patients, old soldiers, and the public, and the upper end of the approach is directly in front of the main entrance to the sanitarium.

The present structure is in a dilapidated condition and is an eyesore to everyone and a disgrace to our great Government.

Very truly, yours,

EVANS HOTEL CO.,
By GEO. P. BENNETT,
President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, sooner or later—and the better sooner than later—we must make the improvement that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] has described to us and which is to be made under the item of appropriation for which he has asked. It seems to me that the appropriation should be made now, as the wooden stairway he speaks of is old, liable to be dangerous, and there is possibility of injury, or loss of life, and heavy damages or claims against the Government. There is nothing more necessary to say in support of the improvement than what the gentleman said other than this. The gentleman from South Dakota, who has rendered splendid service for his State in this House for a number of years, is largely entitled to the credit for this fine institution; or, rather, to put it in another way and state it more accurately, he is entitled to great thanks and credit for having called to the attention of the Congress the splendid opportunity which the little city of Hot Springs in his State afforded for the utilization of the curative waters of the springs there in prolonging the lives and relieving the distress of old veterans. The Battle Mountain Sanitarium is a splendid monument to the gentleman from South Dakota. It is one of the most useful and beneficial of all our public institutions. The gentleman from South Dakota has determined to end his services here. He could have remained had he desired, as his people would have returned him indefinitely, having full confidence in him and fully appreciating, as we do, his splendid ability and his devotion to the people's interests. But he is retiring to private life, and I think it would be a very proper and gracious thing to make this improvement now, while the gentleman from South Dakota is still with us, in order that when he leaves Congress this institution, with whose establishment and building he had so much to do, shall have been fully completed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. This is a matter presented to the committee after the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home had appeared before the committee. If the item had been included in the estimates and the situation explained as it has been explained to the committee since the board of managers appeared, I do not believe there would have been any objection to the item. The present condition undoubtedly is dangerous. The inmates of these homes, who are old veterans, suffering from tuberculosis, whose years will be short, will be considerably benefited by the elimination of the very long trip from the town up around the hill to the sanitarium. While the item is subject to a point of order, yet if the board of managers had submitted it and explained it as it has been presented to the committee, I am confident that it would have been included in the bill, and therefore I shall not oppose it.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely appreciate the attitude of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gracious comment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the vote of this committee upon this item. If it will not be considered at this time to be asking too much, I would like to proceed for 10 minutes on another phase of this question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN. During my long illness last year there was a movement on foot, which received some support upon the floor of this House, to transfer the management of the soldiers' national homes throughout the country from the board of managers to the War Department. In that connection there was considerable bad feeling generated, and some developed upon the floor of the House here, and I think the proposition was not fully understood in the country at large. Three men were released or discharged from the Battle Mountain Sanitarium for improper conduct, and in that connection the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] introduced considerable material from these three disgruntled members, who were not veterans of the Civil War but veterans of a very short service or enlistment in the Spanish-American War, reflecting disagreeably upon the management of the Battle Mountain Sanitarium and the officers and other members in connection with that institution. Had I been here personally at the time, my thorough acquaintance with the officers of the sanitarium and with that institution would have enabled me at that time to have said much in defense of the management. My colleague [Mr. BURKE] did speak in behalf of the institution and placed the matter in a very excellent light before the committee of the House, and investigations were had. My colleague if not detained elsewhere this afternoon would have been here when the item was reached for the purpose of commenting further on the situation.

I shall not impose upon the liberal treatment of the House at this time further than to say that there have been numerous investigations of this subject from that time until now, all with one result. These three men who were let out of the institution were, as I said, Spanish-American veterans, and the National Spanish-American Veterans' Association appointed a committee of investigation, which went to Hot Springs and there fully investigated the situation. It made a report, which I shall insert in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The National Grand Army of the Republic appointed another committee, and one member thereof, Capt. C. V. Gardner, the brother of Hon. Washington Gardner, formerly a distinguished Member of this House and a member of the Committee on Appropriations, has made a report, which I will also put in the RECORD. In addition to that, the Inspector General of the Army, Maj. Jackson, also investigated the subject and has made a report upon it.

Now, those reports, which are brief, and also some extracts from the testimony of these hearings, I want to have the leave of the House to put in the RECORD in connnection with my remarks, which I trust and believe will be the final chapter upon this subject.

I want to say, however, that personally I have full knowledge of this institution, and have had from the beginning. The governor or surgeon in charge, Col. Mattison, came from the State of Ohio, and had served for years in connection with the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Dayton, and I may say that, although I had no acquaintance whatever with him until he arrived, after due appointment, to take charge of that institution, he has shown himself a most efficient and kindly man in every way, and, in my opinion, perfectly ideal in the management of that institution. Among the hundreds of veterans that I have met from time to time I have yet to meet a member of this home who has not spoken in the highest terms not only of the management, but of the treatment received there.

I can say this much also in favor of the only other officer who has been criticized in that connection, Maj. Stanley, the treasurer and quartermaster, whom I have known almost from boyhood. He is a man of the same high character and type. Suffice it to say that every investigation that has been made—and there have been several, as the RECORD will show—has entirely vindicated the management, and they all comment in the most positive language upon the splendid manner in which this institution is conducted.

Those men who criticized it are simply chronic trouble makers, who, without any record of any consequence in connection with the War with Spain further than an enlistment, without going to the front, were simply disturbers, as will be seen from the testimony of numerous members of the same institution in the same ward with them. They are simply men who are seeking to make anarchy and trouble in that institution, and trying to back up the movement that was agitated here in Congress to transfer the management of the institution from the board of managers to the War Department.

To these reports I take this opportunity to add my own assurance as to the good management of the institution. It is indeed performing the high service for which Congress founded it some 12 years ago. It is giving to the veterans of our wars that intelligent and kindly surgical and medical treatment that their peculiar and serious diseases require, and it is but another appropriate tribute that the Nation is paying to those who have defended the country in the time of its need.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] asks leave to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENTS AND REPORTS REGARDING CONDITIONS AT BATTLE MOUNTAIN SANITARIUM, NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Report of Capt. C. V. Gardner, committee appointed by the National Grand Army of the Republic:

PIEDMONT, S. DAK., June 17, 1914.

Hon. FRANK BUCHANAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On my return home, after an absence of some weeks, my attention has been called to a speech made by you and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 29 last, in which you viciously assailed the management and officials of the Battle Mountain Sanitarium, located at Hot Springs, this State. My first thought was one of intense indignation; then, supreme pity, that a gentleman supposed to have the ability to represent in part one of the great States in the Congress would make such a speech without first trying to ascertain if there was just cause for it and the alleged complaint in a letter by one Walich and made a part of your bitter and unjust attack.

Permit me to state that at the last annual encampment of the National Grand Army of the Republic Association held at Chattanooga a standing committee of ten, one for each of the national homes, was appointed to investigate alleged ill-treatment of inmates and other wrongdoings by the officials of the homes. I was assigned to the Battle Mountain Sanitarium. I made application for admission, ostensibly for treatment, but in reality that I might, from personal experience and observation, study conditions as they actually existed. I was regularly admitted February 5 last and remained until March 2. I was assigned to a ward and lived just as other inmates, eating the same food at the same tables, and obeying the same rules and regulations of the institution as my comrades did.

It was a pleasant experience and a revelation along many lines. There were at the time of my visit between four and five hundred inmates.

Being a sanitarium rather than a home, I found men suffering from nearly all diseases and ailments that humanity is heir to.

Patients in all stages of diseases, from the very sick to those who were physically strong, were there for treatment of real or imaginary chronic ailments. I desire to state right here that it is my candid belief that quite a number of the inmates, judging from their physical appearance, movements, and appetites, are there because a too generous government has supplied them with all luxuries of a home without money or a price. Men able to work, yet taking the opportunity of having been enlisted as soldiers to live without labor or responsibility. This applies especially to some of the so-called Spanish War veterans.

I do not hesitate to state that if you will look up the record of the man who wrote and those who indorsed that letter you will find that they never heard a hostile shot; or if so, were far in the rear, and, further, if they are ailing they are being treated for diseases brought on by dissipation and debauched habits. They are simply "camp followers" and unworthy of the name of American soldiers and a disgrace to the great body of young men who are rightly known as Spanish War veterans.

I doubt not all the 10 homes have a greater or lesser number of these fellows, whose chief occupation is that of disturbers and faultfinders. I found the sanitarium modern in all respects and treatment the very best.

The food, while plain, as it should be, was most abundant, and the chef of the Waldorf-Astoria could not improve on its preparation and cooking. All foodstuffs are accepted only after inspection by a competent committee, two of whom are doctors, and must comply with pure-food laws. The sanitary conditions are simply perfect from "cellar to garret"

I have found that not only all the officials, but attendants as well, are most courteous and attentive to their varied duties. As to Gov. James A. Mattison, I do not believe in all the country there is a man better qualified in every respect for the position he occupies. He is kindness personified, yet firm in his administration, and the charges you make in your unconsidered, want to be charitable, speech are so foreign to his nature that they are simply absurd.

It is my good fortune to have known Maj. W. H. Stanley for a number of years. He is a most genial gentleman and the very soul of honor, and if a wrong, by any means possible, occurs in his department, no man would be swifter to right it, if in his power to do so.

Should you have any doubt of the truth of these statements, if you will go and investigate for yourself and not find them in all respects as above set forth, I will pay all your expenses from Washington and return. Should you find my contentions correct, I hope you will be big enough and broad enough to acknowledge before all the people of the country that you did a great injustice to the most worthy gentlemen and conscientious officials. It is that spirit that makes just men perfect.

Yours, truly,

C. V. GARDNER.

STATEMENT OF THE TWO MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE APPOINTED BY THE COMMANDER IN CHIEF OF THE NATIONAL SPANISH WAR VETERANS' ORGANIZATION TO INVESTIGATE THE CONDITIONS OF THE NATIONAL HOMES, WHO WERE PRESENT AND MADE THE INVESTIGATION OF THE BATTLE MOUNTAIN SANITARIUM, HOT SPRINGS, S. DAK., MARCH, 1914.

Having been appointed by the commander in chief of the United National Spanish War Veterans to investigate the conditions in the Soldiers' Homes, we started at Dayton, Ohio, then went to Battle Mountain Sanitarium, Hampton, Va., and Johnson City, Tenn.

We received word that there was some trouble at the sanitarium. When we arrived we had no idea what the trouble was. We reached there on the 23d of March, 1914. There were three men there—Anthony H. Walich, James H. Lacy, and John H. Yount, patients in the tuberculosis cottage—who were decided matcontents. We found them to be chronic agitators, causing trouble not only in the tubercular cottage but in the sanitarium as a whole. In making our rounds we were approached by members of the Grand Army of the Republic, members of the Civil War, as well as members of the Spanish-American War, asking us, if we were going to do anything to this sanitarium at all, to have these three disturbers removed, as they were annoying the patients and everybody about them.

We investigated every complaint made by these other patients against these three men above mentioned. We found the complaints against Walich, Lacy, and Yount justified; but when we investigated the complaints of Walich, Lacy, and Yount we found them grossly exaggerated and the complaints against the governor entirely without foundation. We found their complaints groundless, with perhaps one or two little, trifling affairs, that they had so exaggerated they gave very misleading and false impressions.

After a thorough investigation of conditions and of the complaints, we did not find one thing that reflected in any way on the governor or any other officer of the sanitarium. The investigation showed that the food and treatment received by the patients not only in the wards but in the cottage, was such as their condition needed. In going through the wards we only found one complaint against the food; that was from a soldier who complained that he was not served meat. The nurse refused to give him meat on account of the doctor's orders. The doctors had ordered that no meat be served to this man, because he had kidney and stomach disease, but substitutes had been ordered instead of meat. We also investigated the complaints about shortage of food and found that these complaints were not justified.

We searched everywhere for proof of the statements about mistreatment, abuses, and shortage of food, and we could find nothing whatever to justify the charges. We sent through the wards also and asked the patients individually, and they stated that they were well treated, well fed, and that they were satisfied.

The braggadocio conduct of Walich and the other two men before the committee, together with the evidence of the other patients examined, showed that they—Walich, Lacy, and Yount—were not only disgruntled socialists but struck us as being a type of anarchists. These three men were very bitter against the governor.

We found that the patients all received the most considerate and kindly treatment from the governor and the other officers, and that this was universally appreciated outside of this trio of men.

We found that these three men were putting up a fight to get the national homes placed under the War Department, and they were willing to resort to any measure, however unfair or unjustified, to accomplish this end. They had even gotten up petitions, addressed to Congress, requesting the homes to be placed under the War Department, but the other men refused to take any stock in such petitions.

The second member of this committee—Frank F. Jones—made a second trip here on July 24, 1914, he having come here very sick, for treatment. He received the very best of treatment and found the food better prepared and of a better quality than in any institution he had ever been in, and he neither saw nor heard of any neglect or mistreatment from any employee except as it came from these three men in question and two or three of their followers.

There have been two other men there, by the names of Hale and Benham, who are of the same type of men as Walich, Lacy, and Yount; in fact, they seem to be prompted by the same man—Walich, who is still in town, and attempts to get other men dissatisfied and to write letters to their Congressmen condemning the present management of the homes.

STATEMENT OF A. W. RIERDON, MAYOR OF HOT SPRINGS, S. DAK.

HOT SPRINGS, S. DAK., September 29, 1914.

Mr. JAMES E. MATTISON,
Battle Mountain Sanitarium.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry regarding the conduct and general reputation of one Anthony Wallich, who has been a resident of our city since his discharge from the Battle Mountain Sanitarium, would say that he is generally regarded in a very unfavorable light. He appears to be very much of an agitator and seems to be imbued with the idea that the world was created for his special benefit. He has been arrested and brought before our police court twice—once for assault and once for disregarding ordinance relative to soliciting at the Union Depot. In the first instance he was tried by a jury and found guilty and fined $25 and costs, and in the second instance, at my solicitation, he was discharged. However, from what I can learn, he gets in bad with almost everyone with whom he comes in contact.

Very truly, yours,

A. W. RIERDON, Mayor.

STATEMENT OF CHIEF OF POLICE, HOT SPRINGS, S. DAK.

HOT SPRINGS, S. DAK., September 29, 1914.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF MANAGERS,
National Soldiers' Homes, New York City.

GENTLEMEN: Having been asked to make a statement in regard to the case of city of Hot Springs v. George Kazmer, I desire to set out what I know about the case. I did not serve the warrant or make the arrest of Kazmer. The arrest was made by the night policeman. The trial was held before the police judge, and I served all the subpœnas asked for by Walich, Lacy, or Yount; and all the witnesses that they asked for appeared. Kazmer objected to the jurisdiction of the court, and when his motion to dismiss the case was overruled he became stubborn and refused to put any defense, but said he would appeal the case. The judge then fined him $5 and costs. Kazmer consulted an attorney, and upon the advice of the attorney paid the fine and costs, because it was much cheaper and easier to pay this small fine rather than appeal to circuit court.

On or about April 10, 1914, Walich appealed to me for food and shelter, and I provided him, first, with a good, frame house in good repair; I provided him with plenty of fuel and provisions. Through the dissatisfaction and continual complaint of Walich the owner of the house and the neighbors compelled me to move Walich and his friends from that house. I then moved them to a log cabin at the corner of Minnekahta Avenue and Happy Hollow, less than a block from the Hot Springs Hotel and bathhouse. I there gave them fuel and provisions. This house is in good repair, and was occupied until very shortly before they moved in. This log cabin was suggested by the county physician. Because of the disturbance created by Walich the people who lived in the neighborhood complained to the city council, which declared them to be a nuisance and ordered them to be moved.

I waited upon the men every day that they were here to see that they had fuel, provisions, and bedding. The county physician attended them faithfully and took good care of them, as he lived in the same block in which the log cabin was situated.

Lacy and Yount, after they were declared to be a nuisance, were, at their own request, provided transportation to their homes in Connecticut and Illinois.

Walich went to work for the Hot Springs Motor Co., and on June 9 complaint was made that he was driving an automobile for this garage company and was charging double rates from visiting members of the Elks lodge who were in the city. The complaints were so numerous and persistent that the company investigated and discharged him. Then he went to work soliciting for hotels and bathhouses here and caused continual trouble with the automobile drivers, hackmen, hotel men, and bathhouse men.

On September 4 I arrested him for assault and battery upon one of the automobile men, and upon trial before a jury in police court he was found guilty and fined $15 and costs; he was defended by a good attorney and had all the witnesses he asked for. On September 20 he was again arrested for a violation of the city ordinances. He has made me more trouble than any other man who has been in the city during the past three years that I have been chief of police.

Very truly,

GEORGE H. MCCRACKEN,
Chief of Police.

STATEMENT OF POLICE JUSTICE, HOT SPRINGS, S. DAK.

HOT SPRINGS, S. DAK., October 6, 1914.

To the President of the Board of Managers, National Soldiers' Homes, New York City.

DEAR SIR: Having been requested to make a statement of what I know about Anthony H. Walich and his troubles, I desire to say that I never knew him until he began to work at the Hot Springs garage and was driving an automobile for the garage. Then I heard about him being discharged from the garage and starting to work as a solicitor for hotels and bathhouses.

After a time he was arrested for committing an assault and battery, and, upon trial being held before me as police justice of the peace, he was found guilty by a justice jury and sentenced by me to a fine of $15 and costs and is now under bonds to appear at circuit court, he having appealed his case.

At the trial there was considerable evidence that he has been a trouble maker, and he has been arrested once since for a violation of the city ordinances. I consider that he had a fair trial, and was well represented by his attorney, who made out as good a case as was possible under the facts. He has been to me at various times to have other people arrested, but, in my judgment, he never had a case with any merit in it, and I refused to issue any warrant for him, except once, and that time I was compelled to dismiss the case upon hearing it.

Very truly,

J. N. JONES,
Police Justice of the Peace.

REPORT OF MAJ. W. P. JACKSON, INSPECTOR GENERAL UNITED STATES ARMY, DECEMBER 10, 1914, ON BATTLE MOUNTAIN SANITARIUM.

While making the annual inspection of this branch I was directed to make a special investigation and report of the cause of discharge of three members on April 6, 1914.

The evidence showed that these three members were constantly making unjustified complaints as to the food and treatment received by them; that they referred in disrespectful terms to other patients who declined to join them in these complaints; that they used obscene language in the presence of a female nurse; and referred to the governor and other officials in a most disrespectful manner, applying to them vile and opprobrious epithets (one of the three members had been recommended previously for discharge for this offense); and that their actions were injuriously affecting the health of other patients. Their complaints were found not to be justified, and their discharge was, in my opinion, right and proper, and was for the best interests of the membership as a whole.

Furthermore, the members present at date of the investigation practically unanimously expressed themselves as being satisfied with the food and treatment received by them at the branch.

STATEMENTS OF PATIENTS.

STATEMENT OF CORNELIUS MURPHY.

Q. You are a patient in ward B, the tubercular ward?—A. Yes.

Q. How long since you first came?—A. Nine months this time. I first entered here in 1911.

Q. Do you know Edward Hale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He is in the same ward that you are in?—A. Yes.

Q. What do you know about Edward Hale's character?—A. From what I have seen of him I consider him to be a man of a low type, what some would call a bum. He tries in every way to deceive the officers and doctors by feigning conditions that do not exist. One of the other patients, Benham, when he first came, was told by Hale that he should be in bed when the doctors were around, so they would think he was sicker than he really was. Hale has the influence of poisoning some of the susceptible patients' minds by his influence over them. The other members, who know his character and disposition, avoid him. I regard him as an agitator. He hates anyone in authority who insists on his doing the right thing. He is given to exaggerating or misstating facts. He made the statement at the table that he was drunk when he enlisted in the Army, that he would not have enlisted if he hadn't been, and that he was sorry that he ever enlisted. Some two months ago he asked for a job as ward man. He was drinking all the time he was on as ward man, and another man had to be put on in his place at that time.

Q. Do you consider Hale reliable?—A. No, sir. He is now having meetings with a man by the name of Walich and writing letters right along, but what they are about I don't know.

STATEMENT OF ROLLIN T. BOBO.

Q. You are a patient at the tubercular cottage?—A. Yes, sir; I came here December 27, 1913.

Q. Were you there at the time Anthony H. Walich, James H. Lacy, and John H. Yount were patients at the cottage?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you receive everything you needed for diet during that time?—A. Yes, sir; plenty.

Q. Have you since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever know of any other patients there not getting all they wanted?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any complaint from any other patients besides the three men mentioned above?—A. No, sir; I never heard anyone else complain.

Q. Did you see any grounds for their complaint?—A. Not in the least that I could see, and I was there as a patient myself, and I was in worse physical condition than either one of these three men.

Q. What kind of a person was Anthony H. Walich?—A. I sometimes thought he was crazy; then, after watching him, I decided he was a chronic agitator with a continuous grouch on. He is a very malicious person, and was very bitter against anyone who did not agree with him. He kept up an agitation at the cottage all the time, and that was not good for the other men.

Q. Did you ever know of the governor denying any patient any reasonable request that was within his power to grant?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you at the T. B. cottage the day of the Kazmer-Lacy trial?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the governor refuse to allow you or any other person to attend the trial?—A. No, sir.

Q. How has everything been at the T. B. cottage since these men were let out?—A. The men have all been better contented in every way, and I have heard no agitation or complaint there since these men were let out.

Q. These three men, then, were constant agitators and complainers?—A. Yes, sir. The only time they were not was when they were asleep. I saw no ground whatever for their complaints.

Q. Did you ever see any grounds for any complaint of shortage of food or food being out?—A. No, sir; there was an endeavor to vary the diet, and when one article of diet was not served something else was served in its stead, and we always had plenty.

Q. What object did these three men have in keeping up their agitation and complaints?—A. Their object seemed to be to get the other men discontented and to join in their agitation. They wanted the national homes turned over to the War Department it seemed.

STATEMENT OF JAMES V. CHENOWITH.

Q. You are a patient at the tubercular cottage?—A. Yes, sir; I have been here since a year ago last August.

Q. Were you there at the time Anthony H. Walich, James H. Lacy, and John H. Yount were patients at the cottage?—A. Yes, sir; I was wardman there then.

Q. Did you receive everything you needed for diet during that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever know of any other patients there not getting all they wanted?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any complaints from any other patients besides the three men mentioned above?—A. Not that I heard.

Q. Did you ever see any grounds for their complaints?—A. I did not.

Q. What kind of a person was Anthony H. Walich?—A. A great nuisance to everybody he came in contact with at the cottage. These three men were persistent agitators, and this was a great annoyance to the other patients. They were abusive to the doctors, nurses, officers, and the board of managers, to their backs.

Q. Did you ever know of these men not getting all they needed and everything that the other patients had?—A. No, sir. I never knew anyone not to get all they needed to eat. I have never seen a meal since I have been here that there was not plenty for everybody.

Q. Did you ever know of the governor denying any patient any reasonable request that was within his power to grant?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you at the T. B. cottage the day of the Kazmer-Lacy trial?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the governor refuse to allow you or any other person to attend the trial?—A. No, sir.

Q. How has everything been at the T. B. cottage since these men were let out?—A. Been fine; couldn't have been better. The men have been contented, and I have heard no complaining since these three men were let out. All the men at the cottage thought the board of managers did the right thing and the only thing to let these men out.

Q. Were these men complainers?—A. Yes; they complained almost constantly about something—about the meals or treatment or something else.

Q. Was there any grounds for their complaints?—A. No, sir; none whatever; the doctors and the governor are always glad to have anything corrected that is not all right.

Q. What object did those three men have in keeping up their agitation and complaints?—A. They seemed to be general malcontents and had their minds made up that they wanted the national homes put under the War Department, and Walich got up a petition to that effect for the rest of us to sign, and he got very angry at the rest of us who would not sign it. We told Walich that we were satisfied with the present management and that we did not want to see the homes go under the War Department.

STATEMENT OF GEORGE DOAN.

I have been at Battle Mountain Sanitarium, quartered in the tubercular cottage for treatment, for eight months. I have been thoroughly satisfied; have had as good treatment as could be found anywhere. I have always been thoroughly satisfied with the meals; have always had all I wanted to eat. Our food has always been good, and at any time that I found anything wrong with anything I have spoken to the doctor and he has always corrected it.

I was at the tubercular cottage at the time Walich, Lacy, and Yount had the trouble in March, 1914. I found these three men to be undesirable citizens all the way through; they were constant and persistent agitators. I always considered these men very unreasonable and unfair in every way. I think men like they are should be segregated and not be allowed to be thrown with the rest of the men, who are well disposed.

I never at any time while these men were here for treatment saw the least disposition on the part of the governor to be unfair or unjust to these men, or anyone else.

I have never made any request of the governor that was not cheerfully granted, and have never known any other patient to make any reasonable request that was refused if in the governor's power to grant it.

I was at the cottage at the time of the trouble between Lacy and Kazmer, but did not see it.

Q. Did the governor refuse to allow anyone to go to the trial between Lacy and Kazmer?—A. No, sir. If any witnesses that they called for didn't go, it was because they didn't want to go and not because the governor refused to excuse them. We all have standing passes to go and come as we wish anyway, and the governor did not revoke any of our passes.

Q. What do you know about these three men's conduct among the men?—A. They were such agitators and disturbers that they were not fit companions to be among other men, and I think men like they are should be segregated.

Q. How have conditions been since these three men, Walich, Lacy, and Yount were dropped from the rolls?—A. Just splendid. Everything has run without any trouble ever since, and all the men have been satisfied and contented, and I have not heard any complaints since these men were let out. I have always found the governor approachable, and he has never refused me a hearing and has never refused any request I have made of him.

Q. Have you ever known the governor to be unkind or unjust?—A. I have never known of the governor being unkind or unjust to any of the men here.

Q. Have you always found the governor to be sympathetic toward all the patients?—A. I think the governor is the most democratic and just man I have ever known. I think he is remarkably so. I think he does remarkably well in his administration. I don't know of an institution anywhere where you could find as good treatment and as great kindness as is shown by him. You get as great consideration as you would in a private institution where you were paying for it from your own pocket.

STATEMENT OF ANDREW LOBNER.

Q. You are a patient in the tubercular ward of this sanitarium?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been a patient here?—A. About 11 months this time.

Q. Have there been any complaints of any kind from any patients there?—A. There were two men by the name of Hale and Benham who did some complaining.

Q. Were these complaints justified in your judgment?—A. No, sir; they were not.

Q. Were there any complaints from any other patients in this ward?—A. Yes; they complained about Hale using bad language and keeping up an agitation about the ward.

Q. What kind of men were Hale and Benham?—A. Hale was no man at all; he was always agitating and making complaints that were not justified. Benham was a disturber, especially when he was drinking. At such times he disturbed the other patients in the ward. He seemed to be influenced by Hale very much when he was sober and was very disagreeable.

Q. Were these two men disagreeable to the nurse and ward men?—A. Hale was, and Benham was in so far as he was influenced by whisky and by Hale.

Q. Did you ever hear them use any disrespectful language about anyone?—A. Yes, sir. I heard Hale use some very vile language about the doctors and the governor; language that is too vile to repeat. This happened often. I heard this one time in the presence of the female nurse. Hale is a very low type of a man and has no honor about him and never has a good word for anyone.

STATEMENT OF CLARENCE M'MILLAN.

Q. You are a patient at the tuberculosis cottage?—A. Yes; have been for 13 months.

Q. Were you there at the time Anthony H. Walich, James H. Lacy, and John H. Yount were patients at the cottage?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you receive everything you needed for diet during that time?—A. Yes. I have had all I wanted ever since I have been here.

Q. Have you since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever know of any other patients there not getting all they wanted?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any complaints from any other patients besides the three men mentioned above?—A. No; except two other men, who were of the same type of people. But since these men left there has been no complaints at all, and everybody has been satisfied.

Q. What kind of a person was Anthony H. Walsh?—A. I consider him a very dangerous man and nothing but an agitator. If he were to come back I would leave at once. He is the most contemptible person I ever knew. He was very vindictive and bitter against anyone who would not agree with him and side in with him in his agitations. He always made things very disagreeable for all of us, and he was therefore very much disliked by everyone.

Q. Was he considered truthful by the other patients at the cottage?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever know of these men not getting all they needed, and everything that the other patients had?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever know of the governor denying any patient any reasonable request that was within his power to grant?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you at the T. B. cottage the day of the Kazmer-Lacy trial?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the governor refuse to allow you or any other person to attend the trial?—A. No, sir. Everyone who wanted to go went.

Q. How has everything been at the T. B. cottage since these men were let out?—A. Everything has been very pleasant, and everybody has been satisfied. It has been like a different place entirely since those three disturbers were let out, and we are all contented. If these men had been allowed to stay here, the rest of us couldn't have stayed. All of us at the tubercular cottage thought that the board of managers did the right thing in dropping these men from the sanitarium.

STATEMENT OF CLEMENTINE SCHWARZER, A COOK.

Q. Please state what time you have been on duty as cook at the tubercular cottage?—A. From September, 1912, to December 15, 1913.

Q. Were there three patients there by the name of Walich, Lacy, and Yount?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were these men in the habit of making complaints?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever known any just complaints by either of these men not to be corrected?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear these men use profane or indecent language?—A. Yes, sir; very much.

Q. Were these men given the same consideration and diet as other patients at the cottage?—A. Yes, sir; in every particular.

Q. Was there any complaint from any other patients down at the cottage besides these three men?—A. I never heard of any.

Q. Were these men ever mistreated or abused by any employee to your knowledge while you were there?—A. No, sir.

Q. If there had been any abuse or mistreatment, you would have known of it, would you not?—A. Yes, sir. There was some trouble between Lacy and Kazmer after I left as cook.

Q. What kind of men did you consider these three?—A. They were chronic kickers and agitators, and were always making everything very unpleasant for everybody present by their constant agitation.

Q. Did they in any way make your work unpleasant while you were cooking at the cottage?—A. Yes, sir; by their complaining.

Q. Did their agitation, etc., have anything to do with your resigning as cook at the cottage?—A. Yes, sir; it was on account of these three men that I quit.

Q. How do conditions compare at the cottage now with what they were when these three men were there?—A. It is such a difference that it is not like the same place. Everything is very pleasant now, and all the patients seem to be very contented. There is no complaining or agitation at the cottage by anybody. I would not cook there again under any considerations if these three men were there.

STATEMENT OF MRS. MARJORY GILCHRIST, TRAINED NURSE.

Q. What time have you been on duty here as trained nurse?—A. Have been here three different times. The second time I was here from June, 1913, to February, 1914.

Q. Were there three patients at the tubercular cottage by the name of Walich, Lacy, and Yount when you were there on duty?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were these men in the habit of making complaints?—A. Yes, sir; they were very much given to complaining and agitating.

Q. Have you ever known any just complaint by either of these men not to be corrected?—A. I have not.

Q. Were these men given the same consideration and diet as other patients at the cottage?—A. They were.

Q. Were there any complaints from any other patients besides these?—A. No, sir; none to my knowledge.

Q. Were these men ever mistreated or abused by any employee to your knowledge?—A. Never to my knowledge. I never knew the ward men to be abusive to any patient.

Q. What kind of men did you consider these three men?—A. I considered them the worst type of agitators, constant complainers. Were very disagreeable and could not be pleased. They were in the habit, too, of using disrespectful language about the board of managers and the officers of the home.

Q. Did they make it unpleasant for the other patients by their agitation and complaints? —A. They did.

Q. How do conditions at the cottage compare with what they were when these men were there?—A. Things are so very much better that it is hard to make a comparison. All agitation and complaints seemed to leave when these three men left.

Q. Did Walich or any of these men ever make any disrespectful or untrue remarks about you?—A. Yes; one of the men, who was influenced by Walich, a Mr. Davis, made the statement that I said that I left the sanitarium myself because I was displeased with the management. This statement was absolutely untrue. I made no such statement. I was thoroughly satisfied at the sanitarium, and I went away not because I was dissatisfied but because I hoped to make more money outside. I had a widowed mother to support and wanted to make all the money I could to help take care of her. I saw no grounds for these men's complaint against the governor whatever.

STATEMENTS OF CITIZENS OF HOT SPRINGS, S. DAK.

THE HOT SPRINGS COMMERCIAL CLUB,
Hot Springs, S. Dak., October 16, 1914.

GOV. JAMES A. MATTISON,
Battle Mountain Sanitarium, Hot Springs, S. Dak.

MY DEAR SIR: I am inclosing herewith a slight testimonial which the officials of Hot Springs have asked me to hand to you relative to the controversy with Anthony H. Walich. No attempt has been made to ask anyone to sign this, except those holding official positions in Hot Springs, except the president and vice president of the Stockman's Bank, with whom so many of the inmates of the sanitarium do their banking business. We all realize the undesirability of having this man Walich in the city, as he is continually stirring up strife wherever he goes. We also hope that this slight testimonial on our part will be of advantage to you if there is any question as to whether or not anyone would require you to make any defense against the scurrilous attack that this man Walich is continually making upon you and others in the city.

Very truly, yours, ELMER R. JUCKETT,
President Commercial Club.

We, the undersigned, citizens of Hot Springs, S. Dak., and vicinity, do hereby certify that we know Anthony H. Walich, who was expelled from the National Sanitarium for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Hot Springs, S. Dak., during the early spring of this year. We have known him since that time, and he has been employed at various places in Hot Springs. From our knowledge of said Walich we know him to be a trouble maker, ungentlemanly, unreliable as to truthfulness and integrity, and a very undesirable person to have in the vicinity.

We further certify that we are well acquainted with Gov. James A. Mattison, of Battle Mountain Sanitarium, and we know him to be a true gentleman, reliable in all his statements, and we believe that he has made and is one of the best governors that the sanitarium has had since it was instituted in Hot Springs, S. Dak.

STATEMENT OF REV. DWIGHT D. TALLMAN.

To whom it may concern:

Owing to the unfortunate, and as I consider it, unjust criticism now being made of the Battle Mountain Sanitarium and its management, I feel in duty bound to make this statement.

As pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Hot Springs, which position I have occupied for the past five years, I have had occasion to go in and out of the above-named sanitarium, call upon the sick, visit with the men, and, with friends visiting the city, go through the institution on many different occasions, so that I have seen the institution under all conditions, and it is a pleasure to be able to say, being myself a Spanish-American veteran, that I believe my comrades are being well cared for.

The institution itself is equipped in the latest and most modern equipment, with every convenience for comfort, care, and entertainment.

On account of the criticism I have taken occasion to talk with a number of the men and not one has expressed anything but praise for the management, with the exception of one of the three men who are the source of the criticism, and my frank opinion of his statements is that he is one of those chronic kickers who, having everything furnished that a thankful Government can furnish free of charge, still kicks for the want of something else to do.

His main objection seemed to be that there were some civilians employed, and he being a veteran could not secure a position. To which I replied that undoubtedly should he qualify he would receive courteous treatment and preference.

Some of the sworn criticisms of this objector are absurd and false.

I have known Gov. James A. Mattison ever since he has been in charge of the sanitarium, and I have found him always a courteous Christian gentleman. He has spoken only in the kindliest way of the men under his care. He has spoken in no uncertain tone against the use of liquor, and has told me repeatedly that it is the cause of most of the trouble he has had in discipline.

I regret exceedingly that a man whom I must call comrade is so ungrateful for the care and the service he has received, and that he has failed to exhibit the spirit and the qualities of a real soldier.

I trust that no one will accept the criticism now being circulated of the sanitarium and its governor without first ascertaining the facts in the case, which will without question reveal the true situation.

DWIGHT D. TALLMAN,
Pastor Presbyterian Church,
Ex-Chaplain Jack Foster Camp, Spanish-American War Veterans.

JACK FOSTER CAMP, No. 3,
UNITED SPANISH WAR VETERANS,
DEPARTMENT OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
Hot Springs, S. Dak.

To whom it may concern:

In view of the fact that many letters have been written to individual Congressmen condemning Gov. James A. Mattison and Treasurer and Quartermaster William H. Stanley, of Battle Mountain Sanitarium, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, Jack Foster Camp, No. 3, United Spanish War Veterans, Department of South Dakota, has taken upon itself to write this letter to vindicate the characters of these two men.

Never in the history of this institution have the affairs of the two offices mentioned, as far as members of the sanitarium are concerned, been administered better; never have the members of this branch of the national homes been treated better; never have they had more to eat nor better clothing to wear; and the medical treatment by the governor and surgeon could be no better in the world.

Both Gov. Mattison and Treasurer and Quartermaster Stanley are perfect gentlemen, and both exercise the kindest and best of treatment to all members of this sanitarium.

Respectfully submitted.

J. E. TRANTLA, Adjutant.

VOTE OF CONFIDENCE IN COL. JAMES A. MATTISON, GOVERNOR AND SURGEON BATTLE MOUNTAIN SANITARIUM, NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS, BY MEMBERS OF BATTLE MOUNTAIN SANITARIUM.

To the honorable Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIRS: Being fully aware that reports of a sensational nature against the management of Battle Mountain Sanitarium are frequently being forwarded to individual Members of your respective bodies from a few members and ex-members of said institution, and recognizing, as we do, that an injustice has been perpetrated not only upon our governor and surgeon, Col. James A. Mattison, but upon your individual Members, who have given recognition to such reports and complaints, by having same published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, together with opinions expressed thereon, without said individual Members first investigating the status of said reports and complaints, thereby publicly and unfairly assailing the character, ability, and standing of the said governor and surgeon, Col. James A. Mattison, without just cause, that we, the undersigned disabled volunteer soldiers, representing the service of both the Civil War—1861 to 1865—and the War with Spain—1898 to 1902—all being members of said Battle Mountain Sanitarium, do hereto attach our signatures to this vote of confidence in the said governor and surgeon, Col. James A. Mattison, knowing, as we do, that an injustice to him would not be recognized by your honorable Members were you to know his character ability, and standing; and we humbly pray for recognition by your honorable Members.

Very respectfully.
(Signed by 205 members of Battle Mountain Sanitarium.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $3,825,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the total was not corrected a little while ago in the item for the Battle Mountain Sanitarium.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We shall get general authority to correct all totals.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

State or Territorial homes for disabled soldiers and sailors: For continuing aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888, including all classes of soldiers admissible to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $1,100,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any State or Territorial home that maintains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold: Provided further, That for any sum or sums collected in any manner from inmates of such State or Territorial homes to be used for the support of said homes a like amount shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for, but this proviso shall not apply to any State or Territorial home into which the wives or widows of soldiers are admitted and maintained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PAIGE] may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PAIGE] may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PAIGE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PAIGE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion yesterday on the valuation of railroads it was charged by some Members that the President influenced the Interstate Commerce Commission in the advance of rates for the railroads. I do not know whether this is true or not, but I want to say if it is true that the historian of the future will record the result of that act of the President as one of the most beneficial acts of his administration.

The country may survive for a time the present tariff policy, but the disaster to the country will be far greater, in my judgment, if the antagonism to railroads does not cease.

I have no doubt that many Members of this House were elected on a wave of antagonism to corporations, and particularly to the railroads, but I have no hesitation in predicting that when the people of the country have an opportunity to express themselves again on this question there are many men occupying places in this House that know them now that will know them no more. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, without objection. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands, and settlement of claims for swamp land and swamp-land indemnity: For protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands, and indemnity for swamp lands, including not exceeding $15,000 for clerical services in bringing up and making current the work of the General Land Office, $475,000: Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation may be allowed per diem in lieu of subsistence, pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, at a rate not exceeding $3 each and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares, except when agents are employed in the District of Alaska they may be allowed not exceeding $6 per day each in lieu of subsistence.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I know we have been accustomed to authorize the payment of $6 a day for subsistence in Alaska, but we have had so many reforms in Alaska in the last few years that it seems to me it is about time we cut down that allowance, so that it shall not be $6 a day any more. We pay a man a good salary, and then we pay him another good salary and call it subsistence.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All of the departments state that conditions in Alaska are so entirely different from those in continental United States that the limitation fixed for the United States does not cover the situation in Alaska. It has been stated before the committee that there are places in Alaska where it costs 75 cents for a ham sandwich and similar prices for other articles of food.

Mr. MANN. We hear those tales, you know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee are very gullible.

Mr. MANN. But we are told that they have so far developed Alaska agriculturally that they can now raise crops of all kinds.

Mr. GOOD. Even strawberries.

Mr. MANN. That they can produce immense crops of wheat and various other food products, including strawberries, currants, and various other small fruits. Now, I think that possibly when the allowance of $6 per day was provided it may have been reasonable, but Alaska is a little nearer to us now than it was then.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A little dearer to us.

Mr. MADDEN. Since they have got the railroad up there.

Mr. MANN. Unless the gentleman is willing to reduce this to $5 a day, I shall make a point of order against it, and it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman makes the motion to reduce it, I shall not oppose it. This was increased in the Senate, and we were overpowered in conference.

Mr. MADDEN. Since they have got the railroad up there——

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have no railroad. We have only authorized one.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought they had built one.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; that is in the future.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out, in line 4, page 90, the figures "$6" and to insert "$5."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 90, line 4, strike out "$6" and insert "$5."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the protection of lands involved in Oregon & California Railroad forfeiture suit: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, with the cooperation of the Secretary of Agriculture or otherwise, as in his judgment may be most advisable, to establish and maintain a patrol to prevent trespass and to guard against and check fires upon the lands involved in the case of the United States v. Oregon & California Railroad Co. and others, suit No. 3340, in the district court for the district of Oregon, now pending on appeal in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, $25,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to amend by striking out, in lines 14 and 15, page 90, the words "Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit" and inserting in lieu thereof "Supreme Court of the United States."

The suit has been transferred to the Supreme Court and is now pending there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 90, lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit" and insert "Supreme Court of the United States."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Oregon whether the case has now been taken into the United States Supreme Court?

Mr. HAWLEY. A week ago Monday the Supreme Court ordered the record to be transferred here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman state to the committee what was the decision of the circuit court of appeals—whether it sustained the Government or not?

Mr. HAWLEY. The circuit court of appeals failed to pass on the matter at all, and sent a statement here to the Supreme Court, asking certain questions. The Supreme Court, instead of remanding it back to the circuit court, ordered the whole record to be sent here and the case to be tried here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As long as the case has been transferred to the United States Supreme Court the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. MADDEN. What is this money used for?

Mr. HAWLEY. There are about 2,300,000 acres involved in the suit. The lands are all the odd-numbered sections within 30 miles of the main line of the Southern Pacific from Portland to San Francisco. They are scattered all through the forest reserves, the public lands of the United States, and privately owned lands. The Government and the Forest Service provide for protection on those lands. In the preceding pages in this bill we provide for protection on the public lands. The State of Oregon compels the people who own timber at their own expense to provide protection.

Mr. MADDEN. This money is to be used for the prevention of fires?

Mr. HAWLEY. For the prevention of fires. There were about 6,000 fires on the lands last year, and all of them were found by the rangers and extinguished without very great damage.

Mr. MADDEN. How many acres did the gentleman say there were?

Mr. HAWLEY. Two million three hundred thousand acres involved in this suit, for which this sum is to be appropriated to protect it from fires.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hearings in land entries: For hearings or other proceedings held by order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to determine the character of lands; whether alleged fraudulent entries are of that character or have been made in compliance with law; and of hearings in disbarment proceedings, $35,000: Provided, That where depositions are taken for use in such hearings the fees of the officer taking them shall be 20 cents per folio for taking and certifying same and 10 cents per folio for each copy furnished to a party on request.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Does this increase or decrease the amount now charged for taking depositions?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statement was made that at present there is considerable confusion as to what the charge is. Where there is a State law providing a rate, that rate controls, but it varies in particular States. In some cases where there is no fee law it comes under the Federal act, which provides only 10 cents for taking and reproducing, and that is stated to be insufficient, that it is impossible to get the depositions taken for that price.

Mr. MANN. This amounts to about 50 cents a page and 25 cents a page for a copy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, it depends on the size of the page. A legal-cap page I think would contain about two and a half folios.

Mr. MANN. It looks like rather a high charge. It would be a high charge if somebody was taking a great many depositions, especially 25 cents a page for the copy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Ten cents a folio is the legal rate for a copy in my State.

Mr. MANN. Anybody who goes into a lawsuit in New York knows how quick money disappears.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is for the great Western States, where they charge excessive prices for everything. If they kept within the prices of New York and Chicago, they would show a commendable restraint. The commissioner says that where the rate is 10 cents they can not get the depositions taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Opening Indian reservations (reimbursable): For expenses pertaining to the opening to entry and settlement of such Indian reservation lands as may be opened during the fiscal year 1916: Provided, That the expenses pertaining to the opening of each of said reservations and paid for out of this appropriation shall be reimbursed to the United States from the money received from the sale of the lands embraced in said reservations, respectively, $15,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 91, line 20, after the word "respectively," by inserting the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 91, line 20, after the word "respectively" insert the following: Provided, That not exceeding $3,000 of this appropriation may be expended for clerk hire and other expenses in the General Land Office at the seat of government appertaining to the opening of said Indian reservations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it provides for department service.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not intend to press the amendment if the gentleman has any objection to it. I want to call attention to the fact that the department made an estimate in this language, and I do not recall that when the subcommittee went over this the matter was discussed. It seems to me that inasmuch as these sums are reimburseable we ought to provide that all of the expenditures shall be reimbursable.

Now, there are some expenditures in connection with this item here in Washington, and if we had this provision the expenditure would be reimbursable. Up to within the last year these expenditures in Washington have been payable out of this item, but the comptroller very recently held that clerical services here could not be utilized for that purpose. The result is that we take from the Indian fund a reimbursable item of $3,000 and load it onto the appropriations for the Land Office. Inasmuch as these sums are generally reimbursable, it seems to me that the entire expenditure should be reimbursable.

Mr. HAWLEY. And it would save the Government $3,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will listen to the suggestion made by my friend from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], who puts it very patly, I think he would agree to the amendment. The amendment will save the Government $3,000, because it makes the Indians pay the $3,000 instead of having the Federal Government pay it. My idea is that if we had had the time to consider this in the subcommittee there would be no question about it. This is a new ruling that is loading on the Federal Treasury $3,000 that the Indians have heretofore been paying. If the gentleman has any objection to the amendment at all, I will withdraw it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MANN. We do not have a chance every day to save $3,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We do not save anything. This is just an opportunity to put more employees here in the city of Washington.

Mr. MANN. But the employees are here now. Without this they will be paid out of the appropriation for the Land Office, chargeable to the Federal Treasury, while with this it will come out of the Indian lands which are sold.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be so, but I hope the gentleman will not press the amendment. I have great reluctance in expressing any doubt about any amendment that the gentleman proposes, of course, but——

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I shall not insist upon it. I really do not understand why the chairman objects, because we are saving $3,000 to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do object.

Mr. MANN. He objects to saving any money.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And, besides, the poor Indians must have a friend once in a while.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming withdraws the amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For chemical and physical researches relating to the geology of the United States, including researches with a view of determining geological conditions favorable to the presence of deposits of potash salts, $40,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to make an inquiry. What have they been able to accomplish recently about the deposits of potash salts?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not inquired about their recent investigations. The last time I inquired they were still busy.

Mr. MANN. It is a good work, and I think they have made some progress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Last year we inquired quite fully, and they were making some investigations that they hoped would result in discoveries that would disclose an adequate supply of potash for manufactures in this country. This year we did not inquire in regard to it.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, United States Geological Survey, $1,355,520.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21318, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CONRY, indefinitely, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. MCGILLICUDDY, for 10 days, on account of public business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, in accordance with the order heretofore made, until to-morrow, Friday, February 12, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting with a letter from the Chief of Engineers reports on preliminary examination and survey of Kootenai River, Idaho, between Bonners Ferry and the international boundary line (H. Doc. No. 1588); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustration.

2. Letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate deficiency appropriation for site and commencement of post-office building at Southbridge, Mass. (H. Doc. No. 1589); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GUDGER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21383) to change the name of the old post-office building at Minneapolis, Minn., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1396), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. VOLLMER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill H. R. 20838, reported in lieu thereof a resolution (H. Res. 730) providing for the adjudication of certain claims by the Court of Claims, accompanied by a report (No. 1397), which said resolution and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. POU, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1864) for the relief of the contributors to the Ellen M. Stone ransom fund, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1398), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 21414) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 3, 1887; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HARDY: A bill (H. R. 21415) to promote the upbuilding of the American merchant marine; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CRISP: Resolution (H. Res. 729) ordering 50,000 copies of a certain House document to be printed; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. FIELDS: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 60) tendering the thanks of Congress to Dr. Frederick A. Cook for his Arctic explorations, resulting in his reaching the North Pole; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. VOLLMER: Resolution (H. Res. 730) providing for the adjudication of certain claims by the Court of Claims; to the Committee of the Whole House.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington, asking Congress to grant to the State of Washington authority to authorize the exploration of coal and oil resources and extract the same from its land, and to use so much of the surface as may be necessary therefor; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SCOTT: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, requesting Congress to make investigation relative to the foot-and-mouth disease; to the Committee on Agriculture.
